Of course, it is generally known that moisture is furnished growing crops in this section of the country by an artificial system. It is the best system in the world for the culture of the beet, because the peculiar requirements of the plant can be ministered to by the beet-grower through the agency of his irrigating ditches. In other words, water can be supplied when needed, and can be shut off when it is not needed; but it leaves the ground in a damp and moist and cold condition at the time when these children are called from their beds and put to work, and into which they must kneel for the purpose of performing this work of thinning, and crawl upon their hands and knees along the row from one end to another in accomplishing the purpose for which the work is secured.

I can conceive of no mill conditions, however obnoxious and repulsive, that are worse than the physical conditions attendant upon this exploitation of child labor. How they can escape the contracting of disease that will be permanent in character and injurious, if not ruinous, to their physical systems passes comprehension.

Denver teachers who have had charge of children used in the fields during the summer state that the work keeps the youths out of school during two months of the year set apart for their education. The teachers also say that children come in from the fields so worn out as to be unable to do satisfactory studying for several weeks. The effect is that they practically lose about four months of the school year, and are kept in grades twice as long as those who are able to attend regularly.

One teacher in the Denver schools received the following letter from a pupil who had been hired from a city family to do work in the fields during the summer:

"DEAR TEACHER: It is rainy to-day so I could write you a letter. We was working very, very hard the last two weeks, and we did work last Sunday, too, because beets grow so fast.

"We get up in the morning 3 o'clock every day and we work till 12 o'clock, then we have our dinner about half an hour, and then we go to work till 7.15, so we worked about 15 or 16 hours. Oh, it's too hard! I wish I didn't have to go any more to work beets and could spend my time in school. School is what I like, but I have to make my living to work so hard."

The next subhead of the article is:

Walks 80 miles on knees.

And then the article proceeds:

Four of us worked 60 acres of beets, and in this month I have to walk on my knees 80 miles and thin the beets at the same time, and to hoe that 80 miles; it takes me to do it about 34 days. I get $6 an acre to block and thin, so I make $90. But it's too hard to walk that 80 miles on your knees on hot summer days. I get sleep about six hours a day, and you know it isn't enough for that kind of job.

Soon as I lay in a bed I am sleeping in about three minutes, and I never wake up until our clock strikes to alarm. I am glad it's raining to-day so I could rest a little. I am going to make our dinner now, and after dinner I am going to sleep.

I tell you everything about hard work when I come to Denver.

That is the end of the letter. The article proceeds:

The report of the National Labor Committee says that the children between 7 and 15 employed yearly in the sugar-beet fields of Colorado, according to estimates made by the superintendent of schools, lose two or more school months as a result.

The next subhead is:

SCHOOL WORK SERIOUSLY AFFECTED.

That the loss of schooling seriously affects the progress of the beet workers in school is shown by the fact that the average per cent of retardation among the beet workers is 53 per cent as compared with an average of 20 per cent for the nonbeet workers, says the report.

The work the children do in "pulling" and "topping" the beets involves great physical strain when continued for 12 hours a day throughout the harvesting season.

The report states that compared with the total number of persons engaged in beet culture, the number of children under 14 employed is small, and that therefore the industry would not suffer if they were eliminated.

The compulsory education law is not enforced in the beet sections, and the report recommends the reorganization of the school system on a county unit instead of a district basis to secure enforcement of the law by removing it from local influence, and thus control the employment of children in the beet fields.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. At this point, if the Senator will permit me, I was interrupted in my former speech by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator now if I understood the report to say that the children pulled the beets and topped them?

Mr. THOMAS. That is what the report says.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, the Senator knows very well that no beet is ever pulled in the world. It is always plowed out of the ground and topped by men.

Mr. THOMAS. Why, Mr. President, the plow, of course, runs along, just as it does in a potato field, and then the beet is taken from the ground as potatoes are. Of course, the child is not obliged to take hold of the top of the beet and exert all of his physical strength in an effort to pull it from the ground; no.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been in thousands of beet fields, and I never saw a child top a beet in my life. I never saw a child in a beet field using a knife for the topping of a beet; and I know that all of them are plowed, and the beets are lying in the ground as they are plowed out of the earth.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator, of course, knows more about beet culture than I do, because he has been interested in and identified with it personally. I think the Senator is very largely interested in the beet-sugar factories of his State.

Mr. SMOOT. I have 173 shares of beet stock, worth $10 a share. That is $1,730 as the extent to which I am interested in the industry, and that came to me through a trade. That is all that I have ever been personally interested in the beet industry in the United States; so the inference that the Senator makes is not right.

Mr. THOMAS. I intended no reflection on the Senator in that statement. He has a perfect right, as everyone else has, to invest in matters of that kind. Indeed, I am very sorry I did not make an investment last April a year ago—

Mr. SMOOT. So am I.

Mr. THOMAS. When Great Western common stock was selling at $45 a share, and its last quotation is $295. The Senator, in obtaining 174 shares, evinced much more business wisdom and perspicacity than I possessed; and if the Senator thinks for a moment that my statement was designed either as reflecting upon his interruption or the substance of his interruption or upon his own business conduct, I want to assure him to the contrary. I was merely stating a fact which sustained the accuracy of his assertions regarding the manner of extracting beets from the ground. But certainly the Senator knows that in the process of thinning the beets in the early stages of the crop, work which no American will do if he can help it, these children—Indians, Mexicans, Bohemians, all classes and conditions of rude, ignorant labor—go into the fields, and on their knees work and progress at the same time, performing a task whose demands upon the physical system can not be overrated.

If this be true, and I think it is, when young children from 6 to 14 years of age are required to do that sort of work during any season in the progress of the beets, from the planting of the seed to its gathering, it is unjust, it is wrong, and it is inhuman, and any law that is designed to protect child labor which is not sufficiently broad to cover that condition and remedy it must necessarily fail of successful operation. It only reaches a part of the difficulty.

Now, let me read what the Senator said regarding his own State during this discussion:

Mr. SMOOT. Who is the author of the letter? Will the Senator say? Mr. THOMAS. This is taken from the Rocky Mountain News of March 12. It is attributed to "Inquiries made by the national child-labor committee of school-teachers as well as other authorities."

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know how it is in Colorado or the other States, but I do know that the laws in my State compelling children to go to school are absolutely enforced.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course I accept the Senator's statement, and yet I think he will admit that children are employed to work long hours in the beet fields of Utah, just as they are in the other beet-sugar States of the West.

Then there was an interruption from the Senator from South Carolina, and then I yielded to the Senator from Utah, who said:

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply say to the Senator, in answer to what he has stated, that the children in the State of Utah do work in the beet fields for the thinning of beets only. It is the easiest work that a child can do. It is the most healthy work that a child can do, because he is out of doors. They are all paid so much per row. I have never heard anybody, either a parent or anyone else in the State, complain of the work; but I do know that it is a most profitable work for a child, and has done a great deal of good toward keeping children off the street, and has brought in a fair income to the child; and in many cases it is the means of starting a savings account that grows each year.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator inform me how many hours the children work in his State?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think they work over eight or nine hours a day, Mr. President—none that I know of.

Mr. President, I accepted then, as I accept now, the statement of the Senator with regard to these conditions in his own State, and largely because of that fact I changed the limitation of hours in this proposed amendment.

I agree with the Senator there is no work so helpful, no work so healthful, to a child as outdoor work on a farm, provided it is accompanied by those limitations as to hours and character which it is the purpose of this bill to enforce.

Mr. President, I sometimes think we are going too far in our schemes of economic legislation. The work is good, the motive is good, the motive is beneficent, but to my mind the crowning danger to the child in his years preceding adolescence is the absence of that employment which inevitably leads to practices and habits that may result in his ultimate corruption and undoing. There is no saying more true than the old one that Satan finds mischief for idle hands to do. It is inevitable that the unemployed, through the exercise of those mental faculties which keep children busy as well as men, will find their vent through improper sources when free from occupation. I venture the statement that if the Senate of the United States were polled one-half its Members when they were children, before the age of 14, were engaged in occupations and many of them wage earners.

Mr. SMOOT. Ninety-five per cent of them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. I think it is largely due to that fact that they were able to so sustain themselves and to rise in the scale of life as to represent their respective constituencies on the floor of the Senate. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire of the Senator if the amendment as it is read on page 5 of the bill as amended as reported out by the Senate committee prevents a member of a farmer's own family within the ages named and with the products named from performing certain prohibited service?

Mr. THOMAS. It does not, neither does it prohibit a farmer from employing children, either his own or those of other people, for not to exceed 11 hours each day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to get it right, because I am in favor of the child-labor bill as it passed the House and so far as it has been reported by the Senate committee. Suppose the material produced in the field should be sent to a factory or cannery, would the farmer bring himself within the limitations?

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would the child—

Mr. THOMAS. But the product of the factory in which that raw material is produced by the work of children employed over 11 hours a day will be prohibited from transportation and use in interstate commerce. In other words, it operates precisely as the law operates in its present form except that it is extended to certain conditions of farm labor.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, it can be made, but could not be marketed. If manufactured, it can not find a market through interstate commerce.

Mr. THOMAS. As I read the bill as drawn, it not only could not be marketed but it could not be shipped.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it could not be shipped in interstate commerce, it would be deprived of the larger part of a profitable market.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; that is the intention of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me ask this question. The Senator was referring to the duties of a Senator in a State to his constituents.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not think I did that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose, without regard to color or race—

Mr. THOMAS. I did not say that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose, without regard to color or race, within the prohibited age in my own State or in the State of the Senator from Florida a child, so called, within the limited age, should work in a field or an orchard or a truck patch or garden and the product of that field or garden ultimately would reach a cannery or factory, be it cotton or strawberries or apples or citrus fruits or what not, could the product manufactured or canned thereafter be shipped into interstate commerce and reach a market through interstate transportation?

Mr. THOMAS. Not if produced in whole or in part by children within the prescribed age working over 11 hours.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am assuming it to be your amendment as printed. It may be that it has been changed since it has been offered.

Mr. THOMAS. I will answer the Senator yes, if the children are employed in the production of the material for a longer period than 11 hours a day.

Mr. SHERMAN. If under 14 years of age?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. And between 14 and 16?

Mr. THOMAS. I say nothing about that in the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The limitation does not apply?

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. In that event, as there were about 10,000,000 people engaged in agricultural occupations of various kinds in the United States in 1910 or 1900—

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are about 6,500,000 farmers in the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. That includes all the farmers in the corn-and-wheat belt; all of them engaged in the production of orchard or fruit products north or south; all of them engaged in the cotton fields or plantations of the country.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, in that event under the Senator's amendment does he think it would be the duty of a Senator living in any State to so regulate matters, for instance, in the corn belt, and I have more raising corn than any other single cereal of the field, that a boy under 14 years of age could not work more than 11 hours a day in corn husking or wheat harvest? We have a considerable product of wheat.

Mr. THOMAS. Is that the question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. I will answer that question Yankee fashion by asking another. If it is injurious for a factory man to employ a child under the age of 14 years longer than eight hours, why should the farmer claim exemption from that rule if it is also injurious to work the same class of labor 11 hours?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator answered in the form of a question, and it is certainly within his privilege. Because there is a very wide difference economically, socially, and physically between working in the open air and working in the closed walls of a factory with limited advantages for health, and for the general police regulations that belong to large numbers of people working together in a dense population and a very small area. The farmer or the farmer's family does not labor under that limitation, nor do the same economical or social reasons apply to those engaged in farm occupations that apply to manufactures or those in canneries.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, let me ask him if work in quarries is not in the open air?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is work in the open air, but an entirely different kind of work from work in an orchard or work in a cornfield.

Mr. THOMAS. It is not very different from grubbing stumps. I do not see any difference at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say to the Senator that I have not yet attained the three score and ten years named in the Scriptures—

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the Senator will live far beyond that period.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thank the Senator sincerely for his kindly wish, and I join with him and return to him the like felicitations and hopes. But since the age of 10 years myself and every associate that I know raised in the township in southern Illinois, from the time we had to climb up on a manger to buckle the collar on a horse, have been—far below the age of 14 years and far below the age of 16—working at something, and I do not know of a healthier crowd of boys that was ever produced any place in the country than those who have gone out. Some of them are in Australia; some of them are Scotch, and, following their nomadic instinct to emigrate, have gone around the world. As I said, some have gone to Australia. Some of them are in the trenches in Germany, because I was raised among a polyglot population of all races and all creeds. Those boys grew up until they are as healthy men as I know in the world.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I only yielded for a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I asked the Senator a question and he asked another and I was answering it.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's answer, I think, is very illuminating.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator's experience is the experience, as I stated, of a majority of the Members of the Senate. If the Senator lives, as I hope he will, far beyond the allotted three score years and ten and retain his seat here, my prediction is that he will be called upon to enact legislation that will prevent the boys of the next generation from doing the very thing that he says is the foundation of his physical and intellectual growth.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I make an inquiry? Does the Senator think the boys under 14 years of age on the farms, on the cotton plantations, without regard to their color or race, or the farmers in the North and Northwest, in the Mississippi Valley, and the wheat fields and corn fields—that boys under 14 years of age are so depressed and unhealthy and overworked—

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not.

Mr. SHERMAN. As to require a measure of this kind?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, why do you include it in your amendment?

Mr. THOMAS. I will proceed, if the Senator will permit me, to give the reason for it.

Mr. President, I contend that if it be true that 8 hours is an essential limitation for the preservation and protection of the youth of the land in labor indoors, 11 hours is a very liberal allowance for labor of the same kind out of doors, and if I could segregate the particular evil at which this amendment is aimed from a general classification, I would be glad to do so. My only purpose is to perfect the bill along the lines that it is designed to operate in order that it may include flagrant instances of child exploitation, which will continue, notwithstanding this bill, if this amendment is defeated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must recognize the fact that child labor in a mill is generally for 12 months in the year while child labor in the fields is not to exceed in some cases 30 days, in other cases 60 days, and I doubt very much whether in any case it is more than 90 days in a year.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, does the Senator approve of working children of 6 years of age, up to 8 and 10, 17 hours a day for 30 days in the year, but would object to it were it for 12 months?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have never heard of a 6-year-old child working in the fields until I heard the Senator read this report. I never saw it in my life. I do not believe in it, and no other living soul could believe in it who has a heart in him worthy of being called a heart. I do not believe in children working 17 hours a day, but I do believe that where a father has a boy 12 or 13 or 14 years old and, in the stress of gathering a crop, he himself works 13 hours or 12 hours, it would not hurt the boy a particle to work a day or two under those circumstances.

Mr. THOMAS. I agree with the Senator fully.

Mr. SMOOT. That is my position exactly; but I think a State that would allow children 6 years old, in the field or anywhere else, to work 17 hours or 12 hours or 10 hours ought to be—I will not say what I think, but I will say that they are very derelict toward their citizens and their laws ought to be amended. That is the least I can say.

Mr. THOMAS. I think if a State permits that it is subject to any censure which the Senator sees fit to express, and I think that if the National Government, because of such permission, proposes to take the whole subject over and still permits it, it is subject to the same censure.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; but I want to get through pretty soon. I will yield for a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. What would be the effect on the farmers of the corn and wheat belt or of the cotton country if during cotton picking or harvest or corn husking a farmer's own family, his boys, could not work beyond 11 hours if they were under 14 years of age? What would happen in harvest time?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when we are enacting a great piece of legislation like this what difference does it make what the effect may be. We are not concerned with the effect. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] a day or two ago said if this bill did not hurt somebody, there would be no opposition to it. Irrespective of the effect, if it is our duty to protect child labor the way we propose to do it, the legislation which we enact should be comprehensive enough to remedy the evil. If the effect is bad, it is unfortunate; but we must do this because it is essential to the interests and welfare of the race.

Mr. President, I do not want to be misunderstood. I sympathize with the purpose of this act. I know that there have been gross exploitations of child labor, and I am sorry to say that one of them seems to prevail in my State.

Now, because I am trying to reach that, influences will be affected whose products ought not to be affected. That is the misfortune of those interests and not my fault. Of course I know that the very moment it is suggested that this measure shall be extended so as to take in the comprehensive industries very naturally it meets with strenuous opposition.

I know this amendment of mine has little prospect of being adopted here, but I want to focus the attention of the country upon the fact that the legislation will need amendment if it is going to be effective, and it must be extended so as to take in some lines of occupation which are not now included within it.

I do not think there is a better training in the world for a boy than on the farm. I do not believe that if he worked 15 hours a day it would injure him very much. It has been the making of a great many boys.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. But, Mr. President, is it not possible to abuse that system of occupation just as much as others, and if nationwide legislation is essential, should it not be nationwide? I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to ask the Senator if, in the history of this country or any other, he has knowledge of a system of agriculture which required the child to work on the farm in such a way or to such an extent as to interfere with the proper mental and physical development of the child? I have always regarded the farm as the breeding place of the highest order of men and women.

Mr. THOMAS. No; except in instances like those to which this amendment is directed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator has doubtless observed and will admit the fact that the child on the farm, as a general rule, works with his parents, under the direction and kindly care of his mother and father. He is not subjected to the inconsiderate, selfish domination of the boss in a factory, whose sole aim and effort, without regard to the mental and moral well-being of the child, is to make money out of the child's labor. The hot, dust-laden, mephitic air of the mill everyone knows is unhealthy, and especially to a child of tender years. It retards his physical growth, saps his strength, undermines his health, and stunts his moral and mental being—just the opposite effect from the pure, stimulating air, sunshine, and moderate employment which the boy on the farm enjoys. Really I do not know of anything that contributes more to the physical, mental, and moral development of the child than life upon the farm. The farm is the nursery of American greatness and from it will come the men and women who will save our civilization.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no quarrel with the Senator on that proposition at all. I think he is right.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then why does the Senator want to interfere with a system that is so benign in its influences and that time has demonstrated is only for the benefit of the human race? Why not let well enough alone?

Mr. THOMAS. Some of the greatest men the country has ever produced have begun their lives working in the mills and working in the mines. The first head of one of the main labor organizations of America, and the organizer of it, began his work as a boy in the mines. So far as that is concerned the argument is not effective. Now the reason, and the only reason, why this bill was not made sufficiently comprehensive to take in the class of labor I mentioned is that it would present new features and arouse angry opposition. The Senator is a young man comparatively. He will live to see, if he stays in this body long enough, a measure far more drastic than the one I have offered.

Now, Mr. President, I have said far more than I intended. I think that this is a meritorious amendment, which ought to be adopted; and I hope it will be.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator begins upon some other part of his address, I should like to inquire what will the boy under 14 years of age do the remainder of the 24 hours?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know that the Senator from Illinois heard my earlier remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not hear that part of them.

Mr. THOMAS. I made the statement that the idleness of the youth during his period of immaturity was the worst thing that could happen to him. The Senator and I will have no disagreement with regard to the useful nature of this sort of employment nor as to the baneful effects upon the youth of the country of idleness and unemployment. That, however, as I said, must be beside this question if the evil to be guarded against is greater than that which may be accomplished by the application of the remedy.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gallinger	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Husting	Page	Smoot
Brandeggee	James	Penrose	Taggart
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Phelan	Thomas
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Thompson
Clapp	Kenyon	Ransdell	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Reed	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Robinson	Vardaman
Culberson	Lewis	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Cummins	Lodge	Shafroth	Walsh
Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Weeks
Dillingham	Myers	Sherman	Williams
Fall	Nelson	Shields	Works
Fletcher	Norris	Simmons

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] desired me to announce that he has been called from the Chamber on official business.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I rise again to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], who is absent on official business. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

I also desire to state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is absent owing to illness. I make these announcements for the day.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is necessarily absent for the day on account of his physical condition. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

REPLY TO MR. HUGHES'S ACCEPTANCE ADDRESS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to speak to the challenge of patriotism sent forth in the address to the American people by Judge Charles Evans Hughes in his acceptance at the city of New York of notification of his nomination as President of the United States by the Republican national convention held at Chicago. I address myself to the shams and shames of the pretense of patriotism. As I am not speaking the sentiments expressed to me by anyone, I wish it known that I alone am responsible for my utterances of this day.

Here this day I put the responsibility for the death of every American soldier killed on the border of Mexico in the year 1916 upon the heads of the generals of the Republican Party.

I charge that not until the captains of the Republican Party shot at the President of the United States did the Mexican outlaws shoot at the soldiers of the American President.

MEXICO AS THE ISSUE.

It is proclaimed by the message of the candidate and in the declarations of his directors that Mexico shall be the issue in the present political campaign. The chairman of the Republican national committee announces with formality on July 28 that Mexico is the issue. Candidate Hughes on July 31 confirms the issue by reasserting it in his official position. Let the country know that the statement is that Mexico is the issue. Not that there is a principle to be enforced in behalf of Mexico; not that there is justice to be asserted in behalf of Mexico; not that there is an American right to be vindicated in behalf of the United States as to Mexico. No! The statement is, Mexico is to be the political issue. Prejudices to be awakened in America, hatreds awakened against the Democracy, insurrection to be invoked and denunciations to be called down upon the head of the Democracy and its leader, merely that an issue is to be brought forth. Every man in the Republican Party is to be allowed his own expression of anything that in the locality wherein he speaks may serve to accomplish the issue. It is sufficient if it is Mexico.

The cry has gone forth—let Mexico, in some phase, without regard to facts or justice, and in defiance of truth and honor, be the issue. Summon the citizenship of the United States to war against its constituted authority—that is the issue. Revolt against the Government at Washington as to Mexico—that is the issue. Denounce the President as to Mexico—for that is the issue. Make contemptible your own country before the world whenever you can—for that is the issue. Humiliate your own fellow man by holding his country and his President up before the world as unworthy the support of his countrymen or the respect of foreigners. Cry "Mexico" and the "outrage" upon America from somewhere, somehow, in some way, through the administration of affairs by the United States in Mexico. Summon from every- where anyone who by any charge, any slander, can induce an American to make issue against his own country as to her policy in relation to foreign countries. Summon the public enemies from every darkened place, from every unhallowed ground. Bring them forth—those with hopes of reward; those with itch for notoriety; those with dreams of place and position, and those who would vent their revenge upon their own country because they could not use it to enrich a guilty purse and debase the principles of freedom to reward robbery.

At last the army is summoned: "Hang the banners on the outer walls, the cry is—still they come." The mercenary—the concessionaire who pollutes the government in power to wrest the rights from the defenseless. The European bondholder, who casts his water-engorged securities in the face of America, demanding of the sovereign United States that she shall send her sons to die that their blood may give value to that whose creation was born of robbery and whose existence is maintained by fraud. The mining buccaneers of the mountains, the land pirates of the plains, pillagers of the peons, oppressors of liberty, murderers of justice, come all of you; at last there is found for you a house in which ye are worshipped as gods and at whose altars the innocents are to be sacrificed for you to make an election holiday. It is your father's house—the Republican Party. There you shall burn incense to the worship of despots and despoilers, the new high priests of modern Republicanism, headed now by the newly anointed chief of this political hierarchy—the nominee of a Republican convention for President of the United States—Charles Evans Hughes.

How long has been the quest for some issue! How wailing has been the cry from the wilderness for some deliverance! Never did Diogenes grope more helplessly among the grottoes of Greece with a lantern looking for an honest man than did these pursuers explore the purlieus of politics with false lights to find a dishonest issue. Mr. President, let us examine the sincerity of the pretension of "relief for Mexico" and "rights to Americans," which in its newborn announcement is to be the declaration upon which the multitudes are to be summoned. The cry is "Hughes! Up with Hughes! Down with Wilson! Up with the Republicanism that is new! Down with the Democracy that is true!"

PRESENT STATUS OF MEXICO.

Mr. President, what is the history of the political status of Mexico and the United States? Let America recall that there was Mexico, with 23 revolutions in one form or another since the American Civil War—the struggle for liberty, the fight for justice, the effort to be free from the yoke of masters and to rise from the iron heel of oppressors. All encouraged by Lincoln, when the fight was led by Juarez—Lincoln, in his announcement to the officials of that distracted country, gave them the assurance that the interests that were attempting then—50 years ago—to cast Mexico back to the ages of darkness and who, under the cry of "intervention," "peace," "rights of America," were bent on using America to slay republics and pledge the power of the United States to give assured value to possessions which had been wrung from the defenseless by the fraud of men and the crime of robbery. Since then every American President has patterned after Lincoln, offering aid to Mexico wherever possible, but refusing to oppress its people with power, however profitable to speculating finance or party politics.

These conditions of revolt and revolution, devastation and death, continued in this unhappy land through the years, while America stood by, hoping Mexico would build itself out of its misfortune and rise upon the wreck of empire to the grandeur of a republic. America wished for Mexico to survive as giving liberty to its humblest, doing justice to the highest, and in all establishing a government of its people by their free will, modeled after the mother Republic of the Western Hemisphere—the guardian United States of America.

In the administration of President Taft so severe had conditions become in Mexico that from 1910 to 1912, inclusive, 47 Americans were killed. The administration of Woodrow Wilson came into power in March, 1913, to find these deplorable conditions prevailing in Mexico, accentuated by the murder of Madero, concerning which the American Government had received the audacious announcement from Huerta, "I have deposed Madero and assumed authority." Quickly in the shadow of this dark communication flashed the light from the weapons that had sent the life from Madero and laid his family in death through the assassin's stroke. What could America do? With this information and with knowledge communicated to her officials could she palliate the murder by giving approval to the perpetrators by honoring the chief actor with the crown of authority? Only in the history of Rome do we find the parallel, when the Roman triumvirate, red with the blood of the ruler Pertinax, rushed out in the ramparts of Rome to auction the world off to the highest bidder.

"RECOGNITION" OF HUERTA.

Mr. President, when had America steeped her hands in the blood of murdered rulers as the ceremony of recognition of the perpetrators? Few indeed have been the instances she has been called upon to consider as parallels or precedents. Yet the leaders of the Republican Party say it was America's duty to have recognized Huerta. That Wilson had committed an offense to the relations due Mexico when he failed to acknowledge Huerta. In what provision of the platform made at the convention in Chicago has the Republican Party made that assertion of a right and a duty upon the part of the Republic of America to have acknowledged Huerta as equal in authority and honor to the President of the United States? Where is the declaration of Republican authority that was dared to be proclaimed before a Christian civilization or God-fearing people of America? It does not exist. There were none so courageous in their audacity as to write the assertions in the platform as a duty of Wilson or as the right of Mexico. Yet Judge Hughes says we had no concern with the morals of Huerta. He would exclaim with the chief of the murdering Borgias:

Stand not on morals, but on power—'tis bloody, but hath rewards.

Let me ask: If the charge made 50 years past, that John Wilkes Booth killed Abraham Lincoln at the demand of those who represented Jefferson Davis, was true, and had Jefferson Davis assumed command at Washington, which of these will now announce that they would have recognized Jefferson Davis? If you believed the charges which were then made, would you have recognized Jefferson Davis as de facto President of the United States?

Let it be remembered that Vice President Andrew Johnson, who came to the position of authority in the stead of murdered Lincoln, was already indicted in the hearts of many of the leaders of America in the Republican Party, and most of them, through their representatives in the United States Senate, bided their time to vote his impeachment for no greater charge than that he stood in the shadow of the approval of the policies which led to the murder of Lincoln.

In 1903, in Serbia, King Alexander and his Queen met the fate at the hands of murderers as befell Madero and his wife in Mexico. It was charged that Peter Garegovich was a party to the murder, and when an attempt was made to make him King—though by assembly of a legislative body—the charge was openly asserted by those in Serbia that those who were making him ruler had incited the murder of King Alexander, and that therefore no such recognition to Peter should be accorded by the United States as would serve in this Republic as an approval by her civilization of such methods to obtain power. The United States under Secretary of State John Hay took cognizance of the offense. More than a year elapsed before this Government, under Roosevelt, gave recognition to Peter. During the delay the United States was satisfying its conscience that there was not the crime existing as against Peter as charged against those who were sponsoring his cause. This country gave to the world in that instance ample evidence of its intent to have disclaimed Peter had the proof disclosed any such condition as was evidenced to America in the affair of the assassination of Madero through the machinations of Huerta.

There was no other course for President Wilson to take than that which he did in declining to recognize Huerta under the circumstances as they then prevailed and were accepted. President Taft, who was in office when Huerta came to power, and who through the agencies of his administration existing for four years could have had the most complete and assured information, did not recognize Huerta or have his administration give to him official acknowledgment. That there must have been in the mind of President Taft facts that caused him to feel that he could not take such awful responsibility is evident from his own statement "that he was going out, and he did not wish to put responsibility upon the incoming administration by his act."

Mr. President, if the recognition of Huerta would have been an act, sustained by all its surrounding circumstances, that any American President could have ordered, there would have been no reason to pass this recognition to a successor and pass out in silence as did President Taft. The changes in the Governments of China, Japan, and the last in Portugal, within the same period of time, were not deferred but promptly accepted, as is the custom of countries living in comity and dealing in honor. And yet, shall it be said that Wilson should have accepted the government of Huerta, then, under these circumstances? And why now shall it be said that because in the imagination or in the calculation of certain interests that things under Huerta might have been better than they have developed under others; that for that speculation it were nobler to have chosen Huerta?

VILLA AS AID TO UNITED STATES.

Mr. President, then we have it that the very officers of the administration who were in Mexico, the agents of commerce, the consuls of the United States, who were best informed and best constituted to be informed, gave to President Wilson and his Secretary of State their judgment that Villa at the time represented the abilities best calculated to bring forth order and establish peace in Mexico. Villa's platform and performances sounded as of the virtue of American doctrines—liberty for the humble, justice for the poor, the lands as homes for the people and not as the private possessions of landed princes.

Here let it be remembered that so powerful was that force of Villa that against the army of Porfirio Diaz and the best forces he could command in Mexico at the time of his greatest power Villa was able for 22 years to hold his army in opposition and to oppose successfully the conquering of him or his cause by Diaz. Was it not natural that President Wilson could conceive from these evidences that this commander had power as represented? The effort was honestly made by the President and every aid for peace that could be given without the violation of our duty was afforded. The object of the United States was to keep the hands of power off of Mexico; to let it work out its own destiny through the agencies of its own creation, as was the process of the government of republics. Villa was not acquiesced in by all of Mexico. He was opposed in his own land. Frustrated by those whose assumption of control he sought to dispute, and which he claimed had for its object the robbing of the poor, for whom he spoke. The ruling classes of Mexico and certain business interests all combined against him—under what righteous claim I know not. But this I do know, that had the leaders of the Republican Party in Congress given to the Democratic President support in this foreign policy and announced that as the President had recognized Villa as a test and trial to bring forth through him order, and had they demanded united obedience in America to this effort of the President as one from the highest authority and from the only authority that was vested with privilege of deciding the question, there would have been a different result from what ensued. Mexico would have seen that all the United States was behind the President.

The forces opposing Villa would have seen that all the United States supported the American President. Obstructionists in Mexico and opponents of the United States and the enemies of Villa would have all seen that there was union in America in the support of an American President when he was dealing with a foreign country and then would have subsided the opposition. There would have followed the acquiescence in the trial of the strength of Villa to enforce peace, and from it we would have been able to test the result and to have obtained relief from the conditions which were cursing Mexico and bewildering America. But no. Upon every occasion, in public place and in the Senate, denunciation of the President for his act was hurled forth. Senators would rise to condemn the President, hold his judgment up to contempt, his course to derision, while they frustrated and obstructed the execution of his every undertaking. This it was that gave license to those in Mexico who were opponents of the cooperation of America, and those in Europe who were the enemies of our welfare, and those in Mexico who for their own reasons, selfish or sincere, were opposing Villa—all joined in their opposition to America, being encouraged to their action by the leaders of the Republican Party in America, who certified by their conduct that anything that would oppose a Democratic President was by them approved.

That any depredation and outrage visited upon their own countrymen would be indorsed as penalty for obedience or respect to anything the Democratic President had done as to Mexico. These Republican masters divided their own countrymen in America, incited opposition in Mexico, infused treason against the head of their Republic by the selfish interests who served their own objects by destroying the success of the United States in restoring peace or order in Mexico.

RECOGNITION OF CARRANZA.

Then, Mr. President, when as a result of the contribution of the efforts of a shouting and obstructing minority in the United States Senate and in the United States of America—encouraged by such agencies as spoke for interests that were served best when America was served worst—the efforts to bring forth order through the agency of Villa failed. What was the President to do? Should he sound the note of hopelessness? Was he to send forth the cry of despair? Was he to proclaim failure? No. It was then that he was informed that the growth of power enforced under control of Carranza gave promise that through him peace and order, which had failed through others, might be established. The President of the United States still struggled to avoid the clash of arms. He was anxious to present to the world America's continuing example of an encouragement to a Republic, and in anxiety sought the counsel of those whose interests were in union with the hopes of Mexico, whose welfare was the welfare of Mexico. They were those who by theory of government and creed of church were brothers to Mexico—children of the same mother. From these he sought his direction, and from their patriotic ardor, born from their own achievements through the long years of struggle against insurrection, oppression, and revolution before they reached their destiny of a Republic—Argentina, Brazil, and Chile—these, not the monarchs of Europe, nor the despots of imperial finance, were the advisers to the American President. Upon their advice, their unselfish counsel, through the solicitude of their affections, through the hope that they bore for Mexico, feeling that only through the same slow steps of their progress could Mexico prevail, Carranza was accepted.

The destiny of Mexico was theirs—her fate their fate. By that which she should rise they would remain a risen and established thing in the world of government. By that which Mexico should fall, they would be stricken, and, tottering, wither and die. To what source could the President have gone more assuring in its aid, more sincere in its friendship, than these? Therefore, under these, through these, he turned to cooperate with them and recognized Carranza. Then was given to Carranza the test and opportunity to establish that peace and order for Mexico necessary to the welfare of all government established upon law. Let it be remembered that at this time Carranza had been recognized by the principal Governments of Europe—Britain, France, Spain, Germany, and Russia—and all of South America. Who shall say that under such conditions the trial of Carranza was not wise and the only thing expedient and justified in that hour?

Now, therefore, it was Carranza we asked aid for. It was Carranza we acknowledged as chief, for the object of quelling disorder. It may be that this was not the wisest nor the surest course, as all government speculates upon the chance of things. We know, Mr. President, how many things enter into the disposition of the affairs of men which can not be calculated upon and unsettle or contribute to the end. What events interceded between the time of the acknowledgment of Carranza up to the division between his forces and our own Government that were neither his making nor our own, but which served to undo the results sought by each, we can not say. We can only recognize that our duty was to reckon with the most serious that could be anticipated, assured with the philosopher that—

Since the affairs of men still rest uncertain,
Let us reason with the worst that may befall.

The United States prepared to treat with that which had befallen, the worst that could befall—lawlessness where should be order, oppression where there should have been freedom, robbery and injustice where there should have been righteousness and equity. But, again, the Democratic President was destined to inherit at the hands of the minority obstruction in his undertaking and defeat wherever possible to his designs. In every other country in the world there could be unity given to those who were the ruling powers in all conflicts with foreign nations and foreign people. Even in Japan we have lately seen how its Parliament passed a resolution, as a policy of its Government, "that in matters of foreign complication the policy once asserted by those in power should be the will of the whole pending its execution." It is in America, the civilized and refined Government of perfected accomplishment and of established patriotism, that no such poor privilege could be accorded to the President of the United States—merely because he was a Democrat. It was assumed by Republican captains that any humiliation put upon him, any dishonor to his undertakings, any defeat to his adventures, however embarrassing to the country, was justified because this President was a Democrat. Sir, to them the fact that the will of the people had placed him in power, had commanded the American citizens to give him cooperation, that he might give to his Government the best that the intelligence of his mind and his inheritance from God afforded, was of no consequence. To them this was of no effect nor influence. Their policy was to indict and defeat, discredit and dishonor the administration in power before Americans and before the world. All this but to achieve a party advantage in being able to point out to their fellow citizens a "failure." Sir, that this failure would be the result of treasonable design and disloyal opposition on the part of those who profited by the failure, as they converted it into capital upon which to invest their political future, was of little appeal to their sense of honor. These marplots could not even be shamed by the consciousness of the infamy of this injustice to their country or the spectacle of dishonor to their own countrymen.

So, Mr. President, we find ourselves in January, 1916. Notwithstanding these multiplied oppositions, it seemed at last as if Mexico was working out in harmony. That peace was soon to brood over her distracted sections and order was to heal her rived and sundered sides. This could not be permitted. It would not serve the purposes of those who survive in confusion and prosper in lawlessness. But their designs had not yet been disclosed. To the great mass of the Republican Party it was believed the long-looked-for issue had failed.

TARIFF HAD BEEN DECIDED AS ISSUE.

The Literary Digest of December, 1915, produced the facts, showing that it had inquired of all the editors of the leading Republican press and the leading men of the Republican Party as to what the issue must be or should be for 1916. Now, remember, at this time all of these conditions before detailed as to Mexico had prevailed—discord, dissension, insurrection, revolution, outrage, and murder—the offsprings of despotism and tyranny. All were known to the leaders of the Republican Party. All were understood as a fixed fact in the history of Mexico. But these leaders well knew that these things could not be charged to any party. That neither the government of President Taft nor that of President Wilson could be rightfully charged with these consequences. The American people were not to be fooled, its citizenship not to be deluded, nor its patriotism beguiled into absurd judgment to gratify political resentments or to achieve political advantage for any whose whole quest is office, without regard to right or justice. So it never dawned as any light of hope that Mexico, with all its confusion, could be an issue. In Mexico appeared the prospect of peace—at least there was the promise before the people that union and united effort in America behind the Democratic President under the new régime would settle upon Mexico peace and quiet and that she would work her own problems out as had America been compelled to do in the trying years from 1776 to 1812.

But, sir, there must be issue. So we find that in the last of the year 1915 and the beginning of the year 1916, with all of these conditions of Mexico writ in history as established facts; the sense and intelligence of the great middle-class Republicans—those of equity and justice—laid aside the preposterous idea that the conditions in Mexico could be charged to the United States, far less to any one political party. The party masters cried out their appeal then to those who looked for privileges in America and for the increase of tariff bounties and tax filchings. The tariff was hailed as the issue. The Globe-Democrat, one of the great Republican papers of the Southwest, spokesman of the Republican Party for the whole Southwest, said that the "supreme issue of the campaign will be the tariff." Remember, if there had been any part of our country where the Mexican question would have appealed as an issue to the intelligence of those on the borderland, such as in the great city of St. Louis, Mo., it would have been the first to scent it. Thus it is that this great paper of the Republicans stands as expression of the viewpoint of those who were on the very trench of Mexico, scorched by the flames, rocked by its volcano. But we find from the publications that 451 Republican editors out of 685 in response hail the tariff as the dominant feature of the Republican platform for 1916. And in the city of New York, the State of Judge Hughes, 45 Republican editors out of 50 assert that "common sense means that the issue of 1916 will be protective tariff." This was the issue then. More privileges to the barons of monopoly, higher taxes to those who could exact them from the powerless and appropriate them from the defenseless. There was no Mexico. But, ah! day by day the country grew prosperous without this high protective tariff that was to be proclaimed as a nation's necessity. There was no distress. Mills hummed, industry multiplied, labor was content, riches increased—harvests became abundant, wealth distributed, and in every part of America the greatest prosperity prevailed that had blessed our land since the republican form of government had settled upon it.

The prophesied panics, the disasters, the hoped-for distresses, the prayed-for destructions had not realized. God in heaven and the Democracy on earth in America settled the destinies of the people of the United States. No longer the kings of vicious finance or the slayers of honest industry were in power. America was America, as dreamed of by the fathers who founded it. The declaration upon which our land was established was fulfilled. This was a Republic of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The hope of an issue builded upon distress and arraigning class against class, the poor against the rich, and crying out to the poor that it was Democracy that made them poor, all went by, and the last spark flashed for the moment in the hope and died—in the burning.

'Twas desolate to behold the retreat
From false light to sure darkness.

Mr. President, something must be done. An issue must come forth. It must be born of something from somewhere, somehow. That it should be the offspring of truth or falsehood is immaterial. That it should be created from fact or fancy is indifferent. That it should be fair or foul would not matter. All is beside the necessity. "An issue! An issue!" is the cry. Office is the desire, power the object. Masters wring their hands in anguish in their disappointment that they no longer coil the lash over the souls of toil and dictate the destinies of freemen. This former reign must be restored. The kings must be put on the throne. There must be an issue by which they must be returned.

NOW MEXICO.

Sir, at this time there broke out in Mexico an explosion of lawlessness among the bandit followers of Villa, aroused now to resentment by having been supplanted by Carranza. These desperadoes assaulted American citizens who were then in Mexico conducting mining operations at Ysabel. Unhappily these Americans were killed from that race hatred through which Chinese miners were killed in Wyoming by Americans; from which Italians were killed in Louisiana; and negroes killed in the Republican States of Ohio and Illinois through no fault of any government but through race hatreds. Ah! This massacre at Ysabel gave the clue. Hear these Republican masters muttering, "Could not something be made of it? Could not the blood of our countrymen be coined into political advantage?" Hear them ask, "Could we not from the fallen forms of the murdered dead bring forth the spirits of a resurrected political hope?"

Mr. President, the unhorsed monarch exclaimed, "My kingdom for a horse"; but these issue inventors cry out, "My country and my honor for an issue." They reasoned that America, quick to resent an injury to her people, quick to avenge a wrong to her countrymen, need only be appealed to in the name of the outrages in Mexico while the Democratic administration is in power in America. This might give the issue. The councils were called, and when the State of New York was on the eve of its State convention. The first of the great agencies of Republican politics to declare its policy met. Then, as chairman, Senator Root announced Mexico as the issue, building upon the unfortunate conflict between the American miners in Mexico and the Mexican murderers at the mines. Senator Root, once Secretary of State, remembered as having traveled through the South and Central American countries, pledging the administration of Theodore Roosevelt to every just measure for their people, was at once taken as authority—not only as Senator and former Secretary of State but as the probable President. He was an announced candidate. As such joint power he was accepted as speaking the popular will of America as condemning whatever the Democratic administration was doing in Mexico.

Following this assault and political sortie, Senator LODGE—long the comrade in arms of Senator Root—on March 16, at Lynn, Mass., opened his campaign for the Senate, repeated the charges of Senator Root, and, as the ranking member of the minority of the Foreign Relations Committee, amplified them. Senator Lodge charged President Wilson with refusing to recognize Huerta because he had a "personal dislike," and sneeringly insinuated that while it was the President's privilege to ignore or decline to acknowledge, that it was not the office of diplomacy or statesmanship to do so for "personal dislike." No one knew better than Senator Lodge that the reason of President Wilson was founded upon higher ground. Whether true or false is beside the question. The learned Senator from Massachusetts knew it was not a personal dislike, but because of the charge that Huerta's hands were red with the blood of his predecessor.

What could this exhibition of joint denunciation mean to those in Mexico who had become quiet, who apart from the disaster at Ysabel seemed to take pattern after the course and quiet of America—those who had confided in the appearance of a united America at last behind the President in Mexico. It meant that these captains-general of the Republican masters had sounded their bugle note of opposition and obstruction, of defeat and disaster to anything the Democracy was then attempting in Mexico, to serve the design which was now to make Mexico an issue.

INCITED OPPOSITION TO PRESIDENT.

Then, sir, every interest that brooded revenge upon the United States for approving those who they felt would no longer give privilege to pillage her helpless land was awakened anew. Every bandit on the mountain side, every murderer summoned from the mountain gorges, every creeping assassin in the shadow of the cactus awakened to the knowledge that something had happened to their profit in America. To them it meant that the United States was turning against the President of the United States; that it had withdrawn from Wilson all support; was repudiating his cooperation with Carranza; that America now no longer presented a common front or united support for Wilson's policy in Mexico.

Again, by this false display to Mexico the Republican masters licensed every marauder, every murderer, every interest, small and powerful, to feel privileged to assault that which represented Wilson or his policy. These knew that they would have the confidence and support of a great party in America which had for years been successful in electing a President and was now giving them aid and comfort through the mouth of those they had been given to understand by flattering press would be the next President. They felt now justified in these assaults, if such assaults could but serve to defeat Wilson and destroy his policy of peace in Mexico, and overturn the promised order that seemed on the eve of establishment under the Democracy in America. Then it was that by this license given by these Republican masters—this summons and call, the marauding murderers of Villa took hope—not content now with the mere assault in Mexico upon Americans that mined in Mexico, they grew courageous, they felt invited into America by such leading Americans who were Republican prophets. They heard the invitation saying, Go burn, plunder, murder—behind you are your new allies, the masters of the Republican Party, their captains being the keynote strikers upon the lute that whistled "Mexico" as the issue. Then it was that these murderous marauders, with this license from the Republican masters—on March 19, just a month following the speech of Senator Root striking this "keynote" of opposition and disaster to a Democratic President as an "issue"—went out, crossing Mexico into Columbus, N. Mex., and in the pursuit of their raid, in the dawn of the morning, looted the stores and the post office; set the torch to the homes, shooting the occupants as they ran for life. These assaulted were Americans. The first reward to the first announcement of Republican masters of Mexico as an issue. The first compensations for the disloyalty of Americans to an American President—the first booty to the treason of politics against patriotism in the United States of America.

Then, say I, it was not until these Republican generals shot at the President of the United States did the murderers in Mexico shoot the soldiers of the President and kill the Americans in America. Surely these Republican captains can say that they sowed the dragon's teeth, and the pack sprung forth to devour.

Mr. President, after this, everywhere in the United States that Republican leaders could, through insurrection, continue attacks upon the policy of the President and license the assault upon Americans, it was continued. All of those in Mexico who would defeat America saw that they were welcome in their design and multiplied their efforts. They embarrassed the Republic, defeating our purposes, and inviting the outrages of Glenn Springs and the further atrocities following on the border. One followed the other faster and faster. The flame had been lighted. Hot-footed murder was on the road. Those who had longed for the hour when they could have behind them the great political party of America to justify their insurrection against the President, their disloyalty to America, their assault and murder of Americans, had at last been rewarded. The bandits of Villa had found their allies in the captains of the Republican Party. All were for the destruction of an American policy of an American President, by any method through which it was achieved, though it meant, when done, the death of our country's sons, the murder of America's own children.

Then it was that the slanderers of the administration and the American inciters of its enemies in Mexico had been so successful in bringing about the murder of American soldiers and American citizens that there was nothing left for the administration to do but to promptly proclaim a punishment of those who had assailed America through the murder of her citizens. The punitive expedition was then sent forward in the form of the soldiers of the United States. It was sent with the object and purpose of punishing those who had outraged our citizenship and to do so without regard to consequences, even if these consequences now meant war. Now, let America remember that on the border there were 2,000 soldiers who had been there since the administration of President Taft and were continued by the administration of Wilson. Yet the attempt by Republican masters to mislead the American people to the conclusion that no steps had been taken that might under ordinary circumstances have been a guardianship for the conditions of the border is a deliberate deception. Our soldiers then under order of Wilson moved in to consummate their purpose. Let America reflect upon the deplorable situation these soldiers were now put in. In a foreign country—a fever-stricken land—to fall by disease, to suffer with thirst, to want in hunger, to be victim of the stealthy murderer, to be shot at from mountain fastnesses, surprised and besieged from hidden places impossible of discovery. On they moved, many to fall, never to see their homes nor their kindred. Yet with this enemy before them, hidden or around them—inspired by the enemies of the United States who for political purposes incited their own countrymen to the hatred of any course that would be taken by an American administration headed by a Democrat—these soldiers had at the rear of them the awakened resentments in America, the withdrawal of sympathy, the withholding of approval, because in every public place and from every press that could be misled through misinformation, the soldiers were arraigned with being on an unholy mission and an unnecessary one, and the country began ringing with the charge made from Republican masters that America was interfering in Mexico.

THEN MEXICO ASSAILED SOLDIERS.

Mexico began to view the soldiers as invaders. It was educated to do so by these masters of the Republican Party; these captains of the Republican army. They were assured by these assailants of America—who for political purposes were dishonoring their own country—that America did not approve the movement of the soldiers, the object of the mission, but condemned the proceeding as one of injustice and wrong. Naturally, these Mexicans took license and felt encouraged, as they now knew that in America there was a political party that approved of every assault they made upon anything, anywhere, that was directed by a Democratic President. Quite boldly did these bandits and assailants accept the invitation of these Republican masters and began their assaults anew. They felt reinforced with courage drawn from the applause for their depredations that they received from these masters of the Republican Party, who gleefully snickered with joy that at last they had awakened an "issue," though they were writing it with the trickling blood of the murdered sons of their own country. "These were neither men nor women. They were neither beast nor human. They were ghouls." Here let us remember the contrast in the administration of President McKinley when he was called to send his punitive force to Cuba. The Democracy, which had been cursed and defiled, and in the South oppressed and abused; in the West ignored and denounced; or held up as unworthy and unpatriotic, and this for years, all laid their grievances aside, forgot their wounds. The son of the man who had worn the gray linked arms with the son of the soldier in blue, and enrolled themselves under the flag of their reunited country, and to the cry of "My country, and nothing but my country," they moved on, though they knew it was to sicken, to fall, to die. All over the Nation the leaders of the Democracy joined in one union of echo in support of the President, a vindication of America. From no point in the Nation was a Democrat to be found so despicable in character, so wanting in patriotism, and so low in intrigue as to open backfire upon the President that he might accomplish a political object at the expense of the defeat of his country and the dishonor of his Nation. All were a union then; they had but one object; it was to do and die if need be, but to serve.

The action was that of an American President and against a foreign foe. It was an American policy declared. A Democrat was a patriot; he asked no further. He obeyed in honor, and with the patriots from the Republican plain ranks they served to sustain the American President. Before the world they indorsed by voice and action the final decision of their country. There was but one voice, strength to our President, victory to our arms. How different was the spectacle now presented when the punitive expedition was sent into Mexico with the same object as that of McKinley into Cuba—though this into Mexico was under a Democratic President. Now a political party in America speaks, through its leaders, its contempt for its President in his efforts to maintain his country in peace, his countrymen in life and honor. See how these Republican masters all over the Nation proceeded to arouse conflict at home that they could awaken assaults upon America from abroad—all for votes and for office. These masters sent encouragement to the assailants of America, calling to them to destroy by death or disaster the sons of America as penalty for obedience to the orders of their President because he was a Democrat.

If this is called patriotism, God save the name from ever being profaned again by the mention in this Temple. May its name be forbidden to human speech as were the names of the despoilers of the temple of Ephesus.

INVITATION OF REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Then, sirs, the Republican convention assembled in Chicago. Our soldiers were in the field. They were moving to punish the Mexican soldiers and the murderers of Americans. Carranza had been aroused by the Republican denunciation of a Democratic President to the knowledge that the action of Wilson did not meet the approval of a great political party in the United States. He saw that he could protest against the action of sending the soldiers across the border into Mexico and be sustained by the Republican Party of America. He could then strengthen himself with his own forces in Mexico and awaken sentiment of support, bringing the possibility of unity of all other forces in Mexico to him to the accomplishment of his own object. All Mexico turned to see if America now was with the action of the President. It seemed now that the soldiers were but the pickets and advance guard of a further following army for war. Mexico listened; watched to note if we were supported by a united country. If so, no Mexican faction would dare to oppose; they knew it would mean death to their assailant and prompt retribution upon their country. But the Republican masters were looking for the issue. The convention assembled and, pursuing the course that had been prescribed by its leaders, wrote as its doctrine in the platform, for the world to read, its condemnation of America and her course then being pursued in Mexico. It told Carranza that it was against our sending those troops. With every word of its platform sounding to Mexico it condemned our sending the soldiers to rescue American citizens. The platform proclaimed that we were interfering, and wrote an indictment of their country in that critical hour in the statement:

We denounce the indefensible methods of interference employed by this administration in the internal affairs of Mexico and refer with shame to its failure to discharge the duty of this country as next friend to Mexico.

EFFECT OF DENUNCIATIONS.

What could this mean except to certify to Carranza and to Villa that the Republicans asserted that our entering into Mexico with the soldiers at that date though wholly for the purpose of rescuing our own children was "indefensible." That it was "interference." Interference, Mr. President—that we were proceeding to punish the bandits; interference—when we were seeking to rescue our own sons; interference—when we were seeking to protect the honor of our country? Interference—when we were seeking to punish the murder of our own citizens. Then it was that Carranza drew license and encouragement from this indictment by the Republican Party, giving evidence and testimony that the combined judgment of that party was that our conduct was "indefensible" and "interference." That we were invaders. From this Carranza felt his opposition justified. It revived Carranza's charge. It gave approval to his accusations and invited him to treat us as convicted of interfering in the internal affairs of Mexico in a manner "indefensible" and in violation of what it charged to be "our duty as the next friend to Mexico." Thus Carranza and his people were aroused to their sense of justification for any assault they would make upon our soldiers by this, the declaration of the Republican Party in its platform, announcing to the world its impeachment of its own country—this summons to its country's enemies to kill the children of America as interfering invaders, "indefensible" and in violation of their duty before the world as the friend to Mexico. Now, to add to this, that they might summon Villa and his band of murderers to join secretly and in common cause with Carranza, they added with adroitness and craft that our other offense for which they justified any assault upon us by Mexico, was that the United States offended Mexico—

By lending influence . . . through recognition of one of the factions.

What did that mean except to inform Villa that our recognition of Carranza was, to the Republican Party, an offense unjustified and which anyone had a right to resent, which a great political party in America was resenting and protesting? Thus, Villa had his new license to renew his assaults upon our people, multiply his outrages upon our citizens.

PRODUCED JOINDER OF VILLA AND CARRANZA.

Now, here it is that I summon America to behold this flaming truth, that when this summons to Carranza and Villa to revenge the entrance of the American soldiers into Mexico and the "interference of America in the internal affairs" and the "wrongful recognition of Carranza"—it was then Carranza and Villa combined; then it was they were in union; then it was for the first time in the history of all the proceedings they braved so far as to perpetrate the atrocity at Carrizal, and under Trevino, the officer of Carranza, surrounded our sol- diers after the habit of Indian massacrers, and there slew them when they were powerless. All this in response to the echoes ringing in their ears from a Republican convention which summoned them to the deed. Villa and Carranza felt invited and approved by that unpatriotic band of political head-hunters assembled in convention at Chicago, who were content to sound any alarm to their own countrymen, to awaken resentment against a Democratic administration, though its effect must be to call a foreign foe to murderous assault upon the children of America and bring death upon the soldiers of the United States of America. It was the Republican convention which slew the soldiers in Carrizal. By the doctrine of the law which holds responsible those who set in motion the machinery that ends in the murder of a man, the Republican convention in Chicago, these platform builders who denounced their President and their country for punishing the murderers of Americans, to awaken an issue wherever they could, these were the perpetrators of the death of these Americans—these of this Republican convention must be brought to the indignation of our countrymen of America and to the punishment by a just vengeance in the hearts of humanity of all America.

Here this day I pronounce the doom upon these captains of the Republican Party. I charge that when these generals shot at the President of the United States they commanded the followers of Carranza and Villa to kill the soldiers of the President of the United States. On the heads of these Republican generals I put the blood of every soldier who has suffered and bled in Mexico at the hands of Carranza and Villa. On the heads of these Republican captains I launch the curse of every suffering mother in America.

JUDGE HUGHES ENCOURAGES OPPOSITION.

Now, sir, upon this platform the nominee was named. It was Justice Hughes, who now in his announcement touching Mexico says in his acceptance:

We have not commanded the respect; we have made enemies, not friends.

Who made these enemies for America? I answer, it was the captains of the army now generaled by Candidate Hughes. Who is it that deprived us of respect? I answer, it was those traitors to the doctrine of patriotism that should have commanded from every honest heart faithful obedience to an American President when he was serving his country against a foreign foe. Judge Hughes is nominated, and, Mr. President, what is interesting to note is the proof of a conspiracy, which kept its subterranean trail following the order of the snake that puts its head out of the sands just before it strikes after its long course of creeping through the underground. We note the further proof of this hidden conspiracy to use Mexico as the issue by inviting in every indirect way that could be adopted the assaults from any agency of Mexico upon either property or men of America, by assuring them that the judgment of our country was that we were intruders and "interfering." Interfering! Note the word. *First used by Mr. Root at New York, then by Senator Lodge at Lynn, Mass., then the exact expression duplicated in the platform, and after 35 minutes of time had elapsed from the time of the announcement of the nomination to the time of the automatic sending of the telegram of Justice Hughes accepting his nomination we find the prepared exactness of long dwelt over phraseology and much slept over composition, artfully devised, and brazenly following the design which had been constructed and now executed to the object in hand of awakening revolt and insurrection in Mexico—murder and death if need be. Judge Hughes indicted this country as interfering and multiplied the charges of interference from the highest possible sources, that Mexico may feel that all of this country justified her in resisting the intruder who was interfering. Mexico felt approved in driving back the trespasser, by death if necessary, for invading his country. See the expression on June 10 of the telegram of Justice Hughes to Chairman HARDING, saying:*

We interfered without consistency and sought to dictate while we were not concerned and utterly failed to appreciate and discharge our plain duty.

Shall Justice Hughes, an eminent jurist, say that in crossing the border and entering upon pursuit of these bandits we were interfering? We might expect these expressions from those unlearned in the law or of the rights of the law when inspired to them through small political purposes, to misrepresent and misstate, but Justice Hughes must know that by treaty, suggested in 1882, approved in 1885 under Mexican Minister Manero Romero—here at Washington—there was provided the right to cross the border with our soldiers and pursue the bandits and punish those who had violated the sanctity of our soil through crime. How could this eminent officer so carelessly fall into the conspiracy of the adoption of accusations that had been conceived and constructed for uses most effective because of the method of their employment, and how could he say we were "not concerned"? Has patriotism fallen so low and politics descended to so despicable a depth that for the purpose of craving political support of the concessionaires, land pirates, and murderous marauders, and those who are their indorsers and sponsors that any man of high position, one of presumed credit or standing, would say that America "was not concerned" in the death of her own children, in the murder of her own soldiers, in the dishonor to her own soil, in the insult to her flag? Yet we are told that this clause was the spot of attraction in the Republican platform. Then we cry: "Out damn'd spot—out!"

Is it possible that Justice Hughes believes that by thus joining his party and condemning the efforts of America to rescue her children and punish their assailants he could gather political support to himself and his party? Is it conceivable that America, once awakened to the object, would not resent it by every honorable method at its command and repudiate the authors of the purpose, as they would conspirators who betray the Republic when in the defense of the Nation? Who in the Nation, upon beholding the truth, would not turn upon the perpetrators and lash them from the temple of the Republic, as Christ did the conspiring gamblers of fortune from the temple of his holy Church? Mr. President, history never has approved, history never will approve, and mankind has never rewarded the condemnation by a party of its own country, and the repudiation of the deliverers of its own sons only in order to achieve political profit from the disloyal act.

Gladstone was a powerful man in England in 1884-85; Gordon and his followers in Egypt had moved toward the Sudan. Soon they were closed in at Khartoum, and the Mahdists, led by their chief dervish, imperiled their lives. An expeditionary and punitive force was ordered forth from England to rescue them, but obstruction so retarded the relief and the condemnation of the followers of Gladstone of the undertaking, multiplied the difficulties—aided by the censure of those in the design charging "failure of duty"—as bringing upon the country the result of Gordon's critical predicament. This defeated unity of rescue. Gordon was killed. Gladstone was powerful. But this course of his followers so awakened the indignation of England when she realized what had been the effect in the Sudan of the obstruction and censure by the political followers of Gladstone that it turned upon Gladstone and visited upon him the only humiliating punishment his great life was compelled to endure. He was driven for a while from power, as Justice Hughes and his allies will for all time be kept from power as a punishment for the unholy course they have taken through which to obtain power and exalted situation.

CANDIDATE REFUSES APPROVAL OF AMERICA.

And now, sir, that one may see to what degrading depths ambition may send noble natures, note the indifference of patriotism or affection to the United States of America of these political speculators on blind chance; these who hope to make of Mexico and its miseries and of America and her complications a bridge over which they could pass to the temple of power through party success. Mr. President, the exigencies for the protection of the border demanded of the President of the United States—the Commander in Chief—that he order his citizen soldiery, the National Guard, to the border. The order went forth. It seemed as if war was on us. It seemed as though, should the prisoners not be promptly released and Carranza not heed the wisdom of the just conciliation, that all Mexico would be upon the front and back of the young sons of America. These sons had demanded to go.

The President had commanded them to march on June 19. Under that order they went forth. From thousands of homes young men leaped forth adorned in their new uniforms—some with saber at side, some with gun on shoulder, all with knapsack upon their back, honor throbbing through their hearts and patriotism burning through their bodies. Music played upon the air, the national anthems were trumpeting to the American. The national spirit of our countrymen was aroused; our children were going forward again, as they had in 1776, in 1846, in 1898, in the cause of humanity. The leaders of public opinion and eminence were asked their opinion of the order. All gave approval. All delighted to shout their farewell and "God bless you." Justice Hughes is now the candidate of his party; he is at New York City; he is on an errand to meet Chairman Willcox and his political advisers. He is asked what he has to say as to the calling out the Guard and the mission. His response, "Nothing to say." Nothing to say! Is it true, oh, God in heaven, that a political aspiration could so overwhelm the nobility of a Christian soul living in America, who, beholding his country on the verge of war with a foreign nation, could not rescue himself from the contemplation of what might be the political loss by approval of the course of a political opponent, sufficient to cry out as an American, "It is well; the cause is the cause of our country; victory to its arms, honor to its flag." No; Justice Hughes had not a word! Before all the world, with civilization listening for the verdict of mankind, when union of America would have been hoped for by every patriotic soul of any man, the candidate of the Republican Party, who had been honored by his country, could not find it compatible with his political hopes to utter one word of encouragement to his country, one hope for its welfare, or a prayer for its success when it was on the way before the world to oppose a foreign foe. And this when public press had announced that the foreign foe had been incited to its resentments against America by other foreign foes in Asia and in Europe—and Villa asserting that he now had Germany and Japan as allies. Sir, it is beside the question whether the accusation be true or not.

The exhibition to the world at such moment that there was no division between Americans as to the cause of America against a foreign enemy would have done all to have made impossible that there could ever be cooperation from foes without, as well as from the political conspirators within. But Justice Hughes, who in his declaration on Monday night presents himself as the ultra-American, throbbing with ardor for his country and burning with patriotism, when tested in the moment of his country's peril—if his course should be partyism or patriotism—claimed the privilege through the advantage of silence of refusing contribution of patriotism in any expression of an indorsement of the action of his native land.

But if Justice Hughes were so restrained in the fear of losing political advantage that he could not approve the order of the Commander in Chief of the course of his country as it moved on to a foreign foe, surely he might have observed these young men. They were leaving their homes. They were departing from school. They were bidding good-bye to mother, and grasping the hand of father in farewell. They may never see home again. They may fall under a sniping assassin. They may linger in fever and wither in disease. They may sink to unknown graves and their bodies decay in unknown spaces with nothing to mark the holy place save the streaming tears of mother dropping upon the imagined spot where her dreams tell her her son sleeps. Surely to these he could have had a word; a "God bless you," some cry of success to arms, some encouragement to their noble purpose. They were patriots and in their first sacrifice for country. It was not for them to reason whether Wilson was right or wrong, whether the Democracy or the Republicans were right or wrong, theirs was "not to reason why, but to do and die."

NOT A WORD FOR THE SOLDIERS.

Justice Hughes had his gallant son then at camp in Plattsburg. Surely out of the affection he bore him and the wish for his well-being that was in the soul of him, as well as the tender affection he bore to the mother of the boy—surely by this standard applied to all other sons and mothers he might have sent one word of cheer. To the mother and father of these boys he could have sent some thought that could have consoled their grief, and to the boy some word of praise that could have strengthened the daily march, with its hideous sufferings, which lay before him. But no, not a word said Justice Hughes; when asked, "Not a word to say." Is there anyone who feels that Justice Hughes is not a man of heart? Such a one does not know him. Is there anyone who thinks he is not a man of feeling? Such a one has failed to observe him. Would there be anyone who could fancy that there was not in the heart of him all sympathy, and in the life of him all hope, there was in the heart and the soul of any man who was a true patriot? Certainly not. We grant him this in the justice that Democracy extends in her equity ever given to all mankind. It is because of this fact that we stand bewildered for reason and palsied at the exhibition, compelled as we are to contemplate how a great man who had held exalted situation, when called upon to anticipate the possibility of winning the highest office in America, by refusing to approve his country or breathe a blessing on her sons; strangled every emotion, choked every sensation, and bade farewell to every impulse of duty, that he might not lose political support from any quarter which might resent his exhibition of fairness on the one hand or his exclamation of patriotism on the other. Here we note that one of his friendly critics said his "bearing on the occasion was like a Roman," to which every American replies, "I would rather be the dog that bays the moon than such a Roman."

CONDEMN PUTTING GUARD ON BORDER.

Mr. President, now, Justice Hughes, following along the course of his predecessors in condemnation and malediction of sending the soldiers of the guard to Mexico, said that taking them from their homes and their business was inexcusable. What would Justice Hughes do? What would he have done in the matter of Mexico? Now, we propound to Justice Hughes: Would you have recognized Huerta? What would you have done in Mexico at the time under the circumstances? Why is it that nowhere in your declaration you say what should have been done, what you would have done, what your party would have done, what it will do, what it expects to do? Why not give to the country what remedy you would have enforced, what method you would have taken, or now, with all the evidence that could not have been seen by our administration, but is plainly seen by you, what now will you do? Whom will you recognize in Mexico? Will you withdraw the soldiers sent in by President Taft? Will you refuse to protect the border, and if you withdraw the guard before order is restored what will you put in its stead? What do you tell your countrymen you will offer as a substitute for the maintenance of peace? Justice Hughes criticized the sending of the guard. He says that they were unprepared. Who says so? The Republican Party. What would they have—that there should have been a perfect Army—a standing Army of such numbers as to have been promptly sent into Mexico to have made it unnecessary to send the guard? Then the reply is that there was no such army in existence. The Republicans had been in power for 16 years preceding the advent of Wilson. They expended thirty thousand millions of dollars under the pretense of national defense. If there was no army which could have been sent into Mexico, who was responsible? And why this false pretense of responsibility for its absence hinted to be put upon the Democratic Party of three years in power? But we will not charge the Republican Party with misfeasance in failing to have such an army.

Every country was at peace, with few indeed willing to incite it to war, and if it is true that "Wilson changed his mind," as is charged, and brought his country to the realization of the necessity for increasing defenses, let it be understood that this was made necessary by the increased perils which were upon the country, not to be seen or apprehended when the President sought to have his country removed from the possibility of an "armed camp." And if any man shall ask what brought about these increased perils and the necessity for the change of position, I reply that it was these Republican captains, who, anxious for issue on militarism against Americanism and willing to sponsor militarism against Americanism, continually cried out to every foe America had, "Come forward; our country is helpless; we will show you where to strike; we will lay our finger upon the vital spot that you may behold the signs. We testify to you if you have any grievances now wreak them. We betray the confidence of our country to you. We reveal her secrets. We show you the spot that is vital, that is uncovered and defenseless. This is your hour to strike. We invite you for that in the striking down of our country we can point to it as the fulfillment of our prophecy that militarism was necessary to America and that she was 'unprepared.'" They were willing to have their land despoiled by the invader, their ports blockaded, their cities laid waste, their fields aflame, their children strewn upon every hillside and valley dead, to have justified the charge they made before the world against their own country that it was helpless and powerless.

IF "UNPREPARED"—WHO RESPONSIBLE?

If it were helpless in its defenselessness, the Nation will remember who was responsible for it. That the Republicans were in power for 16 years unbroken and had 16 years to achieve that which, if necessary, was necessary before their eyes, clear as it would have been before the Democracy or before any citizenship; and, if not necessary, it was an imposition and crime upon the citizen and taxpayer to cry the danger to force taxes from him whose burdens already had become so great as to overcome him in his march of life, put on him by Republican administrations of profligacy and political pillage. These it is who cry patriotism, national defense—who it is now that condemn us for sending the soldiery into the country, where before they said our offense consisted in not sending them earlier and in greater number. While pretending to patriotism they condemn every exhibition of courage, and hope to invite the indignation of mothers and fathers against the Democracy because their sons have been called to duty. Those who left the country helpless against invaders and enemies now would leave it defenseless if by doing so it could increase the Nation's embarrassments and awaken political following to its new doctrine of hypocrisy.

Now these announce themselves—the patriots of peace and unity—and yet with our Nation once again composed in peace, her citizens of every nationality forgetting the differences that once divided them, and all turning their faces to the call of love and the demand of patriotism, we find that before them is the leader of the Republicans, who as though he were a shouting dervish, now in the name of "Belgium" and the "horrors of the Lusitania," summoning his followers to madness, howling them to frenzy, demand that they tear at each other until they rip apart the healing wounds, that he may drabble his hands in the spurting blood, and by waving them in their dripping redness, summon his countrymen to the fury of internal dissension, race conflict, and human hatred. Their children to be pitted against each other. The women to be torn from friendships and the homes to be blackened again with the shadow of darkness and despair. Where peace was, he will light a flame, and where there was the beauty of love, he will set a festering blister. No love, no peace, no union. All shall be conflict and hatred, and our citizens in riot that he, amidst these hatreds and reawakened conflicts, could be forwarded by the impact and rush to place and power.

TRYING TO AROUSE PARENTS AGAINST UNITED STATES.

Now, these also would awaken the resentments of every mother, the retaliation of every father, because their son is upon the border bearing the burdens of a national patriot to secure peace and to avoid war. You Republicans cry out the injustice, as you claim, of having these young men in such condition of "inconvenience and vicissitude"; you exaggerate the conditions of distress, and magnify what are the possible sufferings they could endure. And yet you now pronounce through your candidate with a message to the world that had you had your way in making war against Germany and declaring war with the world for the "vindication of Belgium" you would have sent these young men, huddled like cattle, upon the board of every raft and vessel upon the raging seas, expiring with sickness on shipboard, hungering for want of food, crammed in polluted places infested with vermin, and when landed on the opposite side of the American world, in Europe, to be met with the combined armies of Europe, the ship bearing them shot to fragments, America's sons killed in legions, or, if ever landed, to be marched to hills and valleys, where they were to lie down in death, unmarked in grave, where their mothers and fathers would know them no more nor hear their last cry as they breathed out their young lives in sacrifice to the barbarism of those who would have established America upon the doctrine of militarism and send her children in millions to die in foreign lands for conquest of foreign countries.

Surely America will hurl upon you the malediction of St. Matthew upon the Pharisees:

Ye are likened to whitened sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but within are filled with all uncleanness and unrighteousness— and cry unto you, "Ye Pharisees and hypocrites, how shall ye escape the damnation of hell?"

THE PEOPLE UNDERSTAND.

Mr. President, this Nation is not deceived. Her people will not be deluded in foolishness or deceived in fraud. The truth has awakened to them. The American citizen knows of the burdens that have been laid upon this administration. He knows the days of care and nights of agony borne by that man in the White House during those critical hours when the Nation trembled in the balance of war with the world or peace with earth. The citizen saw how this captain of the Democracy stood at the head of his ship, with his eyes scanning the distant seas, knowing the treacherous rocks ahead and that on every side were the reefs and all around him the pirates who would wreck his ship that they might feed and fatten upon its stranded cargo of liberty and justice. Still he stood steady, unafraid, the storm blowing about him, the winds howling against him, all earth trembling in terror around him; but true to the single star of "Peace on earth good will to men" he steered. Seemingly this captain had God for a pilot. And to-day we are in harbor, in the haven of peace. Malice could asperse him, slander could calumniate, disloyalty could wound him, and treason at times obstruct him; but all of the combined powers of his opposition could not defeat him.

*He was one, momentarily by error's host assailed,
Stands strong as truth in greaves of granite mailed;
And tranquil fronted, listening over all the tumult
Hears the angels say, "Well done."*

MEXICO UNDER WILSON.

Sir, there, too, stands Mexico. As she has been, so shall she remain, the stepdaughter of our Republic. Though prostrate by oppression, stripped by her despoilers, and profaned by her ravishers, she shall still be the charge and care of this her protecting mother. We take her by the hand, we bring her to her feet, bid her take new hope to the days when through our aid, by the agency of humanity, and through the sanctity of religion, she shall inherit freedom as her state, liberty as her justice, and to her children transmit the blessing of a free country, we ordain that she shall live under a constitution guaranteeing the freedom of press, the freedom of man, and the freedom of worship. Upon these she will build anew to the splendor of her future, and be welcomed in the family of nations as a republic purified by sacrifice, and through the aid and friendship of the United States to be at peace with her children and sovereign to her people.

This is the blessing for Mexico to enjoy through America's decree—administered in the dispensation of justice and liberty by the people's great Democrat, America's Christian gentleman, Woodrow Wilson. [Loud applause from the galleries, checked by the Vice President.]

During the delivery of Mr. LEWIS's speech,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes.

After the conclusion of Mr. LEWIS's speech,

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have just listened to the most remarkable political harangue which in my limited experience I have ever heard upon the "stump," and which certainly I had never expected to hear in the legislative halls of the Congress of the United States. I shall detain the Senate only a very short time. I shall not attempt to make a speech, Mr. President, and to reply to this remarkable outburst would be to dignify it. But there are some passages in it which I desire to emphasize in the Record and to which I shall refer for that purpose, and that purpose only.

We have been told not only by the Senator [Senator LEWIS, of Illinois] through his notice given here but also through the newspapers of the country that the Senator from Illinois intended to deliver a speech in which he proposed to reply to the Republican candidate's notification address, particularly with reference to foreign affairs. We have been told even through the press that the Democratic campaign committee would use hundreds of thousands of copies of this speech in the present campaign.

Mr. President, understanding the issue, which the Senator does not even refer to, as I think I do, and as I think it will be presented to the people in this campaign, I will say frankly to him, first, that if I were conducting the campaign for Mr. Hughes and I could not obtain copies of the Senator's speech from him or from the Public Printer I would expend every cent in the publicity fund of the Republican Party for disseminating the speech throughout the United States, and without an answer to it, letting it go, except as it had been answered by the President of the United States himself and by his Secretary of State. Without an answer, as I said, except to take the words of the President and the other officials of this Government and of Carranza himself. Without an answer, I say, I would trust to this speech alone if I was thinking only of partisan results to achieve those results and elect Mr. Hughes as the President.

The Senator belongs to that recent school of statesmen in this country developed during the last three years, developed since the minority party was successful in the last campaign, who are teaching the doctrine that patriotism means servility and subserviency to your party leader. Exactly, in more respects than one have the Democracy of this country or their leaders placed themselves upon an equality with those who are now ruling Mexico.

Do you hear the word "patriotism" in Mexico? In what terms is it phrased? "Yo soy Carranzista"—I am a Carranzista; "Yo soy Villista"—I am a Villista; "Yo soy Zapatista"—I am a Zapatista.

The old boast for the last 35 years in Mexico upon public occasions made by their orators was not "Long live Mexico, my country," but "Yo soy hijo de Porfirio Diaz"—I am a son of Porfirio Diaz.

This class of statesmen who constitute the leaders of the Democracy of this country would assure their followers that the campaign cry is not "I am an American," but "I am for Woodrow Wilson"—"Yo estoy para Wilson." Anyone who speaks of Americanism is against America. Any speaker who dares to present to the American people the facts on the Mexican question, because in presenting such facts necessarily those facts themselves condemn Woodrow Wilson, then that speaker is a traitor in the eyes of the Senator from Illinois and his class of statesmen, and his mouth should be closed.

Sir, I may say to the Senator I can see more resemblance than one between his Democratic Party and the party of Carranza, between the leader in his political views and the political views announced by Carranza.

I have here on my desk a decree of Mr. Carranza just issued referring to the election which is called. Oh, how happy would be the Senator from Illinois could Woodrow Wilson promulgate and enforce such decrees. On the 2d of June in this body I made a speech upon the Mexican question, in which I detailed from Carranza's own mouth the kind of "government" which existed in Mexico; that he was the legislative, the judicial, and the executive, the head of the army, legislating solely by decree, and enforcing his decrees by guns, passing upon them by court-martial.

Now, I may say for the information of the Senator, that telegrams were sent to the Carranza so-called government, calling attention to the criticism delivered here in this body which was, in turn, reflecting presumably, or would so reflect upon the administration now in power in this country, and the demand was made as I am informed that elections be called in Mexico. They were called; and I have here the decree; and the qualifications of electors and the qualifications of office seekers as fixed by Mr. Carranza's decree at the elections to be held in the month of September are, that neither the electors nor the office seekers should have given either armed or tacit assistance to anyone else than Mr. Carranza. The Villistas, the 20,000 Zapatistas armed and controlling four States in Mexico, the Felicistas controlling five States in Mexico, the millions of people throughout the Republic who have acquiesced in any attempt of anyone to resist the outrages of Carranza's bandits, those who have hidden away an ear of corn for the purpose of feeding their starving children, are disfranchised, and only Carranzistas shall vote.

He appoints the judges of election, he appoints the officers of election, he prescribes the qualifications of voters, he overturns the constitution of the union, he sets aside the constitution of the State, he abolishes the election laws fixed by the constitution, he ignores the State laws and State lines, he appoints municipal election officers, he names the municipal election candidates, he prescribes the qualification of voters (that they shall be Carranzistas).

If Mr. Wilson could enforce a decree at this election to provide that only followers of Woodrow Wilson should vote, how grateful would be the great statesman from the State of Illinois.

Mr. President, I am now taking more time than I had expected to take. The Senator says there is no issue, that it is merely "Mexico." The Senator knows in his heart what the issue is. The Senator is a Senator of the United States, and he knows that one of the issues which will be presented to the people and upon which they will pass will be an issue which was made when government was born, an issue lying at the very foundation of government itself.

May I ask the Senator what his idea is of the duty of government to its citizens? You will be compelled to answer some questions, sir. You will be compelled to declare your position. The people of the United States will want to know what this Government was formed for. Why does the citizen or individual surrender his inherent right to self-protection to society of which he becomes a part, if not in consideration of a reciprocal promise that if he will support this Government, coming to its assistance as the Serbs and Greeks and Roumanians and Bulgarians and the French and the Germans have gone to the assistance of their respective countries from Asia, from Patagonia, from the coal fields of Colorado, from the farthest corners of the earth at the call of their stricken country in time of need, that in turn his Government will support and protect him?

Sir, I am told that Serbs and Bulgarians and Greeks and Germans and French and English have gone to the assistance of their country. Why? Not because of the love of Kaiser Wilhelm, not because of partisan fealty to some crowned head or some elective President, but because of patriotism, the love of country; and the very foundation stone of patriotism, of love of country, is the mutual obligation that the citizen must protect and assist his country in time of danger, and his country must take over the protection of the citizen when he is in danger.

The very foundation of government itself is the issue involved in the Mexican question in this campaign, and you will meet it at every crossroads and in every street and in every paper. You will meet it from the White House to the humblest hut left standing at Columbus, in my State. Do not think you will escape it. The American people will be called on to know whether they will hold you responsible for the violations of your platform pledge that you would protect citizens in Mexico.

I say here and now, and I defy you to deny it, that the pledge of the protection of American citizens and their constitutional rights on the border and in Mexico was made in 1912 with a desire to create an issue for the administration.

Your returning delegates made those statements and attempted to secure votes upon the platform pledge. What you claimed was an issue with the Republican administration, and upon that you conducted the campaign in the border States—in Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, and California; upon the plank in your platform promising that you would protect our citizens in Mexico. Now, in the result of the recent primaries in Texas you have felt their resentment at your abandonment of the issue which you made, or attempted to make. You carried all the southwestern States along the border upon this issue, and then when I, a Senator in this body, offered your platform pledge as a resolution, without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i," your caucus leader objected even to its consideration.

My desire was to take it out of politics and make it the declaration of the united parties standing for Americanism in this body. Your caucus leader objected to its consideration and your statesmen spoke against it. Your colleagues were against its consideration, and referred it by the majority of your votes, by all your votes I may say, by your power, to the Foreign Relations Committee, where your Democratic plank still rests undisturbed, forgotten from that day to this—lost among the secret archives of the Foreign Relations Committee, just as you have lost American honor on the plains, in the deserts, and in the mountains of Mexico.

Sir, the issue is the platform pledge. Here is your President speaking to Mexico, a telegram sent by him August 27, 1913, as furnished me several months ago by the State Department, in which the "consul general was instructed to notify all officials, military or civil, exercising authority that they would be held 'strictly responsible' for any harm done to Americans or for injury to their property." Further, the consul general was instructed that, as he might have difficulty in reaching the consuls in the northern States, they would be reached directly from this department. I have here a copy of the telegram sent to those northern consulates. You would have never enforced or endeavored to follow up the threat that you proposed to hold every official throughout the Republic of Mexico, civil or military, "strictly responsible" for any harm done to an American citizen or for any injury to his property. You will be confronted with that promise, with that statement, by thousands of American fugitives driven from Mexico, their wives outraged, their children murdered, their companions killed by their side, forming an organization now, not political, but to tell the truth to the American people.

You will be confronted with the fact that Germany had her consuls in Mexico, that she had an ambassador in the City of Mexico, that this telegram was posted in front of the American Embassy and in front of every consulate in the Republic. Germany knew the threat which you had made. You had used the words "strict accountability" or "strictly accountable." Germany knew, sir, without the necessity of an intimation from your Secretary of State that when, on February 10, prior to the sinking of the Lusitania, she was told by you that if she did pursue her underseas warfare, and thereby an American citizen was harmed, that this Government would hold her to "strict accountability." She knew that it was a lie. You will later, I think, change your opinion that there is no issue involved in this Mexican question.

Mr. President, I am not going into this matter at this time at any great length. I may warn the Senator now that in the future he and other Senators here and the administration had better be a little careful how you attack American interests or Americans having interests in Mexico.

I may say to you, sir, that congratulating himself, and being congratulated by his leaders upon his Mobile, Ala., speech referring to concessions in Latin America, the President of the United States insulted every Latin-American country on this continent. These countries knew, however, that he was simply entirely ignorant upon the subject; they know that those of you who speak of grafting concessions, oil concessions in Mexico, are simply ignorant. Every Mexican knows, and every lawyer who has had anything to do with a Mexican oil concession, so-called mining concession, railroad concession, or any other so-called concession in Mexico, knows that there is no such word as "concession," first, and, second, that the contract entered into between the party asking the contract and the Government generally is simply an exemption from the import duties on machinery.

A contract entered into between such a party and the secretary of the interior, as he is called, the secretary of fomento in Mexico, that that contract after being entered into, after he has placed a bond in the treasury for his compliance with it, must be submitted in full to the Mexican Congress, must be debated in that body, and must receive the approval of a majority of both branches of the Mexican Congress. Then upon certification made by the speaker of the House, the president of the Senate, the secretary of the Senate, and the secretary of the House must go back to the President. He communicates it to the department with instructions that it be printed and promulgated. The Senator may go to the country with that issue.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Mexico lives on the border and has acquainted himself very thoroughly with the situation in Mexico. I will ask the Senator if he can approximately state—leaving out the marines that were killed at Vera Cruz and the soldiers who have been killed since our troops went into Mexico—how many Americans have been killed in that country, and whether or not reparation has been demanded or received for the murder of American citizens?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I say that the observations—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LEWIS. I was only going to ask that the observations of the Senator from New Hampshire, always interesting—

Mr. FALL. I yielded to the Senator from New Hampshire for a question.

Mr. LEWIS. I was only going to ask the Senator from New Hampshire to speak a little louder. I should love to hear what the Senator from New Hampshire says; the Senator's observations are always interesting and sometimes informing, and I am delighted to hear him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was troubled during an hour and a half to understand what the Senator from Illinois said.

Mr. LEWIS. I am not responsible for the obtuseness of the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. GALLINGER. With the permission of the Senator from New Mexico I will tell the Senator from Illinois what I said.

I asked the Senator from New Mexico if he could approximately state to the Senate, he having been in Mexico and on the border, how many American citizens had been killed in Mexico, leaving out the marines who were killed at Vera Cruz and the soldiers who have been killed since our troops went into Mexico, and whether or not reparation has been demanded and whether or not adequate reparation has been made for the murder of American citizens?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, briefly answering the Senator's question, I will state that 267 Americans have been killed in Mexico, as per the list which I have verified myself. It is claimed by others, however, who have taken more pains possibly and had better opportunities to obtain the information, that there have been over 500 Americans killed; at any rate, 267 I think I can safely vouch for. As to whether there has been any demand for reparation, Mr. President, of course not; none whatsoever. No demand for reparation has been made for any of them. Even when the Santa Ysabel massacre occurred, when 18 Americans were shot down, when their clothes were stripped from them, when they were mutilated most horribly—and I can present to Senators privately the report of the surgeons' examination of the corpses—even then, sir, when the attorneys for the heirs of those people came here, and the department was asked if an attempt could not be made to secure some measure of damage or some reparation, they were refused any aid or assistance by this Government. That has been the course of this administration from its inception, never to present any such demand, except in one instance; that being the case of Mr. McManus in the city of Mexico; and Mr. Villa—outlaw bandit under the decree of the President of the United States recognizing Carranza—Villa himself paid 20,000 pesos for the death of McManus. This is the only instance in which the matter has ever been taken up or referred to.

Mr. President, if I had not intended to refer to the Senator's remarks at all upon any other point, I want to extend to him my political thanks for the statement which he has made to the Senate that this Government—his administration—was just about to recognize Pancho Villa as the governing force in Mexico, when by the efforts of these traitors to the United States—that means the opponents of Woodrow Wilson in the vocabulary of the distinguished Senator from Illinois—when these Republicans prevented the recognition by this Government, which he assures us was just about to be made, of a man whom Mr. Lansing denounces, even as late as June 20, 1916, as a bloody-handed murderer, whose career of crime was known from one end of Mexico to the other, whose reputation as an assassin has gone throughout the broad confines of the earth. I am politically grateful to the Senator for the statement—which I knew to be true, but of which I did not until he spoke have proof—that this Government was just on the eve of recognizing as the head of the de facto government, Pancho Villa, horse thief, murderer, liar, assassin for hire, his character known to the State Department at the time that this Government was just on the eve of recognizing him as the governing power in Mexico, when these traitorous Republicans, by their clamor and denunciation, prevented it. Politically I thank you for that statement; as a citizen, as a Senator, I bow my head in shame that any administration should have fallen so low as to have made an associate and have attempted to make a copresident of Villa, whom the Senator from Illinois apparently admires.

Mr. President, I shall only refer to one other matter. The Senator knows about as much about what has gone on in Mexico as anyone else on his side; and that is nothing, except possibly that Pancho Villa was going to be recognized. He knows nothing more about the subject generally than he does about the specific subject, for instance, of concessions.

He criticizes the Republican platform because the Republican platform on Mexico says that the United States has not done its duty to Mexico and that it has not done its duty to the other countries of the world. Why, sir, I may inform the distinguished and learned Senator that those words in the Republican platform are copied from Woodrow Wilson's message to the Congress of the United States on August 27, 1913!

Mr. LEWIS rose.

Mr. FALL. I can not be interrupted now, if the Senator will excuse me.

In his message to the Congress of the United States Woodrow Wilson in proclaiming his intention not to recognize Huerta did not himself deal with the protection of Americans, did not proclaim the rights of American citizens, did not proclaim the rights of this Government with reference to Mexico; but he only relied for authority for his action, and only cited to the Congress of which the distinguished Senator was then a Member, I believe—he only cited to them as his reasons for his action the interest of Mexico; and the fact that he said the other countries of the world had placed their interests in our hands. Read his message and then undertake to criticize the Republican platform upon the subject.

Ah, Mr. President, the Senator, of course, as a court jester rather than as a statesman, undertakes to saddle responsibility for the murder of Americans at Columbus and for the murder of our soldiers at Carrizal upon the Republican Senators and upon the Republican candidate. That is worthy of the Senator, possibly, as an actor, but it is unworthy of the Senator's great attainments and his position in the Senate of the United States.

Sir, I will not undertake to encumber the Record nor to detain the Senate with a recitation on the messages backward and forward between Mr. Carranza and the President of the United States, nor between the generals in command preceding this incident, this murder and massacre at Carrizal—the generals of Carranza in command on one hand, and of our generals on the other—except to detail rapidly this: Trevino, the general in command of the department of the northwest or of the north, notified Pershing in writing that the latter could only move his soldiers north; that he should not move them south, east, or west. Pershing immediately notified Trevino—and his note to Trevino was published in the daily press, and it can be found, I presume, in the War Department—that he had no orders from his Government not to move his troops east, south, or west; that, until he received such orders, he would move them where he pleased; and that if Trevino undertook to carry out his threat by attacking his detachments, he would hurl the whole American Army at Trevino's army. This was the brave message of a brave American soldier in command, attempting to protect the soldiers under him. He did send a detachment under Capt. Boyd and Morey and Lieut. Adair. He did send those detachments, in accordance with his instructions from this Government, in pursuit of bandits, and they were shot down at Carrizal by Trevino's men. Pershing did not resent their death; he did not carry out his threat to Trevino; and the bodies of those boys were lying sweltering in the hot sun—it may be said that they were only "niggers"—he did not carry out his threat to hurl his army against Trevino. Still, no one questions for a moment the reputation of Pershing as a brave, courageous American soldier, who makes no bluffs.

I will ask the Senator the next time he appears in public to answer why Pershing did not resent the attack upon his detachment at Carrizal? I ask the Senator to answer why no soldier of the American Army has ever gone into Carrizal from that day to this, and why the wounded were allowed to wander on the plains, famishing with thirst, a hundred miles from water, the wounded negro soldiers who were fighting for their country? I ask you why they were allowed to wander until some were rescued by charitable Mexicans, others found their way into the houses and homes of charitable American ranchers, and others died, and their bones were cleaned by the coyotes? You, a Senator, dare to attribute these things to those who would criticize a policy that sends to their death American men and to worse than death American women, sends starvation to millions of Mexican children, and sends to their death, without hope of revenge even, brave American soldiers and brave American officers! Why, Mr. President, I am hesitant for words, because I say to you, sir, that if I pronounced my judgment upon the so-called speech to which we have listened here to-day my words would not be parliamentary.

Now, sir, I am not going to say anything more; but as the Carrizal matter has been referred to, I want to read a tribute by Dean Collins, published in the Portland Oregonian on the day of the funeral of Lieut. Henry Adair:

ADAIR OF CARRIZAL.

[By Dean Collins.]

I had thought that our hearts would leap, Adair,
That our hands would clutch at the sword and gun;
I had thought that our spirit of old would flare
At the tale of the deed that you have done.
But silent we walk and silent you lie,
And "peace" says the bishop above your pall;
But the blood you shed is red—how red—
Red on the sands of Carrizal.

I had thought we would rise on the wings of fame;
That a river of swords would southward flow,
And voices of battle would cry your name
As they cried the name of the Alamo.
But we mutter our prayers for the rest of your soul;
And how shall rest on your spirit fall
When we bow the head, while the blood you shed
Cries from the sands of Carrizal?
I had thought—but my thoughts were lies, Adair,
For my heart was not with that art imbued
That fashions a diplomatic snare
To throttle a Nation's gratitude.
The statesmen build up the forms of peace,
Where words look large and where lives look small,
While my hot cheeks flame with the blush of shame
For the cry—unanswered—from Carrizal.
The funeral honors are done, Adair,
And under the earth your body lies;
Thrilling and sweet on the vibrant air
That last long wall of the bugle dies.
Well was your duty done, Adair,
And duty to us alone may call;
And the blood you shed—how red, how red—
Cries like a bugle from Carrizal.

And I may say that "form of peace" built with words—words from the White House, words from the Senate Chamber, words from your national committee, words from your public speakers, words from your partisan press—that "form of peace" built up by you as a fetter for the people of the United States to worship, will be torn to shreds when the issue which you so much fear confronts you upon every stump and every platform in the United States in the coming campaign. We will let the red sands of Carrizal cry to the people, and the mighty hosts of true Americanism will answer that cry and, like a great flame, will avenge the death of Adair at Carrizal.

You and your collaborators in the political vineyard undertake to befoul the issue by appealing to the American people upon the ground that some Americans are interested in Mexico; you undertake to cover your acts of omission and commission in refusing, except with words, to protect American citizens; you undertake to cover your retreat, to cover your trail, first, by appeals to the peace sentiment, and, second, by the denunciation, not of the murderers in Mexico, whom you refuse to hold responsible, even when you have them in your hands, but of Republicans who have done their duty. You refused to hold Castillo responsible when he was in your jail in El Paso and in your military prison. He was deported by you to Habana, Cuba, although he was a man who at the Cumbre tunnel sent to their death by fire 15 Americans, including an American woman with her five children. Castillo was denounced by you; his surrender was demanded of Huerta; and when he came across the border of his own volition and you arrested him, you sent him in safety to Cuba, from whence he has returned to join Carranza, with the avowed intention of fighting the United States in the event of war.

Why, sir, you served notice—and you have found before now that I make no statement that the records will not substantiate—you served notice on Randal, the governor of the State of Sonora, under these circumstances: You allowed Obregon to bring troops through the United States to attack Villa, and you are responsible for the murder of Americans at Columbus because Funston was told that Villa would visit his wrath on America. Villa had made a speech when he disbanded his army of 12,000 men, stating that he would no longer fight Mexicans, that he would no longer spill Mexican blood, but from that time on, as the United States had recognized Carranza, he would devote his attention to killing Americans and raiding the American border. The American consul or vice consul, speaking Spanish and understanding the Spanish, conveyed that speech to Funston, and warned him of the intended raids on our border. Furthermore, sir, I may say to you now that I warned the State Department and the President of the United States three years ago not to allow the troops of one faction to be sent across our border, because it would result, as it had resulted before, in the death of American citizens. I may say to Senators that my warning was not even acknowledged.

Under these circumstances, Randal notified the Government of the United States: "If you allow Obregon's troops to pass through American territory I will not protect American citizens." And he posted notices at Cananea, at Hermosillo, and all over the State of Sonora, and the facts were reported to the State Department verbatim by the American consul. The department answered, directing its agent to notify Randal, in effect, that if the life of one American citizen in Sonora was lost, this Government would hold him—Randal—personally responsible. What happened? Beltran, Randal's general at Cananea, shot down Bean, an American. The American consul, or consular agent, took the matter up with the Government at once, and a few days after Randal was driven from his home by the victorious troops of his opponent across the border, and surrendered to the American military authorities. The civil authorities attempted to get him on this side, but could not do so. The Mexican general stood on the other side and said: "You have said that you would hold this man responsible for murder. He is responsible for Bean's murder. Turn him over to me and I will kill him." The American consul, who stood by his side, telegraphed that to the State Department, and suggested that if we did not want to take steps to punish Randal he should be turned over to Obregon, who was standing there waiting for him. However, you refused to do it, and Beltran enlisted under Villa, and was the leader, with Pablo Lopez, a little later, of that band which shot down Watson and his 18 companions at Santa Ysabel.

You will have issues enough, sir, in this campaign. Mr. President, I am through.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Mexico for his attention for one moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTE in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FALL. I am through. The Senator may have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from New Mexico for just a moment. Knowing the Senator desires that the premises from which he draws his conclusions shall be accurate, I beg, first, to have him understand that there was never an expression from me about the United States Government recognizing Villa as a government, but recognizing Villa as a force to bring about peace and order.

Mr. FALL. No; I did not misunderstand the Senator. The reporter's notes will show what the Senator said.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Illinois did not make the statement. The Senator from New Mexico was simply drawing the deduction from the word "recognition," and I wanted to let him know the exact sentence, so that he would not do himself an injustice.

Mr. FALL. The Senator alluded to it more than once, and that was what brought me to my feet, for I wanted to nail that statement in the Record.

Mr. LEWIS. I am anxious to bring the Senator to his head.

Mr. FALL. Well, Mr. President, it would be more appropriate possibly, in view of the learning of the Senator, that I should kneel at his feet, but I am a little weary.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will not allow the unfinished business to be temporarily laid aside, so that we may take up the calendar for consideration the remainder of the afternoon?

Mr. ROBINSON. A number of requests have been made that that be done, and I ask unanimous consent that not later than 6 o'clock this afternoon the Senate stand in recess until 10 o'clock on Monday morning, and that the unfinished business be now temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked that at not later than 6 o'clock this afternoon the Senate take a recess until Monday morning at 10 o'clock, and that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is that at not later than 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until Monday morning at 10 o'clock, and that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand the request applies to unobjected-to bills?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That request has not been made as yet.

Mr. SMOOT. Now I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with Order of Business 593, and that only the bills to which there is no objection be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Utah is that the Unanimous Consent Calendar be taken up and proceeded with, beginning with Order of Business 593.

Mr. OVERMAN. Unobjected-to bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unobjected to bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he will not add to his request that any bill that has been passed over, to which a Senator desires to recur, he may be permitted to recur to, of course under the same conditions?

Mr. SMOOT. That is, passed over after Order of Business 593?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; that we have already passed over. There may be a few such bills.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, after the calendar is finished.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request for unanimous consent, as the Chair understands it, then, is that the Senate take up the calendar, beginning with Order of Business 593, and proceed to the end of the calendar, and then any Senator desiring to move to take up—

Mr. SMOOT. No; any Senator asking unanimous consent to take up a bill that has been passed over may do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under the same conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Any bill passed over may be taken up and considered by the Senate. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS OF INTERPLEADER BY INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The bill (H. R. 12541) authorizing insurance companies and fraternal beneficiary societies to file bills of interpleader was announced as first in order.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] is very much interested in this bill. I have just come in, and do not see him on the floor. He has been opposing some of the amendments. I favor the amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the bill be passed over until the Senator from New Jersey arrives.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will ask that it be passed over and be taken up later in the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. HUGHES subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that House bill 12541 was temporarily passed over in my absence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was. The bill was the first one called, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] requested that it go over for the purpose of sending for the Senator from New Jersey. The Senator from New Jersey now asks unanimous consent to consider that bill.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district courts of the United States shall have original cognizance to entertain suits in equity begun by bills of interpleader where the same are filed by any insurance company or fraternal beneficiary society, duly verified, and where it is made to appear by such bill that one or more persons, being bona fide claimants against such company or society, reside within the jurisdiction of said court; that such company or society has made or issued some policy of insurance or certificate of membership providing for the payment of a sum of money of at least $500 as insurance or benefits to a beneficiary or beneficiaries or to the heirs, next of kin, or legal representative of the person insured or member; that two or more adverse claimants, citizens of different States, are claiming or may claim to be entitled to such insurance or benefits and that such company or society deposits the amount of such insurance or benefits with the clerk of said court and abide the judgment of said court. In all such cases the court shall have the power to issue its process for said claimants, returnable at such time as the said court or a judge thereof shall determine, which shall be addressed to and served by the United States marshals for the respective districts wherein said claimants reside or may be found; to hear said bill of interpleader and decide thereon according to the practice in equity; to discharge said complainant from further liability upon the payment of said insurance or benefit as directed by the court, less complainant's actual court costs; and shall have the power to make such orders and decrees as may be suitable and proper and to issue the necessary writs usual and customary in such cases for the purpose of carrying out such orders and decrees: Provided, That in all cases where a beneficiary or beneficiaries are named in the policy of insurance or certificate of membership or where the same has been assigned and written notice thereof shall have been given to the insurance company or fraternal benefit society, the bill of interpleader shall be filed in the district where the beneficiary or beneficiaries may reside.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not like to object to the consideration of this matter, but I have had so many letters about it that I feel that it ought to go over. It is a matter that will require some discussion.

Mr. SHIELDS. Are the Senator's letters in favor of the bill?

Mr. POMERENE. A good many of them favor it; yes. They come from the insurance societies. The objection, as I see it, is this: They seek to have all of this litigation in the Federal courts, and it will compel poor litigants who may be beneficiaries under this legislation to go perhaps a hundred or two hundred or three hundred miles in order to litigate their claims, and in my judgment it will operate as a substantial denial of justice to many of those people.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator's objection is based upon the bill as it passed the House, and in my opinion is entirely sound; but the Committee on the Judiciary has reported an amendment to obviate that very trouble.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not believe my attention has been called to the amendment. I should like an opportunity to go over it.

Mr. SHIELDS. The amendment requires the suit to be brought in the district where the beneficiary named upon the face of the policy resides.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; but even in that instance, Mr. President, in my own State, for example, many of these poor people—who may be workmen, or may be widows, or may be orphans—will have to go 200 miles to court to have their claims adjudicated. Now, I realize that the associations are put to some inconvenience; but they have their staffs of attorneys and agents all over the country everywhere.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I again desire to suggest to the Senator that this does not confer upon the district courts jurisdiction of any case where such jurisdiction does not now exist under the present laws, but it only provides for practice in cases of which those courts now have jurisdiction; and the objection which he states does not appear upon the face of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator's position is correct, I think later on I will withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator insist upon his objection?

Mr. POMERENE. I do insist upon my objection at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN GUNNISON COUNTY, COLO.

The bill (H. R. 20) authorizing the county of Gunnison, Colo., to purchase certain public lands for public park purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS FOR CEMETERY AND PARK PURPOSES.

The bill (H. R. 11162) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize entry of the public lands by incorporated cities and towns for cemetery and park purposes," approved September 30, 1890, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK, OREG.

The bill (H. R. 14868) to accept the cession by the State of Oregon of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Crater Lake National Park, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. INGLE.

The bill (S. 6331) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to William H. Ingle for homestead entry in Colorado was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That homestead entry 014316, Sterling series, made by William H. Ingle for the southeast quarter of section 5, township 1 north, range 49 west, sixth principal meridian, Colorado, be, and it is hereby, validated and permitted to remain intact, in the same manner as though said Ingle had not, in the year 1873, made a homestead entry for 160 acres and perfected title thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELISHA A. CRANDALL.

The bill (H. R. 7419) granting a patent to a certain strip of land to Elisha A. Crandall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Elisha A. Crandall a patent to a strip of land formerly occupied by the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. as a right of way and embraced within the homestead entry of the said Elisha A. Crandall to the east half of the southwest quarter and lots 6 and 7, section 6, township 56 north, range 2 east, Boise meridian, for which patent was issue to entryman on October 16, 1903, the said strip of land having been abandoned by the said Northern Pacific Railroad Co.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 15522) to establish a national park service, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, to strike out the words "Congress may from time to time provide for by appropriation or other act" and to insert "the Secretary of the Interior shall deem necessary," so as to read:

That there is hereby created in the Department of the Interior a service to be called the national-park service, which shall be under the charge of a director, who shall be appointed by the Secretary, and who shall receive a salary of $4,500 per annum. There shall also be appointed by the Secretary the following assistants and other employees at the salaries designated: One assistant director, at $2,500 per annum; one chief clerk, at $2,000 per annum; one draftsman, at $1,800 per annum; one messenger, at $600 per annum; and, in addition thereto, such other employees as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem necessary: Provided, That not more than $8,100 annually shall be expended for salaries of experts, assistants, and employees within the District of Columbia not herein specifically enumerated unless previously authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Utah if this is creating another bureau in one of the departments?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this bill is intended to do away with the appropriation of money to four or five different departments now for caring for the parks. It will save expense to the Government, and it will put the parks under one control. The bill ought to be passed. The way it is now, some of the parks are under the War Department, some are under the Interior Department, appropriations are made for other departments, and we can hardly keep track of the expenses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the bill in terms or in any way abolish the supervision that is now being exercised?

Mr. SMOOT. It places the supervision of all of the parks in the service. It is simply a service here in the Interior Department, and one head will direct the parks of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will that head have a corps of clerks?

Mr. SMOOT. We provide here—and there will not be nearly the expense attached to this that there is to-day—for appropriations, as the Senator knows, in the legislative appropriation bill and the sundry civil appropriation bill for the care of these parks and the payment of the employees in each of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. But those employees are already provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill and the money appropriated. Of course, they will not be disturbed, I take it.

Mr. SMOOT. After this bill passes they will either be placed under this bill or else the appropriation made for them will not be used. I assure the Senator that if I had the time now I could demonstrate to him that it will result in a saving of money to the Government of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. It doubtless will if the Senator's contention is right, that these officials will not continue in their present places and draw from the Government the money that has been already appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator that that will be the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I have nothing more to say.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Clerk read so fast that I could not understand the bill. I hope he will begin to read a little slower, so that I can understand what the bill provides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill again.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy for the Reading Clerk. I have often wondered how he stands up under the strain to which he is subjected, and I never have objected to the Clerk not reading the text, for instance, of appropriation bills; but I do think that when we are considering the calendar the bills ought to be read. My attention was attracted to the fact that this bill provided for a director—I believe that that is the title—and I wondered whether that man was going to perform all the duties of this bureau, because that is what it is; and had the Secretary read the bill, I perhaps would not have asked the question at all.

I am satisfied, Mr. President, that this is to be another great bureau in one of the departments, and if it does not grow to be as large a bureau as the Forestry Service I shall be disappointed. But I am an eastern man and am not supposed to interfere in western affairs, and for that reason I simply content myself with the suggestions I have made about the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I only want to be assured by the Senator from Utah, who has this measure in charge, as to the scope of the bill. As I understand, this only refers to the large western parks. I can see the few lines of section 2, but I wanted to be sure that it was not interfering with the parks in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not affect the parks in the District of Columbia at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It simply refers to the national parks now under the control of the Interior Department and the Hot Springs Reservation, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. It refers to the Yellowstone National Park, the Yosemite National Park, the Sequoia National Park, the Gen. Grant National Park, the Mount Rainier National Park, the Mesa Verde National Park, the Crater Lake National Park, the Wind Cave National Park, the Platt National Park, the Sullys Hill National Park, the Hot Springs Reservation, the Glacier National Park, and the Rocky Mountain National Park.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am much in favor of treating the parks of this city in a very similar way, so far as this area is concerned; but I wanted to be sure as to whether they were or were not included, so that I could examine the bill more carefully.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the director getting now?

Mr. SMOOT. The director is getting $4,500 at the present time. I will say that the department recommended that the amount be $5,000; but the committee have simply allowed him what he is drawing to-day.

Mr. OVERMAN. I remember that we had the matter up in another bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the Senator will remember that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, the question is, with one assistant director at $2,500, and other items making $8,100 provided for here, is that amount appropriated now in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. About that same amount, only this specifically states what their office shall be. The Senator will remember that the Secretary of the Interior recommended an appropriation of something like $12,100, as I remember, and we compromised on something like $8,000 for it. That is outside of the director's salary; and this simply specifically states the positions, and will take the place of the appropriation already made.

Mr. OVERMAN. Had you not better have a provision here that on the approval of this act the offices provided for in the legislative bill are abolished?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no necessity for it.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator thinks the Secretary of the Interior can take those men over into this bureau, if that is what it is—

Mr. SMOOT. I know that is just what he will do.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator knows that, then I have no more to say. I will rely on the Senator, who says he knows it will be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I do know it; and I know that it is just exactly what the Secretary of the Interior intends to do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, is the bill under consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have an amendment that I want to propose to the bill, if it is now subject to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection has been made to its consideration up to this time. Consequently the bill is now being considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move to strike out the proviso in section 3, on page 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations and on such terms as he may prescribe, grant the privilege to graze live stock within any national park, monument, or reservation herein referred to when in his judgment such use is not detrimental to the primary purpose for which such park, monument, or reservation was created.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know whether the grazing privileges are granted at the present time or not, but I think they are. I am perfectly willing, however, to accept the amendment and allow it to go to conference, and then we shall see exactly to what extent the privilege is granted now.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not want it to go with that consideration. I have special reference to the Yellowstone National Park. The Yellowstone National Park is the habitat of wild game which is being attempted to be very carefully preserved. The only grazing privilege they are now allowed is a grazing privilege of some acreage allowed to certain transportation companies, and the mere picnic privilege of campers; but I do not want a provision in here that will allow the Yellowstone National Park to become a grazing ground of great sheep and cattle industries, as would be allowed by this provision.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing that it shall go out, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. Does the Senator intend that the system of leasing lands within these parks shall be abolished?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no system of leasing lands within the parks.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Within the national forests, I mean.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, this has no reference to the national forests. This has reference only to the national parks.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator know whether any grazing privileges are extended within any of the national parks?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can only answer as to the Yellowstone Park; and, as I understand it, the privilege there is as I have already indicated.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall not make any objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe there ought to be any grazing in the Yellowstone Park.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope when this bill goes into conference it will be so arranged that there will not be any indiscriminate grazing in the national parks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the suggestion that some Senator made strikes me with great force—that we ought to provide for the transfer of these officials. I think that has been our custom heretofore. Here are certain men appropriated for in the sundry civil act. They are performing, I suppose, substantially the same service that will be required of them if this bill should pass; but in this bill we are providing for another force, and I know of no reason why the Secretary of the Interior, unless he chose to do so, should transfer those men.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we are not appropriating a dollar in this bill. We are not asking for the appropriation of a dollar. We are simply providing for those positions, and they will be appropriated for in the next sundry civil bill or the next legislative bill, just as in the case of other positions. I will say to the Senator that if we were appropriating the money in this bill, it would be a different thing; but we are not. We are just naming the positions. I simply said to the Senator from North Carolina that the positions named here will take no more money than we have already appropriated for the work that is being done now, and not quite so much.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps that is so, Mr. President, but I never have discovered that there is any reduction in the force in any of the departments of the Government, no matter what we do here; and I shall be very greatly disappointed if we do not find that we will have an added force if this bill passes. However, I shall not raise an objection to it. I have said all I care to say about it. I believe it is going to be a great bureau in the near future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ESTATE OF MARY H. S. ROBERTSON, DECEASED.

The bill (H. R. 12248) for the relief of the estate of Mary H. S. Robertson, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator reporting this bill to explain it more in detail than it is explained in the report made by him to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is called upon by the Senator from Utah to explain the bill.

Mr. BECKHAM. The report accompanying the bill contains the substantial facts in the case. It is a House bill and came before the Committee on Claims and was considered there and favorably acted upon.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims if this is one of the thousands of claims that have come before the committee for the occupation of property during the Civil War.

Mr. BRYAN. The report of the House committee shows clearly what it is. It says:

This is a claim for rent of a dwelling situated in Paducah, Ky., from September 10, 1861, to October 8, 1865, by the United States forces under the command of and used by Brig. Gen. Lew Wallace as his headquarters from September 10, 1861, till about the time of the Fort Donelson fight, in February, 1862. As soon as he vacated it it was taken by the military authorities in command of the post at Paducah, and occupied and used by them as a convalescent hospital continuously up to the 8th day of October, 1865.

It seems, therefore, there is no doubt but that Gen. Wallace and other authorities did take the building and agree to pay rent for it, which has never been done. In that respect it differs very widely from the general run of the cases which have been before the Committee on Claims for the use and occupation of property.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee has generally referred these bills to the department and asked for a report from the department. In this case was that followed?

Mr. BRYAN. The House report states that the case had been investigated by the Third Auditor and that—

There is sufficient evidence upon which to imply a contract to pay rent in this case.

Mr. SMOOT. The department does not recommend the payment of it, nor does it say anything that involves the justice of the claim.

Mr. BRYAN. The report shows the fact that it was investigated by the Third Auditor.

Mr. BECKHAM. It was approved by the quartermaster and then went to the Third Auditor and he allowed the amount, but for some reason the comptroller disallowed it. The House report states that a thorough investigation was made of all the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. If the chairman of the committee says this is differentiated from the thousands of claims that come here and have been pressed here for the last 45 years for property occupied during the Civil War, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; the War Department reports that Gen. Wallace did take charge of this building in 1861, and that it was not returned to the owner until 1865. Undoubtedly they used the building for over four years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, what puzzles me about this claim is how it escaped the scrutiny of these diligent attorneys who are looking after these claims and presenting them here in the form of an omnibus bill from time to time. This seems to have escaped them in some way.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that is true about this. Those people get hold of a claim and sit down, and if Congress passes it, then they claim that they did it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not anything in the report which states whether the claim has been paid before or not. The department does not say anything whatever in relation to it. It seems to me that it is very loosely reported.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator has not read the report in the Fifty-fifth Congress. The committee was governed largely by the fact that the members of the House committee in their report say:

The claim is proved beyond a shadow of a doubt.

Mr. SMOOT. As the Senator knows, the House committee is passing all kinds of claims bills now. I think there have been more that have come to the Senate from the House thus passed by the House this year than perhaps there have been in the last 12 years.

Mr. BRYAN. Most of them are on the calendar, and most of them are claims for injuries that have been suffered by people in the employment of the Government, revenue agents who have been killed in the discharge of their duties, and cases like that.

Mr. SMOOT. Those ought to be paid.

Mr. BRYAN. I believe a good many of those bills have gone to other committees. The Committee on Claims sat for three or four hours some two or three weeks ago and went very carefully through the House bills that appear on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to object to this bill, but I wish to ask the Senator from Florida, the chairman of the committee, a question. Near the close of the last session we had an omnibus claims bill paying a long list of claims for occupation and damage by the Federal forces to property in the South. That was a House bill. At the same time we had a bill reported from the committee to pay overtime claims for employees in the navy yards and other similar occupations. The Senator and I had a little colloquy about it, and the Senator gave me to understand that that bill would be taken care of at this session. The bill passed at the close of the last session, but it was a Senate bill. I reintroduced that bill some time ago, and it is in the Committee on Claims. I will ask the Senator if he has given attention to that bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I noticed that when the calendar was up last the Senator from New Hampshire made a statement with reference to the overtime pay cases. The Senator read a statement from the RECORD, in which I assured the Senator that the bill would be taken up. The Senator said it was at a time nearing the close of the session, perhaps nearer the close of the session than this time. Mr. President, it was on the afternoon before Congress adjourned when the Senator asked me that question. However, the bill was taken up that night and it passed the Senate.

So I do not know what purpose the Senator had in view in reading that into the RECORD. The bill has not been reported upon by the committee at this session.

Mr. GALLINGER. When I made the statement on the former occasion I overlooked the fact that the bill had been passed. I knew what the southern Senators had done. I have since ascertained what I did not know, that it passed the Senate, but that did not do any good.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator read from the RECORD a statement I made and seemed to draw the conclusion from that statement that I had not kept my word with him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not mean to say that. I meant to say the bill had not been reported at this session.

Mr. President, we are passing a great many private bills, it is true, for claims. As the Senator from Utah says, there have been a great many more at this session than usual, and inasmuch as that bill was reported at the last session and passed the Senate there seems from my viewpoint to be no reason why it should not be reported again.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not want to take up time unnecessarily, but since the Senator has raised that question I wish to make a statement. Those claims are known as overtime pay claims in the navy yard. They are technically claims. They originally arose from this state of facts: Men in port claimed that they were on sea duty; that they were on the ship. The result here depends on the constitution of the committee. Sometimes the committee believe that they ought to be paid and sometimes a majority of the committee have been opposed to them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator misunderstands the bill I have reference to. It is not the difference between land and sea pay. There is a list of those.

Mr. BRYAN. It is overtime pay in navy yards?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is claims for overtime in the navy yards, largely.

Mr. BRYAN. The Court of Claims passed on those claims and found the facts, what amount would come to each of these individuals if overtime payment was made. It was a simple finding of facts. My recollection is that two Congresses ago the majority of the committee were opposed to the payment of the claims included in that omnibus bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. How could they be when they had been found by the Court of Claims to be just claims?

Mr. BRYAN. They had not been found by the Court of Claims to be just claims. The Court of Claims found the fact that if we paid for overtime the men had performed so much overtime work and would be entitled to so much pay, and that is what the court held. But I was stating the fact that four years ago the majority of the committee were opposed to the payment of the claims. New members came upon the committee, old members went off, and last year or the year before a majority were in favor of the payment of the claims. This year, as far as I know, they have not been submitted.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator perhaps did not understand my question. I hope the Senator has not changed his view as to the legality of those claims and the propriety of paying them, because he reported the bill last year, and I simply ask the Senator that they be taken up for consideration by the committee at this session.

Mr. BRYAN. So far as I know they have not been taken up. The Senator knows that I have not been here continuously this year. We have had a good many taken off the calendar since I returned, and mostly they have been urgent matters. When the Senate meets at 10 o'clock the Committee on Claims can not meet weekly, as it has been accustomed to do. It is impossible to get the members there. We have devoted our attention to emergency bills, such as are found on the calendar to-day, bills where a revenue officer has been killed in the discharge of his duty, and bills of that character.

Mr. GALLINGER. Most of the men who worked overtime and whose claims have been practically recognized by the Court of Claims think their claims are emergency matters. I simply wondered why it is that we are passing one character of claims and not another; that is all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF HECTOR M. McDONALD.

The bill (H. R. 6758) for the relief of the legal heirs of Hector M. McDonald, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to M. J. Haynes, public administrator of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, as administrator of the estate of Hector M. McDonald, deceased, for and on account of the legal heirs of said deceased, the sum of $261.20, taken from the body of said Hector M. McDonald, deceased, and deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States with the First National Bank of Juneau, Alaska, on May 16, 1908, and subsequently covered into the Treasury of the United States by miscellaneous warrant No. 2083, fourth quarter of 1908.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM D. ALLEN.

The bill (H. R. 2052) for the relief of the estate of William D. Allen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal heirs of William D. Allen, deceased, of Oswego, N. Y., $320, for work performed in the release and rescue of the lighthouse tender Hare.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMSHIP "ESPARTA."

The bill (S. 3681) for the relief of the owners of the steamship Esparta was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "authority," to strike out the words "to ascertain the amount of the said damages and to enter judgment in favor of the owners of said steamship Esparta for the same," and insert "to determine the liability of the United States therefor; and, if found liable, to render judgment against the United States for any damages sustained by the owners of said steamship Esparta," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the British steamship Esparta against the United States for damages sustained by them in and on account of the collision between their said vessel and the United States lighthouse tender Magnolia on October 26, 1905, in the Passes of the Mississippi River, below New Orleans, be referred to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, with jurisdiction and authority to determine the liability of the United States therefor, and, if found liable, to render judgment against the United States for any damages sustained by the owners of said steamship Esparta.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ENLARGEMENT OF BOTANIC GARDEN.

The bill (S. 6227) to increase the area of the United States Botanic Garden in the city of Washington, D. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Library, with an amendment in section 2, page 2, line 4, after the word "thereof," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the location of conservatories and other improvements of a permanent character which may be built within said parcels shall be confined to areas not intended as the site for future public buildings and driveways in the plan for that vicinity prepared by the park commission.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Botanic Garden, situated in the city of Washington, D. C., be, and the same is hereby, increased and enlarged by attaching thereto those two certain parcels of land situated, lying and being between Third Street on the east and Sixth Street on the west, and Missouri Avenue on the north and Maine Avenue on the south, which said parcels are known as East Seaton Park and West Seaton Park.

SEC. 2. That said two described parcels shall upon the passage of this act become part and parcel of the said United States Botanic Garden and immediately available for the purposes thereof: Provided, That the location of conservatories and other improvements of a permanent character which may be built within said parcels shall be confined to areas not intended as the sites for future public buildings and driveways in the plan for that vicinity prepared by the park commission.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. JONES. That does not change the Botanic Garden? It is simply an enlargement of the present location?

Mr. GALLINGER. It simply takes in two little ragged parks that are of no use and are owned by the Government.

Mr. JONES. That is all right.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator if it takes in any buildings?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all; it takes in no buildings of any description.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONNERS BROS.

The next business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 232) referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 5656) for the relief of Milton C. Conners and George G. Conners, doing business under the firm name of Conners Bros., and by unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the view of the presidential nominee of a great party upon so vital a question as suffrage is not only of importance to this body but to the whole country. A complete understanding of such view is essential at this time in the consideration of political issues and conditions by reason of the fact that there is pending in Congress a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, generally called the Susan B. Anthony amendment, intended to grant equal suffrage to the women in all of the States of the Union. Similar amendments have been introduced and have been voted upon at prior Congresses. Such amendment can not become a part of our Constitution and operative until it passes Congress by a two-thirds vote and is ratified by the vote of the legislatures of three-fourths of all the States. So far no such amendment has received the necessary vote of Congress to entitle it to be submitted to the States. Under these circumstances, as representatives of the people in the legislative body before which such amendment is pending, it is our duty to inquire most diligently with regard to the present view of each presidential nominee and his intended attitude toward such legislation in the event of his election.

What is Mr. Hughes's view with regard to woman suffrage? With due respect and in all seriousness I ask this question of those Republican Senators upon this floor who were instrumental in obtaining Mr. Hughes's nomination and who participated in the preparation of his platform. Does he stand upon his declaration made upon the 31st day of July in his speech of acceptance of the nomination or upon his declaration contained in his telegram sent to Senator SUTHERLAND on the 1st day of August? In his speech of acceptance he said, "I indorse the declaration in the platform in favor of woman suffrage." Such declaration in the Republican platform is set forth in the following words:

The Republican Party, reaffirming its faith in government of the people, by the people, for the people, as a measure of justice to one-half the adult people of the country, favors the extension of the suffrage to women, but recognizes the right of each State to settle this question for itself.

So Mr. Hughes, in indorsing that declaration in the platform, declares that he "recognizes the right of each State to determine this question for itself." This is a positive and definite declaration of his view as held by him on the 31st day of July. It is an emphatic declaration against the granting of woman suffrage by the passage of the Susan B. Anthony amendment or by any other Federal action. No other construction was intended by the framers of that plank in the platform, and it is not subject to any other construction. Will Senator BORAH, who prepared the plank and submitted it to the subcommittee of the platform committee, give it any other construction? Will Senator LODGE, the chairman of the platform committee, who presented such platform to the Republican convention, give it any other construction? Did not Mr. Hughes know at the time that he made such declaration that those who prepared and submitted that plank were and had always been most intensely antagonistic to the Susan B. Anthony amendment and to every effort to grant woman suffrage through Federal amendment to the Constitution of the United States or through any other Federal action? Was he not aware that the direct issue was made before the Republican platform committee between those who favored a Federal amendment to the Constitution, those who favored suffrage through the action of each State, and those who were bitterly opposed to the granting of woman suffrage through any methods? Did he not know that that issue was determined in favor of those favoring State rights and against those contending for Federal action? As a well-informed public man we have a right to assume that he was familiar with the great debates in the Halls of Congress upon this burning issue, but if he was not he should have informed himself with regard to the party construction of such plank before he unequivocally indorsed it. He would only have had to turn to the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read the speeches of those who prepared, submitted, and adopted such plank.

Senator BORAH, in a speech made in the United States Senate upon such subject on the 17th day of March, 1904, in quoting from a prior address given by him before a committee of women of Baltimore, said:

I informed your committee, when asked to speak upon this occasion, that I would be glad to take part in this meeting, provided it did not commit me to the proposition of the proposed amendment to the Constitution now pending before Congress. I am an earnest advocate of woman suffrage, but I believe it to be both inexpedient and unwise to attempt to secure it otherwise than through the respective States.

And again in said speech, for the purpose of emphasizing his unalterable opposition to the Susan B. Anthony amendment, or any other action by the Federal Government looking to the granting of woman suffrage, said:

But there is another reason—and it is even a more controlling reason to me, because it goes to what I conceive the very foundation principles of the Republic—and that is the old doctrine, discarded and worn, but vital and indispensable, the doctrine of State rights for local affairs. I can not conceive of a State, or anything of sufficient dignity to be called a State, which has lost the right to say who shall vote for its State officer.

And again in the same speech he said:

So, Mr. President, this joint resolution does not stand upon the question of woman suffrage. The minute you leave the States and thrust the campaign for equal suffrage into the national domain the women of this country take upon themselves the race question; they take upon themselves these complicated problems which arise by reason of conditions upon the Pacific slope; they take upon themselves numerous propositions wholly dissociated and divorced from the woman-suffrage question itself. Why do so?

In view of the foregoing statements by Mr. BORAH, could Mr. Hughes have had any doubt at the time he indorsed the plank prepared by Mr. BORAH as to its meaning relative to the national amendment?

"The right of each State to settle this question for itself" is not compatible with the right to settle the question through Federal action. If Federal action is taken, if the Susan B. Anthony amendment be passed by Congress and submitted to the States, the right of each State to settle the question for itself may be destroyed, because by such method three-fourths of the States could grant woman-suffrage in all the States, including the one-fourth of the States which might have voted against woman-suffrage. The plank expressly and clearly demands that each State be permitted to settle the question for itself and not one for another.

So Mr. Hughes, on the 31st day of July, in his speech of acceptance of the Republican nomination, declared against woman suffrage by Federal amendment. This would terminate the question had not Mr. Hughes on August 1, the day following his speech of acceptance, made another declaration upon the subject directly opposed to his former declaration. In a telegram to Senator SUTHERLAND, of Utah, on the 1st day of August, Mr. Hughes stated his views on the suffrage question in the following words:

Your telegram has been received. In my answer to the notification I did not refer to the proposed Federal amendment relating to woman suffrage, as this was not mentioned in the platform. I have no objection, however, to stating my personal views. As I said in my speech, I think it to be most desirable that the question of woman suffrage should be settled promptly. The question is of such a nature that it should be settled for the entire country.

My view is that the proposed amendment should be submitted and ratified and the subject removed from political discussion.

Here he states most emphatically, "My view is that the proposed amendment should be submitted and ratified and the subject removed from political discussion," and yet on the prior day he said, in indorsing the plank in the platform, "The Republican Party * * * recognizes the right of each State to settle this question for itself."

It is possible that Senator BORAH, who prepared the plank, or Senator LODGE, who submitted it to the convention, may have discussed this matter with Mr. Hughes since these conflicting declarations were made, and they may be prepared on his behalf to state which view the distinguished gentleman now holds and what view will govern him if he should be elected. While the people have a right to know which view Mr. Hughes now maintains, the most important question is, "What would Mr. Hughes do with regard to such suffrage amendment if he should be elected President?" Would Mr. Hughes in his first message to Congress urge the passage of the Federal amendment providing for equal suffrage? Would he use his influence with the leaders of his party to bring about the early passage of the Federal amendment?

If his last declaration is a correct expression of his views, would he, in the event of his election to the Presidency, use the power of his office to impress his views upon the Republican Members of Congress or would he submit to the views of his party publicly expressed in the platform in opposition to any Federal action with regard to suffrage? If he should pursue the latter course, he would be no more helpful in the passage of the Federal amendment than President Wilson, because President Wilson has never attempted to impose his personal view with regard to woman suffrage upon the members of his party, but, on the contrary, he has always maintained that it is a matter for individual determination. Will Mr. Hughes speak on behalf of the Federal amendment for equal suffrage during the coming campaign? If he should be elected and should thereafter say to those who favor equal suffrage by Federal amendment to the Constitution, "I still personally favor such amendment, but my party, in the platform upon which I was nominated, has declared it to be the policy of the Republican Party that such matter is not a subject for national legislation, but must be determined by each State for itself, and I am bound by that party declaration," the cause of national suffrage would be worse off than it is at the present time.

I respectfully submit that the American people are entitled to a definite and final statement by Mr. Hughes with regard to these matters.

During the delivery of Mr. PITTMAN's speech,

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

Mr. PITTMAN. I decline to yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I call for the regular order. We are on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no way for the Chair to determine whether the Senator from Nevada is discussing the resolution under consideration or not. For that reason the Chair does not feel at liberty to restrain him from speaking.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, we are on the calendar under Rule VIII and we are limited to five minutes' debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has not been speaking for five minutes yet.

After the conclusion of Mr. PITTMAN's speech,

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I was unable to hear all that was said by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and I am not sure whether or not he declared himself to be in favor of the Susan B. Anthony constitutional amendment. I believe the Senator represents a State that has granted suffrage to women, and I should like to ask him whether or not he is in favor of that amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask that the next bill on the calendar be stated, so that something may be before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the next bill on the calendar be laid before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is, if the matter which was last before the Senate has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a resolution, and it was agreed to. There is now nothing before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the next bill in order on the calendar be stated.

FARMER'S STATE BANK OF EUREKA, ILL.

The bill (H. R. 8630) for the relief of the Farmers' State Bank of Eureka, Woodford County, Ill., was announced as next in order, and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Farmers' State Bank of Eureka, Woodford County, Ill., $200, in full compensation for claims on account of the loss of revenue stamps purchased and paid for by said bank and which were lost in the United States mails in transmission of the same from the office of the collector of internal revenue at Springfield, Ill., to Eureka, Woodford County, Ill.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California. Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have submitted my question to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. In reply to the question of the Senator from California, I will state that I intend to vote for the Susan B. Anthony amendment.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator from Nevada know whether or not it is the intention of the majority to bring up the resolution before the Senate for action during the present session of Congress?

Mr. PITTMAN. I know that the joint resolution is in charge of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who introduced it in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no.

Mr. PITTMAN. At least, I so supposed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has it in charge upon the floor, I believe.

Mr. PITTMAN. The joint resolution was introduced by the Senator from Utah; and if I have done him an injustice in saying that he had charge of it, I, of course, withdraw the suggestion. I naturally supposed, however, that, having introduced it, he had charge of it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Colorado is the chairman of the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. WORKS. The Democratic caucus has been determining from time to time what bills and resolutions shall be taken up during the remainder of this session. My question was whether or not it was the intention to include this joint resolution among the number?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think it is the intention of the Democrats—although I am hardly in a position to speak for the Democrats on this side of the Chamber—to pass, if possible, all the bills upon the calendar.

Mr. WORKS. That is, it is the desire of the Senator himself that the joint resolution shall be brought to a vote?

Mr. PITTMAN. It would be my desire to bring it up, if it could be disposed of and passed. I will state for the benefit of the Senator that quite a while back some of the western Senators who favor the Susan B. Anthony amendment held a meeting, which was attended by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt and others who desire an early vote on the matter; and those Senators who were present, including myself—I do not know whether the Senator from California was there or not—favored early action upon the amendment.

There is another very powerful element of the advocates of woman suffrage who are opposing the bringing up of this amendment at this time. Miss Anne Martin, who is chairman, I believe, of the Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage, has written to me, and has written to other Senators within my knowledge, urging that this matter be not brought up at the present time. So there is no unanimity with regard to the time that the measure should be acted on. Personally I should like to see it passed promptly.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Nevada is himself in favor of the proposed constitutional amendment; and, whatever may be the differences to which he has referred amongst the women, has the Senator made any effort to have the matter brought up in any form either before the Democratic steering committee or elsewhere?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I have been discussing it recently with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who is the chairman of the committee, and other individual members of the committee.

Mr. WORKS. But, Mr. President, the joint resolution of which I am speaking is on the calendar, and I ask what disposition there is to take it up and vote upon it?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that a number of the western Senators—I do not remember whether or not the Senator from California was present—agreed to attempt to get a unanimous consent agreement that this matter might be voted on without debate, but I do not know whether or not that has been accomplished.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator know whether any effort of that kind has been made on the other side of the Chamber?

Mr. PITTMAN. I presume the Senator from Colorado, the chairman of the committee, can answer that question.

Mr. WORKS. The chairman of the committee can answer.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I was unaware, until notified in committee, that this subject was before the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. That is hardly an accurate statement.

Mr. THOMAS. And it is suggested to me now by the Senator from Florida that it is not before the Senate. So, perhaps, my assumption is an improper one; but, responding to the inquiry of the Senator from California, which was made since I entered the Chamber, I may say to him that some two or three weeks ago I addressed a letter to each Senator asking if he would consent to the taking up of this amendment and submitting it to a vote without argument. The responses which I have received have been about equal in number in consenting and objecting to the proposed method of procedure. Consequently, I have neither said nor done anything further about it.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator—

Mr. THOMAS. The national association was favorable to that disposition of it; indeed, I made the inquiry at the request of one of its officers. I have been informed that the Congressional Union opposed the suggestion; but that is a matter of hearsay.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator whether it is not true that the bill can not be taken up during this session of Congress without action either by the steering committee or by the Democratic caucus?

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, we seem to be considering it, and we certainly have transacted a good deal of business recently with which the steering committee has had no concern. I do not know just what is before the Senate now.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill before the Senate now is House bill 8630, for the relief of the Farmers' State Bank of Eureka, Woodford County, Ill.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I might have known it was not the amendment, because here everything seems to be in order except the subject matter under discussion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield in just a moment; but I will say to the Senator from California—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But just for a question; that is all.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I will yield in a moment. I will say to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] that, so far as I am concerned, I am prepared to take up the joint resolution at any time; although, of course, I am unable to displace the unfinished business of the Senate. I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator has answered the question which I sought to ask; but I hope the Senator will take an early time so that the sentiment of the Senate can be had as to whether or not this legislation should be passed at this session.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt, since the confession of faith of the Republican candidate for President of the United States has been made, that Senators upon the other side who were opposed to the legislation not only have been converted to his view but that they will unite with a commendable unanimity in taking it up and voting for it. If so, I will do my best to cooperate with them.

Senator SMOOT. Regular order!

Mr. WORKS. Perhaps the Senator from Colorado did not hear or was not aware of the fact, that this matter was not brought up this time by a Republican, but came from the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, I was not aware of that, and consequently my remark may have been inappropriate, in so far as the occasion is concerned; but, independently of the occasion, I still indulge in the hope that the influence upon the Republican Senators of their nominee will be manifest in an increase of votes for the amendment when it does come up. But I doubt it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope you will give us a chance to act upon it quickly.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. 8630) for the relief of the Farmers' State Bank of Eureka, Woodford County, Ill., is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN CURRAN.

The bill (H. R. 8141) for the relief of the dependent widow of Patrick Curran, civilian employee of the Government, who was killed while in the discharge of his duties at the United States naval magazine at Iona Island, N. Y., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $624 to Ellen Curran, of Haverstraw, N. Y., the dependent widow of Patrick Curran, civilian employee of the Government, who was killed while in the discharge of his duties on the 4th of November, 1903, at the United States naval magazine on Iona Island, in the Hudson River, N. Y., by the explosion of gunpowder and 13-inch shell, without his fault or negligence.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. W. FINN.

The bill (H. R. 14528) for the relief of W. W. Finn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to W. W. Finn, of Wesley, Iowa, $177.83, to compensate him for the loss by burglary of certain war-revenue emergency stamps of which he was custodian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED HENDERSON.

The bill (H. R. 10641) for the relief of Fred Henderson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Fred Henderson the sum of $43.75, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for injury sustained on the 16th day of September, in the year 1906, while employed by the United States Government in the Government arsenal at Rock Island, Ill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE BOARD OF HARBOR COMMISSIONERS, CALIFORNIA.

The bill (H. R. 5453) for the relief of the State Board of Harbor Commissioners of the State of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $199.62 to the State Board of Harbor Commissioners of the State of California, for the purpose of reimbursing the said State Board of Harbor Commissioners for repairing damages to Piers Nos. 15 and 27, in the city of San Francisco, Cal., caused by the steamship Angel Island, of the United States Immigration Service, on August 8, 1911, and on August 17, 1911, respectively.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THEODORE BAGGE.

The bill (H. R. 10643) for the relief of Theodore Bagge, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Theodore Bagge the sum of $221.91, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for injury sustained on the 24th day of April, in the year 1907, while employed by the United States Government on the U. S. dredge Ajax.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK J. DEUTSCH.

The bill (H. R. 1777) for the relief of Frank J. Deutsch, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Frank J. Deutsch, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, in full settlement of all claims of any nature whatsoever that the said Frank J. Deutsch may have against the United States Government for injuries sustained while employed in the Coast Guard at Sturgeon Bay, Wis.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN E. JONES.

The bill (H. R. 9898) for the relief of John E. Jones, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has been reported adversely.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

W. W. WALL.

The bill (H. R. 1373) for the relief of W. W. Wall was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has also been reported adversely.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill be not acted upon in the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. Just let it go over to-day upon objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AUSTIN G. TAINTER.

The bill (H. R. 2638) for the relief of Austin G. Tainter was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has been reported adversely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over until I can look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN DOWD.

The bill (S. 6013) to confirm the entry of John Dowd was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the words "price of," to strike out the numerals "$200" and insert "$184.83," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue United States Government patent on the homestead entry of John Dowd, known as Boise 06054, for the following-described land:

Lot 5 of section 34, township 3 north, range 4 west, and lots 2 and 3 and southeast quarter of northwest quarter, section 3, township 2 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian, Boise land district, Idaho, containing 147.86 acres: Provided, That the said John Dowd or his transferee shall pay to the United States Government the commutation price of $184.83.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION, LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. 4811) to establish a fish-cultural station at some point in the State of Louisiana, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EMMETT W. ENTRIKEN.

The bill (S. 1548) for the relief of Emmett W. Entriken, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emmett W. Entriken the sum of $250, in full compensation for injuries received by him on September 26, 1913, while employed as a painter at the Salem Indian school, Chemawa, Oreg.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. HEFFNER.

The bill (H. R. 11984) for the relief of William E. Heffner, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William E. Heffner, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $525, being the amount of money due said William E. Heffner for the construction of a barracks and bathhouse at West Lawn Cemetery, Canton, Ohio.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH HATCHERY, DELAWARE.

The bill (S. 4970) to establish a fish hatchery in the State of Delaware, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

M. E. SITTERS.

The bill (H. R. 8200) for the relief of M. E. Sitters, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to M. E. Sitters, widow of Joe Sitters, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,095 as compensation to her for the loss of her husband, who, on the 24th day of May, 1915, while in discharge of his official duties as a mounted inspector of the United States customs service in Presidio County, Tex., was assassinated by Mexican bandits.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries, to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OLIVER. Let that bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. That bill ought to go over, unless our friends on the other side of the Chamber are willing that we should indefinitely postpone it. I do not know how that may be.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not believe there is any disposition of that sort.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is willing that it should go over?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am willing that it should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

The bill (S. 6626) to fix the rate of pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that from and after the date of its passage the pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office shall be at the rate of 55 cents per hour.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MANIFESTS OF VESSELS.

The bill (S. 5395) to repeal sections 2588, 2589, and 2590 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Oregon, who introduced the bill, tell us exactly what those repealed statutes include.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, that bill is one which repeals the statutes which require all inbound vessels coming into the mouth of the Columbia River, although they may be destined for the port of Portland some 110 miles above, to make a stop at the first port of entry, which is Astoria. The customhouse officials have requested that the bill be passed, and the Secretary of the Treasury has indorsed it. I want to say also, for the information of the Senate, that the people of Astoria are bitterly opposed to the passage of the bill. There is no question about that. It has been recommended, however, by the Treasury Department as being a matter in the line of economy. It saves expense and saves the time of the steamers.

Mr. GALLINGER. That word "Astoria" always appealed to me—it is so euphonious. I ask that the bill go over for to-day, and I will look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

THE FUTURE OF CULEBRA (S. DOC. NO. 525).

The resolution (S. Res. 235) to print the manuscript entitled "Are Subterranean Gases Cause of Panama Canal Slides?" by Hon. Thomas Kearns, as a Senate document, with illustrations, was considered by the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "with illustrations" in the sixth line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "document," it is proposed to strike out the words "with illustrations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. WARREN) on June 22, 1916, entitled "Are Subterranean Gases Cause of Panama Canal Slides?" by Hon. Thomas Kearns, former United States Senator from Utah, be printed as a Senate document.

MARTIN HUHN.

The bill (H. R. 1528) for the relief of Martin Huhn, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, with an amendment, in line 9, after the words "the sum of," to strike out the numerals "$100" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the bill had better go over. It is a very large increase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey subsequently said: Mr. President—I understand that through my negligence in not being present—I was called out of the Chamber for a moment—House bill 1528, for the relief of Martin Huhn, was passed over under objection. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that bill for the purpose of having it considered. I trust there will be no objection. If there ever was an emergency measure, I feel that that is one.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry regarding this bill?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. This bill was passed for $100, as I understand, in the House.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes; and it was amended in the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. And amended for $1,000.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENROSE. That is an extraordinary increase.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is.

Mr. PENROSE. Did these injuries suddenly become more serious between the time when the bill was in the House and the time it came up in the Senate?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will answer the Senator and state the situation.

This man—a young man, I should think, about 35 or 40 years old—is an employee of the Post Office Department in Hoboken, N. J. He was in the regular service there, in the employ of the Government. It was the regulation and rule that the flag on the post office should be taken down at night. Through somebody's failure the flag was not taken down. This young man was ordered by the assistant postmaster to go up and take down this flag at night. He went up to the third or fourth floor, whatever it is. Between the fourth floor and the roof is an attic, that compelled him to go in a stooping position. It was dark in the attic, and in his effort to reach around to the scuttle and ascend the three or four little steps to secure the flag an iron rod poked out, about 3 feet long, connected with the scuttle, unguarded and left without any notice or admonition in any way; and as the poor fellow was groping around it struck his right eye, and, of course, he was wild with pain. I believe, however, he did succeed in hauling down the flag. He was immediately, when he came down, taken to the eye-and-ear hospital in the close vicinity, and the result of the accident was that his eye was so injured and punctured that the eyeball was taken out. He suffered excruciating agony for months, and the result is that to-day the man has but one eye.

I saw him myself possibly a month or three weeks ago. He has substituted a glass eye. It is his right eye. I asked him if he suffered any pain from the removal of the eyeball. He said not so much in that eye as in the other one. The other one was compelled to do double duty, and he said that shooting pains went through it continually, and he was in very great distress. Then I asked him if, aside from that, it interfered with his duties, and he said: "You can tell by placing your hand over one eye whether it would interfere with performing your duties or not."

Now, it seems to me that, as this accident happened while this man was in the service of the Government, in the performance of his duty, and entirely within his sphere, the passage of this bill for the amount stated in the amendment is but simple justice. He was ill for some three or four months; I can not say just which. It seems to me it is entirely within the right and province of the Government, and within the lines of justice, that the great Government of the United States should give this man a thousand dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the injured man was retained on the roll and is still on the roll and performing his duty. I objected because I wanted to look into it a little. I find that the postmaster has written a letter saying that he thinks this man ought to have $500. If the Senator agrees to that, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, Mr. President, I feel that it is an inadequate amount, when I think of how little compensation it would be to me or to either of us in the event of the loss of an eye. This man is on the roll and he is still performing his duties. It is his only source of livelihood, his bread and butter. So might I perform my duties here with one eye. There are Senators that can perform their duties with none.

Mr. PENROSE. As long as the Senator has his voice he does not need his eyes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, it does not make any odds. I need both. I will accept the $500, but I think even $5,000 would be an utterly inadequate amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend by striking out "$1,000" and inserting "$500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, in line 9, it is proposed to strike out the numerals "$1,000" and insert "$500." The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment as amended was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ALBERT GREENLAW.

The bill (H. R. 2180) for the relief of Albert Greenlaw was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to credit the accounts of Albert Greenlaw, postmaster at Eastport, Me., in the sum of $3,378.02, due the United States on account of post-office funds embezzled by Ernest A. Farris, assistant at the Eastport (Me.) post office during several years, ending December, 1912: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be taken as releasing any other person or persons from liability to the United States on account of said embezzlements or in any manner affecting such liabilities.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that bill was passed so quickly that I did not realize it. I move to reconsider the vote whereby it was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. BRYAN. As there is no member of the committee present, I ask that the bill go over. I see that the Post Office Department reports against the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

C. HORATIO SCOTT.

The bill (H. R. 4559) for the relief of C. Horatio Scott was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the bill, is it not, that the Senator asked to have go over?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not object to its consideration.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator who reported the bill is not present. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CLAYTON H. ADAMS.

The bill (S. 10) to correct the military record of Clayton H. Adams, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Clayton H. Adams, who served in the Mississippi Marine Brigade, an organization drawn from the Fifty-ninth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of the Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry on or about the 1st day of March, 1863: Provided, That no pay nor bounty shall accrue or become payable by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if he has any knowledge of any Senate bills correcting the records of soldiers similar to this having passed the other House?

Mr. WARREN. The Senate bills the House has not passed—that is, a large number of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Have they passed any of them?

Mr. WARREN. In a late conversation I was promised that there will be action taken on as many of them as they can deal with in the condition in which they are.

Mr. GALLINGER. The reason why I asked the question is that for three or four years I have been trying to get through a similar bill meritorious in every respect, but it is ignored. I have passed one through the Senate at this session—a most worthy bill—but it is lost somewhere; and yet these House bills come here in quantities, and we pass them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that this is a Senate bill, and will undoubtedly reinforce his contention when it goes over there.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope it will pass, then. I will not object to the House bills, but I thought it was proper to call attention to the fact that this is rather a jug-handled performance as far as this kind of a bill is concerned.

Mr. WARREN. I am very glad the Senator called the matter to the attention of the Senate as he has done. We have had to struggle with that situation for some years, and we ought to take some action to force through in another body the measures that are passed here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if this man ever enlisted.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; he was a man who enlisted, and he was detailed to other service. He was found to be a good carpenter and was put at carpenter work. Consequently there is a lapse in his record in the department, but it has been made good by his fellows who served with him, and a clear case has been made.

Mr. BRYAN. He has what the department says is a record service.

Mr. WARREN. That is the old record; that is true. He is a man whom I know personally, and I know he deserves it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Clayton H. Adams."

JOHN P. WEBBER.

The bill (S. 736) to correct the military record of John P. Webber, alias John J. Webber, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws, John P. Webber, alias John J. Webber, who was a private of Company E, Engineer Regiment of the West, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 7th day of January, 1863: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or back pension shall accrue to him prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John P. Webber, alias John J. Webber."

CHARLES LEE BAKER.

The bill (S. 6154) for the relief of Dr. Charles Lee Baker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint Dr. Charles Lee Baker, now a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps, a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, United States Army, and place him upon the retired list.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the word "Doctor" in line 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Charles Lee Baker."

JOSEPH EUBOR.

The bill (S. 6287) for the relief of Joseph Eubor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 8, after the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-four" to insert "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or back pension shall accrue or become payable by virtue of this Act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Joseph Eubor shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company A, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, on the 6th day of August, 1864: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or back pension shall accrue or become payable by virtue of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAIL CONTRACTORS.

The bill (H. R. 11150) for the relief of mail contractors was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to the consideration of that measure this afternoon. I have not had an opportunity to complete my researches into the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon objection, the bill goes over.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania if he will be good enough to be ready to consider it the next time the calendar is called. I am very much interested in the bill. I do not want to hurry the matter at all, but I am very desirous of having it disposed of. These claims are more than a half century old, and by all the rules of fair play and fair dealing they should be paid.

Mr. PENROSE. It seems to me this bill will be remarkably fortunate if it passes at all. It is a very remarkable measure, in my opinion, in that it apparently gives $40,000 to one or more lawyers who, as experience demonstrates in similar cases in the past, have performed no other service than to gather these claims together in order to have them passed by Congress. It is an old story, Mr. President, and after the Senator has been in Congress a longer period than he has he will come to know them as well as those of us who have been here longer. These attorneys get these claims. Then they write down to Louisiana, Alabama, and other States and urge the litigants to write to their Senator or Congressman, and it makes their lives miserable. Most of them would never have been heard of if they were not fomented by attorneys.

This kind of legislation, Mr. President, in my opinion is little different from that of the ambulance chaser in a local court, which is not considered a very noble part of the legal profession, and if carried to too great an extreme, generally ends in the disciplining of any member of the bar who indulges in it by the board of censors of the board or association of the State.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order!

Mr. PENROSE. I know I have been out of order in speaking. I object to the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to say in answer to the Senator's suggestion that $40,000 of this appropriation will go to lawyers who rendered no service that I hope the Senator will make a suggestion, and I am sure I will cooperate with him in every effort, to keep the lawyers from getting anything except that which the lawyers are entitled to. But it is not exactly fair to the claimants in this instance for the Congress to refuse to pay them what the United States Government owes because perhaps they are willing to give somebody a part of the claim to help them to induce the United States Government to pay its honest debts. It is commendable for the Congress to desire to protect the interest of the citizens, but let us hope that protection in this instance may not take the form of robbery. If the lawyer gets only 20 per cent he is not as bad as the Government if the Government shall insist on taking 100 per cent. I do not want the shyster or the reputable either to get anything that he is not entitled to. I will cooperate with the Senator from Pennsylvania in any proper way that he may suggest to protect these people in the enjoyment of their just rights. I do not know anything about the lawyers in this case. Not one has spoken to me about it. I think there are a great many lawyers who do a great many undesirable and discreditable things, and I am perfectly willing to do what I can to prevent them from accomplishing anything that is not fair in the settlement of these claims. But the dishonesty of the lawyer is no justification for the United States Government refusing to pay its debts. This great Government can not afford to emulate the conduct of the dirty dishonest lawyer such as the Senator from Pennsylvania has described in its dealing with its citizens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection and the bill goes over.

LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 6204) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made the bill goes over.

SHOSHONE CEDED LANDS.

The bill (S. 6308) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease, for production of oil and gas, ceded lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of this measure. It is purely a local bill and confined to a small area on the ceded land of an Indian reservation that can not be otherwise handled. I hope the Senator, in view of the circumstances, will not object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah insist upon his objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I want to read the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the meantime the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill and the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs on page 2, after line 11, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 2. That the leases granted under this act shall be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall not be less than one-tenth in amount or value of the production and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum during the continuance of the lease. The rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years each upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of expiration of any such period; said leases shall be irrevocable except for the breach of the terms and conditions of the same and may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States District Court for the District of Wyoming whenever the lessee fails to comply with their terms and conditions.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to lease, for the production of oil and gas therefrom, lands within the ceded portion of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming, under such terms and conditions as shall be by him prescribed; and the proceeds or royalties arising from any such leases shall be first applied to the extinguishment of any indebtedness of the Shoshone Indian Tribe to the United States and thereafter shall be applied to the use and benefit of said tribe in the same manner as though secured from the sale of said lands as provided by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians residing on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect": Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to abridge or enlarge any asserted or initiated rights or claims under any law of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the leases granted under this act shall be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall not be less than one-tenth in amount or value of the production and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum during the continuance of the lease. The rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years each upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of expiration of any such period; said leases shall be irrevocable except for the breach of the terms and conditions of the same and may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States District Court for the District of Wyoming whenever the lessee fails to comply with their terms and conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming if there is not a general statute taking care of the leasing of lands on Indian reservations?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. This is not land on an Indian reservation. This is land upon the ceded portion of an Indian reservation which was subject to homestead entry under the law which ceded it, but the time for homestead entry has been exhausted, so that this Indian land which was not taken is interspersed among other lands. It is still Indian land and the Indians are entitled to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVIE SKOOTAH.

The bill (S. 3773) to cancel the allotment of Davie Skootah on the Lummi Reservation, Wash., and reallocate the lands included therein was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made the bill goes over.

J. G. SEUPELT.

The bill (S. 1265) for the relief of J. G. Seupelt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to permit J. G. Seupelt to enter, under the homestead laws, at the appraised price to be determined in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, a certain unsurveyed island in the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash., known as Hog Island, containing about 152 acres, located in the Columbia River, and within sections 26 and 35, township 30 north, range 36 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington: Provided, That proceeds arising hereunder shall be subject to the provisions of section 6 of the act of March 22, 1906, volume 34, United States Statutes at Large, page 81: Provided further, That the right of entry by the said Seupelt shall be exercised within 90 days after the date of the approval of this act or within 90 days after appraisal if not appraised prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That the land hereby disposed of shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

The bill (S. 3130) granting certain lands to school district No. 56, Klickitat County, Wash., and authorizing the issuance of patent therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Senate bill 3130 and Senate bill 1266 were both covered in the Indian appropriation bill and may be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (S. 3130) granting certain lands to school district No. 56, Klickitat County, Wash., and authorizing the issuance of patent therefor and the bill (S. 1266) permitting Charles M. Hickerson to include a portion of allotment No. 36 to Secum-ka-nulax, of Chief Moses's Band, in his homestead entry, and providing for allotment to Secum-ka-nulax in lieu thereof on the Colville Indian Reservation, were indefinitely postponed.

INDIAN LANDS.

The bill (S. 3774) to authorize the sale of lands allotted to Indians under the Moses agreement of July 7, 1883, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any allottee to whom any trust patent has heretofore been or shall hereafter be issued by virtue of the agreement concluded July 7, 1883, with Chief Moses and other Indians of the Columbia and Colville Reservations, ratified by the act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stats. L., pp. 79, 80), and in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 8, 1906 (34 Stats. L., p. 55), if living, or the heirs of any such allottee, if deceased, may sell and convey all the land covered by such patent in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stats. L., p. 855), and the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior thereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOSES C. TINGLEY.

The bill (S. 3647) for the relief of Moses C. Tingley was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is, authorized to cancel the allotment made to Moses C. Tingley, under the fourth section of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stats. L., p. 388), described as the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 17, township 28 north, range 13 east of the Montana meridian, in Montana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMAHA INDIAN LANDS.

The bill (S. 3972) to provide for selection by the Omaha Indians and the setting apart of reservation lands for tribal cemetery purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to reserve from sale, under the terms of the act of May 11, 1912 (37 Stats. L., p. 111), the following-described tracts of land within the Omaha Agency Reserve, in Nebraska: The northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, formerly used by the Presbyterian missionary, and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, in addition to the eight acres in the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter which have already been set apart; all in section 24, township 25 north, range 9 east of the sixth principal meridian; said lands to be used by the Omaha Indians for cemetery purposes.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may likewise cause to be set apart for Indian cemetery purposes unappropriated lands as follows: Not to exceed 10 acres other than herein described, in the south half of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 25 north, range 9 east, and not to exceed 40 acres in two or more tracts in other parts of the reservation, said tracts to be selected by the Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPOKANE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (H. R. 12123) to appropriate money to build and maintain roads on the Spokane Indian Reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Spokane Indians in the State of Washington, not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 for the building and maintenance of roads on the Spokane Indian Reservation, in Stevens County, Wash., said amount to be spent under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That said $2,000 shall not be available until Stevens County, Wash., appropriates $1,000 for the building and maintenance of roads on the Spokane Indian Reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN AGENTS AND SUPERINTENDENTS.

The bill (S. 5335) conferring upon tribes of Indians the right to recall their agents or superintendents was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is interested in the bill and he reported it. I wish to say to him that I have a letter from the Indian Rights Association of Washington, D. C., criticizing the bill severely and asking that it be defeated. I will ask that the bill go over at this time, and I will take it up with the Senator at the first opportunity and show him the letter and discuss the bill with him.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. In answer to the Senator I will say that objection to the bill has been raised for a long time and by the same people. It is a matter of record. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection for that reason. It has all been thrashed out during the session, and the bill applies only to the State of South Dakota.

Mr. SMOOT. From the statement made here by Hon. Joseph H. Choate and also by the agent of the Indian Rights Association, I should think the Senator himself would not insist on pressing the bill at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It has been a matter of record for three months in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not seen it. I have received a letter dated August 2—

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator that I know that this bill was very carefully considered in committee. It only applies to the State of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that.

Mr. GRONNA. I can see no reason why the bill should not be passed. Because some Indian agent perhaps who resides in the State of South Dakota is no reason why we should pass it over at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator it is not an Indian agent in South Dakota who has written this letter.

Mr. GRONNA. Can the Senator from Utah give me a good reason why the Indian tribes should not have a voice in their own affairs?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know anything about the question here involved. I will simply say that I have a letter here dated August 2. It is signed by Mr. S. M. Brosius, agent of the Indian Rights Association, McGill Building, Washington, D. C. This is what the letter says—

Mr. GRONNA. I should think the Senator from South Dakota—

Mr. SMOOT. I am reading this to the Senator from South Dakota, telling him why the bill should go over a day.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will allow me to finish my statement, I was about to say to the Senator from Utah that the Senator from South Dakota knows more about the Indians of his own State than some one who lives in the city of Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection. The bill was before the committee for a long time and it was fixed up so as to be entirely satisfactory, I think, to those who opposed it, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and other Republicans.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to read this letter to the Senator and see if there is no room for objection and see if he can explain it. It will be entirely different:

AUGUST 2, 1916.

HON. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your interest is urged in securing the defeat of Senate bill No. 5335 (Calendar No. 649) introduced by Senator JOHNSON of South Dakota.

This bill provides that a majority of the male adult members of any Indian tribe in South Dakota shall have the right to declare against the retention of the agent or superintendent in charge at any Indian agency in South Dakota, and such official shall thereafter be immediately removed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Indian question is one of national interest, and it is most fortunate that the control of the Red Man was removed from the local influences of the States. This Government control seems as necessary in South Dakota as elsewhere.

If the bill in question is approved, it will be a distinct blow to the classified civil service, and would relegate to the Indians, who lack experience in business matters, the right to cause the removal of competent officials.

As was said by the Hon. Joseph H. Choate in his letter to Chairman ASHURST of the Committee of Indian Affairs (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 7, 1916):

"Anyone familiar with Indians can readily imagine how the more dependent full bloods would thus become the easy prey of conniving mixed bloods and unscrupulous whites. As so aptly stated by Rev.

Sherman Coolidge, president of the Society of American Indians, "By such law the very worst elements will seek to control Indian tribes."

We respectfully submit that the right to select superintendents is one of the highest prerogatives, and it seems apparent that when Indians have become sufficiently advanced to exercise that right they are quite fully equipped to transact all their business affairs, and should be completely released from the protection of the Federal Government as guardian.

It would no doubt be disastrous to our Indian population to thus too hastily remove the safeguards now exercised by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

We are inclosing a copy of the letter of the Hon. Joseph H. Choate, above referred to.

Trusting you will exert your influence to defeat the legislation in question, we are,

Very cordially, yours,

S. M. BROSIUS,
Agent Indian Rights Association.

I will also say to the Senate that I understand the department has reported adversely to the bill. I received the letter only the other day, and that was my basis for asking that the bill go over. I shall gladly take the matter up with the Senator from South Dakota later on.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to say that evidently the purpose of the bill is, perhaps in a measure, misunderstood. As I recall the bill, it does not give the Indians the right to select their agents. The initiative in that selection under the bill is left with the Indian Office. It simply provides that after a given length of time, and after notice to the Indian Office, the Indians may hold a council and vote against the retention of an agent who has been placed in charge of them. It is a partial step; it is a sort of a compromise between giving the Indians the control of the question of the agent and retaining the control, on the other hand, in the Indian Office.

Mr. GALLINGER. It comes pretty nearly being a recall, does it not?

Mr. CLAPP. It amounts to a recall, but still it is with the Indian Office to renew and to determine the appointee to succeed the agent who is recalled.

There has been a good deal of contention over this matter. At one time an effort was made to establish this principle, or at least to seek to establish it, by legislation extending over the entire country; but the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] finally consented, on the suggestion of several of us, to limit it to South Dakota.

Humanity is so constituted that one man in authority over another is always reluctant to yield that authority. The time never comes, in the opinion of the one who has the authority, when the one under him has reached a degree of development where he should participate in authority with the one over him. I do not believe we should proceed rapidly; I would not favor a bill like this covering the entire country; but in the case of South Dakota, where a great deal of progress has been made, those of us who opposed the bill finally yielded to this initiative in displacing the agent, but retaining in the Bureau of Indian Affairs the initiative in the appointment as to South Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I merely wish to say one word. I hope the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will withdraw his objection. If an agent or superintendent should be recalled, it leaves the selection entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. The Indians are unanimous in asking for this legislation, and it is nothing more than right and just to them that it should be enacted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a Senate bill, which will, if it passes this body, have to be considered by the other House; and perhaps more information can be secured upon it before it passes there. Having called attention to the matter, I shall not interpose any further objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from South Dakota if there is any trouble with the present officials, the agent and the superintendent of these Indians?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. None that I know of, except in one place where there is almost universal objection among almost all the Indians to their superintendent. I do not know the superintendent personally, and know nothing about the merits of the matter, except that general complaint has been made by a large number of the Indians there.

I talked with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in relation to this case a short time ago, and he is aware of all the facts regarding it. As I have said, I am not personally acquainted with the superintendent, never having seen him, but there is trouble all the time there, and no end of it, and it will increase, in my judgment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not probable, if we pass this bill, that in other States the Indians may be incited, perhaps by white men, to protest against their superintendents and their agents, and that the thing will spread? Then, again, if we pass this bill for South Dakota, why not have every other State where there are Indian reservations exercise the same privilege? Why should we select South Dakota?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I shall perhaps not be able to answer, but I can suggest the reason for the action of the Indian Bureau. The development which the Indians have reached in intelligence in the different States and different tribes varies. For that reason it was thought best not to make this bill general, but to let it apply to these particular Indians. Of course, there is liable to be friction; there ought to be friction; friction is what has brought progress to the white people, and it will bring progress to any other people who have to develop. This seemed to be a very fair adjustment of the matter to the Indian Office. The fact that if a man was removed the Indian Office immediately appoints some one else, in which appointment the Indians will have no voice, is a check, to a certain degree, upon the exercise of this right of recall by the Indians.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Minnesota if it would be a procedure very much different from this if the citizens of my State did not like a postmaster and we should give the citizens the right by majority vote to recall the postmaster?

Mr. CLAPP. Well, that does not embarrass the Senator from Minnesota at all, because I never have been able to understand why the people of Concord, N. H., for instance, should not have some voice in the selection of the man whom they have to meet every day when they go to get their mail. I do not know that I would turn the selection of a postmaster absolutely over to the citizens, in view of the national character of the Postal Service, but, at the same time, it would not interfere at all with my views if they did have some voice in selecting him. The idea that because a man happens to be in Congress he can say to a great city, without any recourse whatever on the part of that city, "You shall do your postal business with a man of my choice" has never appealed to me very strongly.

Mr. GALLINGER. We might apply it to any other office.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; I was not making any personal application of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I received a similar letter to the one which the Senator from Utah received, and I have a copy of the letter of Hon. Joseph H. Choate. I intended to read it, but have not had time. I think, however, in glancing at it, there are very strong reasons against this bill suggested by Mr. Choate, and I will now object to the further consideration of the bill and ask that Mr. Choate's letter be placed in the Record. When the bill is reached again I certainly will not be factious about it, but if it is not a good bill it ought not to be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the printing in the Record the letter of Mr. Choate? The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

Letter of Hon. Joseph H. Choate relating to proposed legislation on the administration of Indian affairs.

8 EAST SIXTY-THIRD STREET,
New York, N. Y., April 3, 1916.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ASHURST: Just now, when questions of great national moment are demanding universal attention, there is danger that matters seriously affecting our domestic affairs may be neglected or entirely overlooked.

The welfare of our Indians is a solemn national obligation. We have no more sacred trust than the protection of the weak from being overreached by the strong. From the earliest times the intent of our people has been to give the Indian that protection.

In the majority of cases this obligation is imposed on the Federal Government by treaty. In the absence of treaty obligation, however, the duty of the Nation to its wards is just as great. In the case of Heckman v. United States (224 U. S., 413-417), in speaking of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, the Supreme Court says:

"From their very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal Government with them and the treaties in which it has been accomplished, there arises the duty of protection and with it the power."

Specific reservations have properly been set apart for Indian tribes, but for almost half a century there has been a tendency to recognize and give responsibility to the individual. The Dawes Severalty Act, adopted in 1887, was the culmination of this theory. It provides for an allotment of lands to individual Indians, breaking up of tribal relations, and disintegration of communal ownership. The principal thought in this and subsequent legislation has been to place responsibility upon the individual, and at the same time protect him in his personal and property rights until the untutored child of nature is equipped to assume full responsibilities of citizenship.

The difficulty is that too much has been expected of the Indian. To some people it is hard to understand why you can't take an untutored, ignorant, full-blood Indian and make an educated citizen out of him in a fortnight. They expect the unreasonable and impossible. It is contrary to all human experience. Extremists have insisted that the process is too slow, that these wards should be released from Government supervision and suffer the results of their own improvidence, regardless of their qualifications for self-protection and regardless of the consequences to their property rights.

Great caution is necessary in adopting new methods. The Indian problem has been the subject of too many theories which have proven disastrous in practice. In the early days the theory of extermination existed on the ground that "the only good Indian is a dead Indian." This idea did not appeal to our liberty-loving people, and later the theory of "segregation" was conceived, under which the Indians were virtually herded on reservations and policed that they might not escape and injure some white man. The latest theory—that of individualization—developed under the Dawes Severalty Act, really seems most plausible. It may prove a solution of the Indian problems, if properly administered and not interfered with by new and inconsistent legislation.

Of the Indians heretofore allotted about 10 per cent only—the full-bloods, at least—have been prepared for the additional responsibilities thus cast upon them.

Congress in 1908 clothed the county courts of Oklahoma with jurisdiction over the person and property of minor allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and further provided that upon the death of an allottee all restrictions against alienation of his land would thereby be removed. The raid upon the Indian's property as a result of this legislation is notorious, and the effect on the Indian was disastrous and irreparable.

Legislation is now pending in Congress which, if adopted, may overturn the present Indian policy and subject the Indian to the worst possible forms of spoliation, not only from outsiders but from unscrupulous persons within the tribal membership. The bill (H. R. 108) introduced by Congressman HASTINGS in the House of Representatives would confer on the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes the authority now vested in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior respecting the lands and individual moneys of the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. About one-third of the Indian population in the United States belongs to these tribes, with more than 30,000 restricted Indians, their property including over 3,000,000 acres of valuable individually owned land. Perhaps the greatest oil field in the world has been developed in the country of the Five Tribes, from which enormous wealth has accrued to these people.

Under existing law the superintendent of these tribes is nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, the appointment being political. The pending bill (H. R. 108) proposes to turn over to this appointee full power and authority over this vast estate, and naturally every pressure, local and otherwise, would be brought to bear on anyone clothed with this great responsibility.

As evidence of the inability of these Indians properly to safeguard their own interests, the following is taken from the opinion of the Supreme Court in 1910 in the case of Tiger v. Western Investment Co. (221 U. S., 286-297):

"That full-blood Indians of the Five Tribes are, as a class, incompetent must be assumed, not only from the legislation of Congress with respect to them but from the finding of the Court of Claims, where, in the case of Brown & Gritts v. United States (44 C. Cls., 283), it was expressly found that full-blood Cherokees, whose right to alienate their lands was forbidden by the legislation contemporaneous with that involved in the case at bar, were, as a class, unable to speak the English language and incompetent to guard their interest from designing persons who were constantly attempting to induce them to part with their property at grossly inadequate compensation."

With respect to the Hastings bill, Arthur C. Parker, a highly intelligent Indian, engaged in important educational work for the State of New York at Albany, who is also the secretary and treasurer of the Society of American Indians, says:

"ALBANY, March 22, 1916.

"I desire to register my protest against the favorable consideration of H. R. 108, introduced by Congressman HASTINGS, of Oklahoma, designing to confer the authority now invested in the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the office of the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes. The condition of Indian property and the complex situation that has arisen from inheritance cases and the presence of a large number of incompetent Indians makes it of utmost importance that the administration of their affairs be retained in the hands of the Federal Government. There is precedent enough to show the danger of State control in Indian matters, where these matters are not properly adjusted and where the mass of Indians are by reason of ignorance or disability unable to protect themselves. The Oklahoma situation has been bad enough without now further providing the means for a wholesale plundering of the estates of minors and incompetents. This bill would bring injustice and be a reproach upon the Federal Government."

Another bill recently introduced by Senator JOHNSON, of South Dakota, S. 3904, by its terms proposes to confer upon tribes of Indians the right to select their superintendents and other employees. This would divest the Interior Department of the appointing power, and the Indian Service would be deprived of the wholesome restrictions provided by the civil service. Anyone familiar with Indians can readily imagine how the more dependent full bloods would thus become the easy prey of conniving mixed bloods and unscrupulous whites. As so aptly stated by Rev. Snerman Coolidge, president of the Society of American Indians, "By such law the very worst elements will seek to control Indian tribes."

Senator LANE's bill, S. 4452, proposes legislation to abolish the position of Commissioner Indian Affairs and his assistants, creating in lieu thereof an independent bureau with three commissioners subject only to the control of Congress. This bill provides that these commissioners shall be selected from candidates to be named by all the Indian tribes of the United States "congregated in general delegate council." It is further provided that these commissioners shall exercise all the authority now vested in the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

This bill would also deprive the Indian Service of that protection now afforded by the classified civil service and would subject the Indians to the same pernicious influences as the Johnson bill, the chief difference being that one is retail and the other wholesale destruction. One may suppose that the elements most hostile to the Indians will advocate this and similar vicious legislation.

While the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs might gladly welcome this relief from the very onerous duties imposed upon them in connection with the administration of Indian affairs, yet these officials, moved by the high sense of public duty the Federal Government owes to its dependent Indian wards, have felt impelled to suggest the great danger to the Indians involved in the legislation contemplated by either of the three bills referred to and have pointed out that existing law is sufficient to enable the Interior Department to place on their own responsibility individual Indians who are qualified to handle their own property. "Competency commissions" are now in the field visiting various reservations where allotments in severalty have been made with a view of removing restrictions against alienation from the land belonging to those Indians found capable of withstanding the machinations of designing persons seeking to prey on members of an unsuspecting race the moment the protecting hand of the Government is lifted.

That wholesale removal of restrictions invites disaster has been amply evidenced by past experience. Should even 50 per cent of the Indians of a given tribe prove competent, is that any reason why the incompetent should be turned over to the mercy of unscrupulous land sharks?

Developments within the past few years show remarkable improvement in the administration of Indian affairs, and just as the latest theory of "individualization" begins to bear good fruit can we afford to destroy the entire structure by removing from the protecting care of the Government even those whose feet are just beginning to tread along the pathway that leads to success?

As an earnest friend of the Indian race I trust that neither of these bills nor any similar legislation will be enacted.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPH H. CHOATE.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire at this point to add a word to what I said a moment ago, when I referred to the fact that human nature was disposed to retain authority. I would not want that to be understood as a reflection upon the present Indian Office. Of course, as a member of the Indian Committee and having once for some years served as its chairman, I have been brought very closely in contact with the Indian Office, and, so far as it might be proper, I desire to express at this time my appreciation of the efforts of that office to serve the great subject which has been committed to their charge. It is simply human nature that we shall always be loath to give up our authority and jurisdiction over others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND TO FLANDREAU, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 5635) authorizing the conveyance of certain land in the State of South Dakota to the town of Flandreau, in said State, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "land" to strike out "south one-half of lot 14 of the southwest quarter of section 21, township 107, range 47 west, Moody County, S. Dak., for the purposes of a public park," and insert "south one-half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107 north, range 48 west, fifth principal meridian, Moody County, S. Dak., which shall be permanently used as a public park or playground," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to the town of Flandreau, Moody County, S. Dak., for the following-described land: South one-half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107 north, range 48 west, fifth principal meridian, Moody County, S. Dak., which shall be permanently used as a public park or playground.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. T. NANCE.

The bill (H. R. 10052) to reimburse J. T. Nance was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $81.78 to J. T. Nance, postmaster at Harrodsburg, Ind., to reimburse him for losses sustained by reason of robbery of that post office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JOHN A. FOX.

The bill (H. R. 14952) for the relief of Mrs. John A. Fox was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $1,000 to Mrs. John A. Fox, widow of John A. Fox, postmaster at Glenarm, Oldham County, Ky., who was killed in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I see a number of claim bills on the calendar have been referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which seems not to have hesitated in reporting them back to the Senate. Other bills of similar character have gone to the Committee on Claims, and I desire to ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], the chairman of the Committee on Claims, who is also a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, if the policy in the future is to be changed, and if such claims bills are to be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have observed the fact to which the Senator refers. I do not know why they were sent to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. JAMES. I think I can tell the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. I am not speaking particularly of this bill, but there are a number of other claims bills which have been referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and reported by that committee. Why, I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. I am speaking of 50 or more bills of similar character on the calendar.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the beneficiary of this bill is the widow of the former postmaster at Glenarm, Oldham County, Ky., who was murdered in the discharge of his duty. The bill was introduced in the House and was passed by that body. Then it came to the Senate and was referred in the usual way to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SMOOT. In the House the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims. It subsequently passed that body, but when it came to the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. It should have gone to the Committee on Claims. I was not speaking as to the justice of the claim covered by the pending bill, for I do not know anything about that; but I do know that such claims bills ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JAMES. This is a particularly just bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not saying that it is not.

Mr. JAMES. As I have already stated, the postmaster was murdered in the discharge of his duty. The bill has been unanimously reported, and I hope no objection will be made to its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, in connection with the bill just passed, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD the portion of the report on the bill filed by the Senate committee, covering a letter from the Postmaster General and certain affidavits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1916.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 2, 1916, transmitting a copy of bill (H. R. 14952) for the relief of Mrs. John A. Fox, widow of John A. Fox, who was killed while in the performance of his duties as postmaster at Glenarm, Ky., on December 1, 1915. Investigation by a post-office inspector disclosed that while the postmaster was engaged in making out his monthly reports he was stealthily approached from behind and shot in the head, death resulting within a few minutes. The trial of the murderer, Jack Henderson, was conducted by the State of Kentucky, resulting in a sentence of life imprisonment.

The circumstances attending the death of the postmaster are such that I am constrained to recommend favorable consideration of the bill.

Respectfully,

A. S. BURLINSON, Postmaster General.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Oldham, ss:

On this the 3d day of May, 1916, personally appeared before me Mamie H. Fox, who, after being first duly sworn before me according to law deposes as follows: Affiant says that she is 58 years of age and that she resides at Glenarm, Oldham County, Ky., and that she is the widow of John A. Fox, deceased. Affiant says that her deceased husband was the postmaster at Glenarm, Ky., on the 1st day of December, 1915. Affiant says that on said 1st day of December, 1915, at about 10 minutes after 4 o'clock, which day was rather dark and rainy, my husband was at the post office attending to his duties as postmaster, when a negro robber named Jack Henderson shot and killed him as he was seated at his desk at work in the post office; he was shot through the head just above the left ear and his head pitched forward on his desk; he was found in this position before he ceased breathing by Joe Kraus and his daughter Minnie Kraus, who reside at Glenarm, Oldham County, Ky. After the negro had shot my husband he robbed the post office of $5.35; this sum of money was taken from a box where my husband kept the change from the sale of stamps. The negro had failed to get the money taken in from the sale of money orders because that money was under some books in the desk drawer where my husband was sitting at the time he was shot, and where he was found at his seat, as is shown by the affidavits of Joe Kraus and Minnie Kraus, filed with this affidavit. Affiant was notified immediately of the murder and ran down to the post office. My husband was in the chair at his desk with his head and hands lying on the desk. Affiant says that the negro, Jack Henderson, was tried at the February term of the Oldham Circuit Court and convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. Affiant says that her deceased husband was her only support; that her father and mother are both dead, and that she has no children. Affiant says that the only property of any kind she owns is a four-room cottage and 2 acres of ground located at Glenarm, Ky., which is worth about $500 in money. Affiant says that she is in bad health and in needy circumstances, and for this reason she needs assistance from the Government in her old days.

MAMIE H. FOX.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by Mamie H. Fox this 3d day of May, 1916.

[SEAL.]

T. T. MAGRE,
Notary Public, Oldham County, Ky.

My commission expires February 7, 1920.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Oldham, ss:

On this the 3d day of May, 1916, personally appeared before me Joe Kraus, who, after being first duly sworn according to law, says that his age is 45 years, and that he resides at Glenarm, Oldham County, Ky. Affiant says the he is well acquainted with Mrs. John A. Fox and that he knew her deceased husband, John A. Fox, for some years prior to his death.

Affiant says that his house is located about 200 yards from the post office at Glenarm, Oldham County, Ky. He says that the L. & E. Railway Co.'s tracks parallel the tracks of the L. & N. Railroad Co. at Glenarm, Ky., and that the L. & E. Co.'s station is about 300 yards west or closer to Louisville than the post office. Affiant says that on the 1st day of December, 1915, he and his daughter, Minnie Kraus, were in Louisville, Ky., and that they went to their home at Glenarm on the L. & E. Railway car, and got off at the L. & E. station, which is about 300 yards west of the post office, at about 10 minutes after 4 o'clock, and started to the post office to get their mail before going to their home. As they got off the car and started toward the post office, affiant noticed a negro named Jack Henderson within a couple of feet of the post-office door. The negro came toward the affiant and his daughter, and as he approached them affiant noticed him pull his cap down over his eyes. Affiant and daughter proceeded to the post office. As I entered the post-office door I saw at a glance that John A. Fox, the postmaster, had been murdered; he was still breathing; he had been shot with a .32-caliber pistol. There were no other person or persons about the post office. I told my daughter to run across to my house and get my pistol. I kept my eye on the negro. When she returned with my pistol I started after the negro. As I advanced on him he began to run, me after him, running the faster; he jumped over into a corn field, affiant after him; he ran into a negro cabin. As he did so I went right in after him, put the pistol on him, and marched him in front of me back to the post office, locked him up in the telephone booth; the negro was turned over to the sheriff; the negro had robbed the post office of $5.35.

The negro was tried and convicted in the Oldham circuit court at the February term of court and sentenced to the penitentiary for life.

JOE KRAUS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by Joe Kraus this the 3d day of May, 1916.

[SEAL.]

FRED STARCK,
Notary Public, Jefferson County, Ky.

STATE OF KENTUCKY,
County of Oldham, ss:

On this the 3d day of May, 1916, personally appeared before me Minnie Kraus, who, after being first duly sworn according to law, says that she is 22 years of age, and that she resides at Glenarm, Oldham County, Ky.; she says that she and her father, Joe Kraus, got off of a L. & E. car at the interurban station, which is about 300 yards west or closer to Louisville than the post office at Glenarm, Oldham County, Ky., going to their home, which is about 100 yards from the post office, on the 1st day of December, 1915, and that they noticed a negro about 2 feet from the post-office door; that the negro came directly toward affiant and her father, the negro coming away from the post office and affiant and her father going toward the post office, and they passed the negro on the path leading up to the post office. The negro pulled his cap down closer over his eyes as he approached affiant and her father. The place where affiant and her father got off the L. & E. car is about 300 yards west of the post office. It was about 10 minutes after 4 o'clock p. m. when affiant got to the post office and opened the door. Affiant saw that the postmaster, John A. Fox, had been killed. He was still breathing; he had been shot through the head. There were no person or persons about the post office at the time. Affiant was directed by her father to go after his pistol, and affiant did so just as quick as she could, gave it to her father, and her father started after the negro, and after a chase brought the negro back and locked him up in the telephone booth, and that the negro, who turned out to be Jack Henderson, was tried and convicted at the February term of the Oldham circuit court and sent to the penitentiary for life.

The negro had robbed the post office of about $5.35, which sum of money was found on his person when his pockets were examined.

This affiant says that on the afternoon of the murder she had been to Louisville, Ky., and she and her father, Joe Kraus, were together and alighted from the car together; she says that it was raining at the time, and it was a dark and gloomy afternoon.

MINNIE KRAUS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by Minnie Kraus this the 3d day of May, 1916.

[SEAL.]

FRED STARCK,
Notary Public, Jefferson County, Ky.

AQUILA NEBEKER.

The bill (S. 5632) for the relief of Aquila Nebeker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion, to accept title to the following described lands, either in whole or in part, upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and approximately equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor: The south half of the southeast quarter of section 3; the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter and the south half of the southwest quarter of section 10; the north half of the northeast quarter of section 15, all in township 12 north, range 4 east; the south half of the northwest quarter and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 14, township 13 north, range 4 east; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 and the south half of the northwest quarter and all of the southwest quarter of section 4; all of section 9; and the north half of section 16; all in township 14 north, range 4 east of Salt Lake base and meridian, situate in the Cache National Forest; and to issue to Aquila Nebeker in lieu thereof patents to the following described areas, or to such parts thereof as are approximately equal in value to the lands conveyed: The south half of the northeast quarter and all of the southeast quarter of section 11; the southwest quarter of section 12; all of section 13, the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and all of the southeast quarter of section 14; the northeast quarter of section 25; and the north half of section 24; all in township 13 north, range 4 east of Salt Lake base and meridian: Provided, That the lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become parts of the Cache National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLIVER C. RICE.

The bill (S. 4915) for the relief of Oliver C. Rice was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator who reported this bill, why there has been omitted the usual provision to the effect that the passage of the bill should not entitle the person for whose benefit it is passed to back pay? I notice in other bills of this character such a provision is included; but it has not been included in this bill; and it occurs to me that perhaps, if this gentleman gets his record straightened out and is considered as an honorably discharged soldier, he can make claim for pay back to the date of the war. I want to know why that exception was made in the case of this individual?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I reported the bill, but I know nothing about it. The bill was introduced by the late Senator from Indiana, Mr. Shively, and was passed on by the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate. I was simply requested to report it, and I did so. If the Senator thinks that the provision to which he has referred ought to be in the bill, he can move an amendment to that effect. The committee did not put it in, but I do not know why it was omitted.

Mr. BRYAN. That is the way in which it was reported, and therefore I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

ORION MATHEWS.

The bill (S. 2388) for the relief of Orion Mathews was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, Orion Mathews, late of Battery D, Second Regiment United States Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private from that battery and regiment on the 22d day of March, 1865; but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4320) to remove the charge of desertion against James B. Smock was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

WILLIAM GUY.

The bill (H. R. 11939) for the relief of William Guy was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask what was the recommendation of the Department of the Interior in the case of that bill?

Mr. SMOOT. That is rather a strange bill. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

J. M. POTTER.

The bill (H. R. 9375) for the relief of J. M. Potter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to J. M. Potter, of Pikeville, Pike County, Ky., the sum of $140, as a reimbursement for expenses incurred for surgical and medical aid and hospital fees in having wounds treated which were received while in the discharge of his duties as deputy United States marshal, and for loss of time, suffering, and permanent disability resulting from said wounds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARKENTINE "MABEL I. MEYERS."

The bill (H. R. 11129) for the relief of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew, and for the relief of the owners of cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 13, after the word "appeal," to insert "Provided, That no award or judgment shall be made for prospective profits," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew, and the claim of the owners of the cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine, in alleged collision with the U. S. S. Nebraska about 30 miles southeast of Cape Cod, Mass., on the 30th day of July, 1915, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said barkentine and by her master and crew, and by the owners of said cargo, may be submitted to the United States Court for the District of Massachusetts, the district nearest to which the collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty. And that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That no award or judgment shall be made for prospective profits.

SEC. 2. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I move that order of business 283, being Senate bill 3270, with a similar title, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

AMENDMENT OF THE PATENT LAWS.

The bill (H. R. 13982) to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINNESOTA & ONTARIO POWER CO.

The bill (H. R. 2555) for the relief of the Minnesota & Ontario Power Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Minnesota & Ontario Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $714.66, the same being duties paid by the said Minnesota & Ontario Power Co. to the collector of customs for the district of Minnesota on May 31, 1912, on certain boilers and machinery especially imported from Canada for the equipment of a steam barge operating in the Rainy River between Minnesota and Ontario, said boilers and machinery having been refused for such use in the United States by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and at once having been returned to Canada without being used for any purpose in the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4836) for the relief of Daniel O'Connell was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has been reported adversely.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) relative to the construction on the site selected of the central heating, lighting, and power plant authorized by the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 6352) for the relief of David Steers, alias William Johnson, alias John Hartman, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has been reported adversely.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

GARDINER L. EASTMAN.

The bill (S. 5203) for the relief of Gardiner L. Eastman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Gardiner L. Eastman, who was a private of Company H, Thirtieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on or about the 16th day of June, 1865: Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, nor other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over. This man was dishonorably discharged.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact—

Mr. OVERMAN. I simply wanted an explanation of the bill. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say that the committee had very fully investigated this matter and considered the reports from the War Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. I saw that he was dishonorably discharged.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The reason was simply this: He was on the picket line and a musket was discharged, and he thought it was a signal to come in. The others came in, and he came into the camp. He had served three years and three months and then reenlisted. He came into camp, and was court-martialed for deserting his post, and was dishonorably discharged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Gardiner L. Eastman."

ORION MATHEWS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the proviso in the bill we have just passed is precisely as it ought to be in all similar bills:

Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, nor other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

In the case of Order of Business 655, it simply says:

Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

I ask that the vote whereby that bill was passed be reconsidered, and that language be substituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the reconsideration of the votes whereby order of business 655, Senate bill 2388, for the relief of Orion Mathews, was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now I move to strike out the words: "Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act," and insert the words:

Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, nor other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING, PITTSBURGH, PA.

The bill (S. 6601) for the enlargement of the post-office building in Pittsburgh, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the present old post-office building at Pittsburgh, Pa., to be enlarged, extended, remodeled, and improved for the better accommodation of the post office and other governmental offices, at a cost not exceeding $50,000, including all changes in, extension of, or additions and repairs to the mechanical equipment which may become necessary by reason of or incident to such enlargement, extension, remodeling, or repairs of said building, or which it may be found expedient to make to such mechanical equipment because of such enlargement, extension, remodeling, or repair of said building; and the annual appropriations for the general maintenance of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department shall be construed to be available for all other repairs to and equipment of said building, grounds, approaches, and mechanical equipment of such building as extended. And the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, in his discretion, to disregard the provisions requiring 40 feet open space for fire protection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to learn from some member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which bills of this nature are referred, how it comes about that a bill of this kind is reported as a separate bill. My understanding about the matter is that all the bills making appropriations for public buildings throughout the country eventually take the form of an omnibus bill, just the same as all of the pension bills take the form of an omnibus pension bill. A few weeks ago we passed here a bill making appropriations for a public building at Bingham Canyon, Utah, and that and the bill before us are the only individual bills for post-office construction.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken about that. Only day before yesterday a bill for a public building for Ohio was passed here by unanimous consent. They are only passed in cases where there is an emergency. For instance, one was passed for West Virginia. One was passed for Arizona carrying $325,000. I have one here for Park City, Utah. The building was authorized eight years ago.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator tell me what the particular emergency was at Tucson, Ariz.?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether there was any emergency or not, but it passed the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I am simply struggling to learn. I have not been able to get any special reports from the committee upon any Montana bills, being always advised that they would go in the omnibus public buildings bill; and I wanted to learn the secret.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I think I can explain to the Senator's satisfaction about this particular case. This bill was sent to me by Assistant Secretary Newton. It relates to a post-office building in my own city, and it was sent to me by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury with the request that I introduce it.

It has now been nearly 10 years since a site was purchased in the city of Pittsburgh for the erection of a new post-office building, which was then an urgent case. Owing to a grievous mistake in the selection of the tract which was purchased, and which was entirely unsuitable, the matter has lain dormant ever since. In the meantime the business of the post office has more than quadrupled. I suppose it is almost ten times what it was at that time; and with the introduction of the Parcel Post System the congestion is so great that something must be done immediately.

I will read what the Assistant Secretary said in his communication to the committee:

Sir: In response to your recent request the following report is submitted on S. 6601, which provides for the enlargement of the post-office building at Pittsburgh, Pa.

From information received by this department, the quarters occupied by the post office in the present building are very much congested and additional working space is urgently needed. The Post Office Department recommends the construction of an extension on the rear of the present building for a receiving and delivering shed. Under the present arrangement only four vehicles can be accommodated at one time, resulting in much delay in loading and unloading the mails. Under the proposed scheme 17 vehicles will be accommodated at one time.

The proposed shed is to be two stories in height, about 161 feet long and 43 feet wide, the lower story being used as a driveway extending the full length of the building and connecting with the street on the north and south of the site, with about 3,500 square feet working space opening out onto a platform alongside the driveway. The upper story will cover the entire area of the structure and extend out over the driveway, thus furnishing additional space of about 6,000 square feet.

It is estimated that an extension as indicated above, of substantial construction, can be completed for the sum of $50,000, including the necessary alterations in the present building.

I will state that this is all temporary in its nature. In the early future a new building will be erected there, but something must be done at once, and it is proposed, if this bill is passed, that this addition will be constructed and in use before the snow flies.

Mr. WALSH. Just one other question. An emergency seems to exist in this case, from the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania. Let me inquire if he is a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not a member of that committee.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator's colleague, possibly?

Mr. OLIVER. No; neither of us is a member of it. This bill was sent to me, and the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds referred it to the department, received this communication from the department, and then was kind enough to poll the committee on it, and every member of the committee who was applied to agreed to a favorable report on the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I made the inquiry simply with a desire to find the secret, if I could.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is usual to have an omnibus bill prepared by the House. No public building bill that is passed here ever goes through the House as a separate proposition. The House of Representatives prepares the omnibus bill, and if this bill passes here it goes before the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and meets with their approval; they then put it in the omnibus bill and send the omnibus bill back here, probably with this bill in it, if they favor it. That is the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 14889) for the relief of the heirs of Jackson J. Mash, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HIRAM P. GEASLIN.

The bill (H. R. 7396) for the relief of Hiram P. Geaslin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the accounts of or to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Hiram P. Geaslin, of Hornersville, Mo., the sum of $81.71, being the value of documentary stamps taken from his custody as postmaster at Hornersville, Mo., by burglars on the 6th day of April, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF LABOR SAFETY, DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

The bill (H. R. 153) to create a bureau of labor safety in the Department of Labor was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection for just a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator offer the amendment that was suggested the other day?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wanted to let the Senate understand that I am not going to support the bill as providing for a bureau. I was authorized by the committee to make certain further investigations; and, first, I am going to change it by changing the bureau to a division. Instead of having a $5,000 salary for its head, I am going to ask that it be a chief of a division, with a salary of $2,500. In the next place, I am going to ask that it be amended so as to exclude from its provisions the Bureau of Mines. In the next place, I am going to ask that it be amended—and I have the amendment ready—so as to except all railroad appliances, and take out from under its operation appliances incident to railroad service. In the next place, I am going to ask that it be amended so as to eliminate diseases, so as to leave diseases just where they are, and limit it simply to a collection and study of safety appliances where we are doing nothing already. I mention this because I thought it would remove the objection to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I think more than likely it will, so far as I am concerned; but I will say to the Senator that unless those changes were made I shall not favor the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Unless those changes are made I shall not support the bill myself.

Mr. NELSON. In view of all the amendments the Senator desires to submit—and I think they are good amendments—the bill ought to be reprinted. Would it not be well to recommit the bill and prepare it in committee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are very simple amendments, and they can be put into this bill in five minutes.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he has any objection, after the word "law," in line 10, to insert the words "to be selected from the eligible list of the Civil Service Commission."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not the slightest. My change puts them all under the civil service. The chief of the division will be under the civil service. It will not be a presidential appointment. I am simply reducing them to an ordinary division in the department and limiting the work to a study of subjects not elsewhere provided for.

Mr. GALLINGER. So the chief of the division would have no authority to go outside of the civil service and make appointments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that be so, my amendment is not necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the amendment is not necessary. The language used was intended to limit to the civil service; but if it does not, I will offer an amendment covering it.

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest in view of the many amendments which I think will render the bill acceptable that it be offered and printed and then let the bill go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the suggestion wise, and I will offer them now and let the bill be reprinted.

Mr. OLIVER. Let the bill be considered and the amendments be offered and then let the bill go over.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that it would be much better to submit the bill in an entirety in the form of a substitute. It would be much easier to consider a substitute to the bill and have the substitute embrace all the changes that are desired.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator to allow it to go back to the committee, because there are so many amendments I think it would be better to bring in a substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will ask, in view of the suggestion of Senators, that the bill be recommitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYEES FOR INJURIES.

The bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the bill, but there are Senators who desire to offer amendments to it, and it is a long bill. Let it go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to state to Senators that there is one amendment that I wish to offer. I wish to provide by amendment that the present force of the employees in the Department of Labor who are engaged in this work shall be transferred to the new work and be made a part of the new work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to commend the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia. I was greatly pleased to find that the Senator from Georgia had decided not to create another bureau but a division in connection with the bill just recommitted. So in this case, I think, we ought to be very careful and transfer these officials and not leave it open so that additional appointments may be made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, just one moment before the bill goes over. I have given a good deal of thought to it, and I rather think it would be better to have three men. It is a semijudicial work in passing upon these claims. The committee put in a provision at my suggestion which recognizes an entirely new principle in compensation that is resisted by a good many other friends of compensation, but I am sure it is right.

We have an amendment which provides that this commission where they find that the injury resulted in whole or in part from the negligence of the employee injured may reduce the amount of the compensation allowed in the bill in proportion to such negligence, and that the total reduction shall not be more than 25 per cent. I put the amount small. I have still left him enough to live. We only make the reduction in case there is not a death, and yet we believe there should be what I believe is a most essential principle that has been omitted in these compensation acts, some lessening of the compensation to the man whose own negligence brings on the casualty.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the difference between this bill and the compensation bill reported by the Judiciary Committee which is now on the calendar?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it is a much more complete bill. I think it is a much more comprehensive bill. I am not responsible for the draft of this bill. There is an organization in New York City which is devoted to philanthropic purposes and to compensation legislation, and it has helped to prepare the compensation bills for most of the States of the Union. I think they prepared the original bill, and the House worked over it and perfected it. It is one of the most comprehensive and philosophic bills and the most complete that I have ever studied. Our amendment contains a principle that I think ought to be in all these compensation bills, some small lessening of the compensation when the man's own negligence causes the accident. We have put it in by way of amendment in this bill, but in no case is it to be more than 25 per cent of the amount allowed, to be lessened according to the degree of his negligence, and not to apply if he is killed and the money goes to his wife and children.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I venture to express the hope that the distinguished chairman of the committee will reflect further upon that provision of the bill, and I feel entirely satisfied that the more thought he gives to it the more firm will become his conviction that it is unsound in principle.

Mr. President, the chief reason or at least one of the chief reasons for substituting the principle of compensation for all instead of the present method of exacting reparation upon the ground of liability is that recovery is defeated almost invariably in cases of alleged contributory negligence.

The Senator from Georgia, I am sure, has had a large experience in the trial of cases of this character. I am sure his experience will convince him that it often happens that a man is technically guilty of contributory negligence when really it is a misfortune, and that he should not be denied a recovery on that ground. There are many things in the infinite division of labor that go to distract the attention of a man for an instant. For instance, his hand comes up against a saw or a man engaged in any other dangerous occupation is guilty of negligence; of course he ought to have been attending to his duty but we are all frail, we forget about it; we do not give the attention that we should. It often happens that a man's negligence is entirely excusable—that is, it is something that diverted his attention at the time when it ought to have been riveted upon his work.

It is rather the frailty of the human mind; and what is more significant, Mr. President, it exists in different and varying degrees in different people. Some people have the great power of concentration, and they are not readily diverted; others, of less strong mental make-up, of less vigorous mentality, are more easily diverted. Of course the hard, studious man is the man who is able to concentrate his attention on what is before him and keep it there, but the man of less restraint permits his attention to be diverted from the matter in hand.

Then again—

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of the bill. Will the Senator not allow us to go on with the calendar now? The bill will be up for consideration again, as the Senator knows. I do not like to take the Senator off his feet, but—

Mr. WALSH. I did not intend to trespass upon the attention of the Senate to-day, but I was afraid I would not be here the next time the bill came up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, just one word. I have given much thought to this subject and my views are matured in favor of some reduction of compensation to the party injured by his own negligence.

EMPLOYMENT OF FEDERAL PRISONERS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) authorizing the appointment of a special joint commission of the Senate and House of Representatives to investigate the employment of Federal prisoners in industrial occupations for the benefit of the Government of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, to strike out "advantageously" and insert "judiciously," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That a special joint commission, to be composed of two Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is hereby created for the purposes of ascertaining—

First. To what industrial occupations the Federal prisoners of the Government of the United States can be most judiciously employed.

Second. What articles of manufacture now being used or in contemplation of use by the Government such prison labor is best adapted.

Third. The extent to which the Government should engage in such industrial activities for the sole use and benefit of the Government.

Fourth. The extent of the competition of such activities on the part of the Government with free labor in the country.

Fifth. The feasibility and justice of compensation to Federal prisoners or their dependents while incarcerated in said prisons out of any profits that may accrue to the Government from such industrial activities.

Sixth. The cost of installing the necessary machinery and the other equipment necessary to carry on such enterprises in said prisons.

Sec. 2. That said special joint commission shall make said investigation during the interim of the adjournment of the present session of Congress and the convening of the second session of this Congress, filing its report not later than the second Monday in December next.

Sec. 3. That for the necessary expenses incident to the investigation aforesaid not to exceed $5,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended on vouchers approved by the chairman of the joint commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJUDICATION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

The bill (H. R. 6918) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

ANNUITIES OF SIOUX INDIANS.

The bill (S. 135) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in section 1, page 2, line 13, after the word "act," to insert "without interest," and in line 14, after the word "include," to strike out "the present value of the same and the" and insert "principal or"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases, for any annuities which may be due to said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands of Indians and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stats. L., p. 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stats. L., p. 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed; and said act of forfeiture and all subsequent acts and parts of acts and treaties inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed for the purposes hereof: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of the passage of this act without interest and shall determine and include principal or capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against such amount so found all payments or other provisions, of every name and nature, made to or for said bands by the United States, or to or for any members thereof under the authority of any act of Congress, excluding treaties, since said act of forfeiture was passed, which are properly chargeable against said unpaid annuities.

Sec. 2. That upon the rendition of such judgment, and in conformity therewith, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing on said roll the names of all living members of the said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom the names of those found to have participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

Sec. 3. That proceedings shall be commenced by petition, verified by the attorney or firm of attorneys so authorized by John Eastman, assignee of Charles A. Eastman or Charles Hill, the attorneys in fact employed by said Indians under a contract bearing date November 27, 1896, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs June 29, 1897, and by the Secretary of the Interior July 1, 1897, and said suit shall be conducted by said attorney or firm of attorneys as attorneys of record, together with other counsel appearing in the case; and the court shall find and award upon a quantum meruit to said attorneys and their associates the compensation which shall be paid to them for services rendered and to be rendered, and distribute the sum thus awarded to such attorneys and their associates as their respective interests may appear, under agreements among themselves, which may be filed with the court, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sum of money to the said attorneys immediately upon rendition of final judgment, out of the proceeds of such judgment, if any, when an appropriation therefor shall be made by Congress.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to apply, out of any funds to the credit of said Indians, the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the attorneys of said Indians in said case in the taking of testimony therein and defraying the expenses of printing incidental thereto.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 2208) for the relief of James L. Yokum was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6698) for the relief of Edward L. Keyes was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

SUITS UNDER REVENUE LAW.

The bill (H. R. 14299) to amend section 33 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 33 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, so as to read:

Sec. 33. That when any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any court of a State against any officer appointed under or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States now or hereafter enacted, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer, on account of any act done under color of his office or of any such law, or on account of any right, title, or authority claimed by such officer or other person under any such law, or is commenced against any person holding property or estate by title derived from any such officer and affects the validity of any such revenue law, or against any officer of the courts of the United States for or on account of any act done under color of his office or in the performance of his duties as such officer, or when any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced against any person for or on account of anything done by him while an officer of either House of Congress in the discharge of his official duty in executing any order of such House, the said suit or prosecution may at any time before the trial or final hearing thereof be removed for trial into the district court next to be holden in the district where the same is pending upon the petition of such defendant to said district court and in the following manner: Said petition shall set forth the nature of the suit or prosecution and be verified by affidavit and, together with a certificate signed by an attorney or counselor at law of some court of record of the State where such suit or prosecution is commenced or of the United States stating that, as counsel for the petitioner, he has examined the proceedings against him and carefully inquired into all the matters set forth in the petition, and that he believes them to be true, shall be presented to the said district court, if in session, or if it be not, to the clerk thereof at his office, and shall be filed in said office. The cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of the district court and shall proceed as a cause originally commenced in that court; but all bail and other security given upon such suit or prosecution shall continue in like force and effect as if the same had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the State court. When the suit is commenced in the State court by summons, subpoena, petition, or any other process except capias, the clerk of the district court shall issue a writ of certiorari to the State court requiring it to send to the district court the record and the proceedings in the cause. When it is commenced by capias or by any other similar form of proceedings by which a personal arrest is ordered, he shall issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, a duplicate of which shall be delivered to the clerk of the State court or left at his office by the marshal of the district or his deputy or by some other person duly authorized thereto; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the State court to stay all further proceedings in the cause, and the suit or prosecution, upon delivery of such process, or leaving the same as aforesaid, shall be held to be removed to the district court, and any further proceedings, trial, or judgment therein in the State court shall be void. If the defendant in the suit or prosecution be in actual custody on mesne process therein, it shall be the duty of the marshal, by virtue of the writ of habeas corpus cum causa, to take the body of the defendant into his custody, to be dealt with in the cause, according to law and the order of the district court, or, in vacation, of any judge thereof; and if, upon the removal of such suit or prosecution, it is made to appear to the district court that no copy of the record and proceedings therein in the State court can be obtained, the district court may allow and require the plaintiff to proceed de novo and to file a declaration of his cause of action, and the parties may thereupon proceed as in actions originally brought in said district court. On failure of the plaintiff so to proceed, judgment of non prosequitur may be rendered against him, with costs for the defendant.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD RESIDENCE OF SOLDIERS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 147) extending the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898 (30 Stats. L., p. 473), shall be applicable in all cases of military service rendered in connection with operations in Mexico or along the border thereof, whether such service be in the regular military or naval organization of the United States or the militia of the several States, and whether or not a state of war may exist or may have been declared.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN NURSES' ASSOCIATION.

The bill (S. 6667), to incorporate the American Nurses' Association, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Annie W. Goodrich, Adda Eldredge, Elsie M. Lawler, Katherine De Witt, M. Louise Itwiss, Helen B. Criswell, S. Lillian Clayton, Jane A. Delano, Mary M. Riddle, Ella Phillips Crandall, Mathild Krueger, and their associates and successors are hereby created a body corporate in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the name of this corporation shall be "The American Nurses' Association," and by that name it shall have perpetual succession, with power to sue and be sued in courts of law and equity within the jurisdiction of the United States; to adopt and use a common seal and to alter the same at pleasure; to acquire by devise, bequest, or otherwise and to have and to hold such real and personal estate as shall be deemed advisable; to administer all funds and property held for the purposes of the corporation; to mortgage or otherwise encumber, should it be necessary so to do, the real estate which it may hereafter own or acquire, and to give therefor such evidence of indebtedness as such corporation may decide upon; to ordain and establish by-laws and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States of America or any State thereof; and generally to do all such acts and things (including the establishment of regulations for the election of associate and successors) as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act and to promote the purposes of said organization.

SEC. 3. That the purposes of this corporation are and shall be to promote the professional and educational advancement of nurses in every proper way; to establish and maintain a code of ethics among nurses; to elevate the standard of nursing education; to distribute relief to such nurses as may become ill, disabled, or destitute; to disseminate information on the subject of nursing by publications in official periodicals or otherwise; to bring into communication with each other the various nurses and associations and federations of nurses throughout the United States of America; and to succeed to all the rights and property held by the American Nurses' Association as a corporation duly incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York.

SEC. 4. That the corporation may adopt by-laws for the admission and qualification of members, the election of officers, the management of its property, and the regulation of its affairs, with a governing body so constituted as may be deemed advisable, and with power to amend by-laws at pleasure.

SEC. 5. That the principal office of the corporation shall be located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, but offices may be maintained and meetings of the corporation may be held at such times and places as the corporation may designate, and meetings of the directors, or such other officers as constitute the governing body, may be held at such times and places as they shall designate.

SEC. 6. That Congress shall have the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act at any time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD CO.

The bill (H. R. 10546) for the relief of the Illinois Central Railroad Co., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $100 to reimburse the Illinois Central Railroad Co. for the payment by it of a fine of like amount levied and collected by the Secretary of the Treasury for failure on the part of the railroad company to clear a shipment of household goods originating in Habana, Cuba, and destined to Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, through the United States customs at Portal, N. Dak., it having been ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury subsequent to the payment of the fine by the carrier that the shipment had been duly cleared through the United States customs at Noyes, Minn., and that no customs duties were due or collectable thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACTIONS FOR DEATH ON THE HIGH SEAS.

The bill (S. 4288) relating to the maintenance of actions for death on the high seas and other navigable waters was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 7, after the word "within," to strike out "one year" and to insert "two years"; in line 12, after the words "period of," to strike out "one year" and insert "two years"; and, in line 15, after the word "offered" and the period, to strike out "After said period of one year it shall be barred as to an innocent purchaser for value without notice," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That such suit shall be begun within two years from the date of such wrongful act, neglect, or default, unless during that period there has not been reasonable opportunity for securing jurisdiction of the vessel, person, or corporation sought to be charged; but after the expiration of such period of two years the right of action hereby given shall not be deemed to have lapsed until 90 days after a reasonable opportunity to secure jurisdiction has been offered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 11, to insert:

SEC. 7. That this act shall not affect any pending suit, action, or proceeding.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before final action is taken on this bill I desire to say that the question was raised in the Judiciary Committee, by which the bill was considered, as to whether it is within the power of the Government of the United States to create the liability which would come into existence under an act of this character in case of accidents happening upon the high seas upon a vessel belonging to some other country and sailing under a flag other than our own. I have not been convinced that the jurisdiction of our Government extends so far. It is my own impression that the act will be applicable only to vessels of United States registry; but in terms the bill applies to all vessels. I dare say that no harm will be done by the passage of the bill in the comprehensive form in which it has been reported, although it might as well be understood that there is a serious question as to whether or not it can ever be made applicable to ships other than ships of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHOSHONE TRIBE OF INDIANS IN WYOMING.

The bill (S. 6526) authorizing the Shoshone Tribe of Indians residing on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Shoshone Tribe of Indians residing on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming may have or claim to have against the United States under the treaty between the United States and said Shoshone Tribe ratified February 26, 1869, or under any other laws or treaties, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the rights of said Shoshone Tribe in and to said reservation and for determination of the amounts, if any, of the funds of said Shoshone Tribe which have been wrongfully paid by the United States to the Arapahoe Tribe of Indians residing on said reservation, and for determination of the amounts, if any, due to said

Shoshone Tribe from the United States for the use and occupancy of said reservation by said Arapahoe Tribe, and for determination of the amounts, if any, due to said Shoshone Tribe from the United States for portions of said reservation, if any, which have been appropriated by the United States for said Arapahoe Tribe or individual members thereof; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Shoshone Tribe against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim, including gratuities, which the United States may have against said Shoshone Tribe, and to enter judgment thereon: Provided, That if it be found that the United States Government has wrongfully appropriated any part or parcel of said reservation for the said Arapahoe Tribe of Indians or individual members thereof, judgment for damages in respect thereto, if any, shall be confined to the value of the land at the time of said appropriation, together with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum thereon to the date of the decree of the Court of Claims rendered in respect thereto, less any legal or equitable set-offs or counterclaims, including gratuities, which the United States Government may have against the said Shoshone Tribe of Indians. The judgment of the Court of Claims in this matter rendered, when satisfied, shall annul and cancel all claims and title of the said Shoshone Tribe in and to said lands, as well as all other matters and things adjudicated and authorized to be adjudicated by the Court of Claims, as herein provided. The Court of Claims shall advance said cause upon the docket for hearing, and shall have authority to determine and adjudge the rights, both legal and equitable, of said Shoshone Tribe and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof shall be a full settlement of all claims of said Shoshone Tribe against the United States. Such cause shall be commenced within one year after the passage of this act, and in such cause the said Shoshone Tribe shall be party plaintiff and the United States shall be party defendant; and the petition setting forth the cause of said Shoshone Tribe shall be verified by the attorneys employed by said Shoshone Tribe to prosecute their claims under this act under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as provided by law, upon information and belief as to the facts alleged therein, and no other verification to said petition shall be necessary. The Attorney General of the United States is hereby directed to appear in said cause in behalf of the United States. Upon the final determination of said cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find reasonable to be paid to the attorneys employed by said Shoshone Tribe, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due to said Shoshone Tribe, or out of any sum or sums which may be placed to the credit of said Shoshone Tribe as a result of said cause: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court be in excess of the amount stipulated in the approved contract nor amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount and value of the judgment recovered in said cause: Provided further, That all sums of money which may be found to be due and recovered for the Shoshone Tribe of Indians under the provisions of this act, less attorney's fees, shall be placed to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States at 3 per cent interest per annum, subject to such disposition as Congress may direct.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIENS OF JUDGMENTS AND DECREES OF COURTS.

The bill (H. R. 11416) to repeal an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August 1, 1888," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, what is the effect of this bill?

Mr. NELSON. It is really a local bill pertaining to the State of Louisiana. A special law was passed by that State several years ago in respect of the filing of liens of judgments. This bill is to repeal that law, and it only affects that State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the request of a number of Senators, I ask that Orders of Business Nos. 685 and 688, being respectively House bill 204 and Senate bill 5885, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bills will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4857) granting an extension of patent to Thomas A. Dicks was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

MONUMENT IN ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY, VA.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 143) granting permission for the erection of a monument in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., to the memory and in honor of the members of the various orders of sisters who gave their services as nurses on battle fields, in hospitals, and on floating hospitals during the Civil War was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant permission to the Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, to erect a monument in Arlington National Cemetery, Va., to the memory and in honor of the members of the various orders of sisters who gave their services as nurses on battle fields, in hospitals, and on floating hospitals during the Civil War, records of whose services are authenticated and in possession of said ladies' auxiliary; and it directs the Secretary of War to select a suitable site or location upon which to erect the monument; but the monument shall be erected without expense to the Government, and be presented to the people of the United States by the Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians in America.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 168) requesting the Attorney General to examine into the facts concerning the illegal killing of seals, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2512) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of West Virginia was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a number of letters in reference to that bill, and I see that the Senator from West Virginia who reported the bill is not present. I desire to interrogate him in regard to the matter, and so I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

CLAIMS OF DISLOYALISTS.

The bill (S. 3700) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" by adding after the word "Army" the words "Navy, Marine Corps, and Revenue Service."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PARK CITY, UTAH.

The bill (S. 6720) to increase the limit of cost of public building at Park City, Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the limit of cost of the United States Federal building at Park City, Utah, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to meet the additional cost of changes and additions to the building.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator for what purpose is this building to be erected?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator, I desire to say that it is a post-office building, to be erected at Park City. It was provided for eight years ago, with an appropriation of $30,000. There was some question concerning the title, and for some years the Government was unable to acquire proper title to the land. The Government now has secured the title, but according to the plans that were drawn for the Government the building would cost forty-nine hundred and some odd dollars more than the $30,000 appropriated. The Government now finds that everything has advanced in cost, and the department has sent a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House requesting that before the construction be commenced an appropriation of $10,000 be made to take care of the building. They are ready to proceed with it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONGRESSIONAL CLUB OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 6178) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Congressional Club in Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not care to object to the consideration of that bill if any Senator can give any reason why it should be passed. I should like to inquire why should the property of a club be exempt from taxation?

Mr. OVERMAN. And a Congressional Club at that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, as I have said, I do not care to object to the consideration of the bill, but I should like some reason given for its passage.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection having been made, the bill will go over.

MANUFACTURE OF GAS IN SOUTH HILO, HAWAII.

The bill (H. R. 15777) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, as amended by Congress, relating to the granting of a franchise for the purpose of manufacturing and supplying gas in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, we are not supplied with copies of the bill now being considered. It seems to be rather an extensive bill, and I think I will object to its consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to that bill. It has been before the committee and we have waited before reporting until a member of the Public Utilities Commission of Hawaii could come to Washington. After hearing him, the committee determined that the bill as passed by the Legislature of Hawaii and as approved by the House should also be approved by the Senate. I will state to the Senator—

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, relying as I do upon the diligence of the Senator from Colorado in respect to all these matters, and reposing the confidence that I do in his judgment, I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE of Maryland in the chair). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the franchise is to be granted to a private corporation in Honolulu?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is to be granted to a private corporation in Honolulu, subject to regulation as to rates, and so forth, by the public-utilities commission there.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That safeguard might improve it, but on general principles I think that all public utilities of that character should belong to the municipality.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No one wants to undertake this work there except a private corporation; and that corporation will be subject to regulation as to its rates and other matters by the public-utilities commission. The act granting the franchise was passed by the Legislature of Hawaii, and that act has been approved by the House of Representatives. The House bill approving it was referred to the Senate committee, and I received a telegram from the governor of Hawaii in relation to the laying of the pipes; but I delayed reporting the bill for probably a month in order that a member of the public-utilities commission might come here and explain the matter. He came here and consented to the bill. It is agreed to by everybody, and it seems to me that it should be passed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well; I will acquiesce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD RESIDENCE OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the calendar been finished under the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; it has been finished.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to inquire whether Calendar No. 677, being Senate joint resolution 147, has been acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Chair does not mean it was passed over, but was adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution was passed by the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to it whatever, but, on looking at the Statutes at Large, which this bill proposes to make applicable to the soldiers of the Regular Army and the militia now on the Mexican border, I find it refers to the act approved June 16, 1898, page 473, Thirtieth Statutes at Large. There are four acts on that page all approved on the same date, and I believe that the joint resolution should be reconsidered, and that the chapter of the statutes should be put in so as to identify it; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move to reconsider the votes whereby the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no particular concern about it; but I wanted to call attention to the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to secure a copy of the joint resolution, and see what the trouble is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is no trouble about it, except that the joint resolution on the calendar which the Senate has passed purports to extend the provisions of an act in the Thirtieth Statutes at Large, to which it refers only by the page and date of the approval of the act. There are four acts on the page of the Statutes at Large mentioned in the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the other language of the joint resolution so clearly indicate the particular act approved June 16, 1898, that it could be plainly identified?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There are four acts in the Statutes at Large on the same page approved on that day, each being a separate chapter, and I say that if we insert in the joint resolution the number of the chapter as well as the date, it will serve to identify the act referred to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is the Senator prepared to suggest the designation of the chapter which should go in the joint resolution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have it right here, and I can prepare it in just a minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Connecticut that the reference of the joint resolution is to the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 473).

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know that; but there are four acts on page 473, approved June 16, 1898. The one that is mentioned in the joint resolution is an act in relation to the giving of a man in the military service of the United States the right to have the time of his service counted in computing his residence upon a homestead taken up on the public lands, or, if he is discharged, wounded, or disabled, the time of his enlistment, not to exceed one year, may be counted as a portion of the time he is required to have resided on his land. That act is chapter 458, and if in the joint resolution, in line 4, where it says in parenthesis "[Thirtieth Statutes at Large, page 473]," we were to add the words "chapter 458," that would identify the act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it had better be reconsidered, and we had better leave the matter to the author of the resolution to take care of. I move that the action of the Senate in passing the joint resolution in the shape in which it was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want to imperil the consideration or passage of the joint resolution. We may never reach it again at this session.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think, under the circumstances, we would all give consent that the author of the joint resolution might ask for its consideration at any time, as it occupies a peculiar position, and we ought to do that. I think we ought to reconsider it, and I therefore make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the votes whereby the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

MAINTENANCE OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, (S. 6748) providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil, and which is asked for by the Department of the Interior. It is very short. I will say that the bill has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all moneys appropriated or available for Indian school purposes may be expended without restriction as to per capita expenditure for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any Indian school.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ILLEGAL KILLING OF SEALS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senate to recur to Order of Business No. 689, being Senate resolution 168, to the consideration of which objection was made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], as I understand. I think that if he would attend to the substance of the resolution for a moment he would be constrained to withdraw the objection. It simply requests and authorizes the Attorney General to examine into the facts as stated in House Report No. 500, Sixty-third Congress, second session, for the purpose of advising himself and ascertaining whether an action does not lie in behalf of the United States against a company having the seal privileges on the Pribilof Islands. I apprehend that the Senator will find no reason for not having the Attorney General make these investigations.

I might say, in this connection, that the bill comes to us introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and with the concurrence of the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not remember that it encountered any opposition at all before that committee. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I have myself examined the report with some degree of care, and I certainly think that sufficient appears from the report to fully justify us in asking the Attorney General to make this inquiry.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I notice—

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to say something?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will.

Mr. NELSON. I am somewhat familiar with the matter to which the Senator from Montana refers, and I am satisfied, from the facts that have come to my knowledge, that this bill ought to pass. It is a matter of justice, and it is a matter of right. There has been a disposition in certain quarters to evade the law that we passed some years ago to preserve the fur-seal herd up in the Pribilof Islands; and it is in order to get at the bottom of these facts, and for the protection of the herd, that this resolution ought to pass.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I should like to add my voice to the opinion given by both the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Minnesota. I think it would be very negligent on the part of this body if it did not pass this resolution and give the Government an opportunity to ascertain what there is back of this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There was an objection which has not been withdrawn yet; and I am getting information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator to ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am being talked to by three Senators, and I am not allowed to say a word myself. After they have finished I shall have something to say.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator, I should like to say another word.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I have not the floor. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I understood that the Senator from Connecticut had. I was going to say to the Senator that I feel that the report makes a perfect prima facie case of liability in a very large sum to the Government of the United States. Now, it may be that the facts which apparently fix that liability are capable of some explanation, although, if there is an explanation which would relieve these parties from liability; it is certainly not disclosed in the report or in the testimony that accompanies the report. If I am any judge of the matter at all, I should say that a prima facie case of liability has been made.

Under the circumstances, it seems to me that it is quite proper for the Senate—the attention of Members of this body having been called to it—to request the Attorney General to make the investigation, with a view to the institution of a suit, if in his judgment a suit can be maintained. Indeed, my attention having been called to the facts, I should not feel that I had discharged my duty here as a Member of the Senate and as in a certain sense a guardian of the interests of the United States, if I did not urge this action; and I trust that the Senator from Connecticut will find some good reason for withdrawing his objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I would have withdrawn it long ago if I had been given an opportunity; but I was so interested in the three orations that I did not have a chance.

I want to say, however, that the basis of my objection was simply this: The resolution purported to come from the Judiciary Committee. I am a member of that committee, and I had not heard any such resolution brought before the committee. I could not attend last Monday's meeting, if it came from that meeting, because I was out of town. When I saw it on the calendar I sent for the report to which it alludes—to wit, Report No. 500, Sixty-third Congress, second session—and I find that there is a minority report accompanying that report, which starts out by saying:

The undersigned have carefully considered the testimony of all the witnesses before the committee during these hearings, which have now been prolonged for three years. They are of the conviction that the charges under consideration, involving alleged irregularity in the conduct and management of the business of killing fur seals on the Government reservation known as the Pribilof or Seal Islands of Alaska, are without foundation.

I have had no opportunity to examine that minority report, which contains about 22 pages. I do not know whether the Senator from Montana has seen it or not; but as I knew nothing about it and as no Senator said a word about it when the bill was reached, I thought it might go over until it was explained.

Inasmuch as the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Montana think the investigation ought to be made, I have no objection, and I will withdraw any that I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to examine into the facts as stated in House Report No. 500, Sixty-third Congress, second session, April 4, 1914, concerning the illegal killing of fur seals on the Pribilof Islands, and taking of skins therefrom, and to bring suit as urged thereon if the law and evidence warrant such action.

ERSKINE R. HAYES.

Mr. HARDING. I should like to have unanimous consent to revert to order of business 539, House bill 7062, which was passed over the other day because no one was present to explain the measure. It is a very pitiable case which has come to the attention of the Senate at a previous session, and I may say that the Senate has already passed such a bill at its last session. This time the measure comes to us with the approval of the House. There was not the slightest objection in the committee to the relief being granted, and I should like to have it considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Erskine R. Hayes, the sum of $3,000, in full compensation for injuries received on the 16th day of December, 1902, while in the performance of his duty as an employee of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Treasury Department, in the city of Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there an amendment to the bill?

Mr. HARDING. No; there is no Senate committee amendment to the bill. It was amended in the House, and the amount reduced from $5,000 to $3,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what salary this man was drawing in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

Mr. HARDING. Only approximately $800, as I remember; probably less. I will state, for the benefit of the Senator from Utah, that the man was injured, and it was thought at one time that he had recovered, and for a number of years he pressed no claim against the department. It has since developed that it is a permanent injury, however. The man has a wife and children to support, and is in a very distressing state. I think the claim is a very just one and ought to be allowed.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be a meritorious claim. I do not know a thing about it. All I questioned was whether we were going to follow the rule of the Claims Committee in this case as in all other cases of similar occurrences. Of course there may be some circumstances that I know nothing about to justify the $3,000 appropriation.

Mr. HARDING. The man is perfectly helpless. He has to be retained in a case that braces his spine. It is a very pitiable case, and worthy of our consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] whether he knows anything about the case?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, this bill was passed by the Senate during the last Congress. It is a most extreme case. There was a man working in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at a salary of $660 a year, and he was injured, and apparently recovered. Several years later he became a hopeless cripple, and it turned out that his spine was injured. At the time of his injury he was 22 years old, weighing 180 pounds. He has lived all these years. It has been several years since the accident happened. He has very little property. The bill was considered very carefully in the committee a couple of years ago. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Ohio. My recollection is that the amount carried in the bill at that time was $5,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. How much is it now?

Mr. BRYAN. Three thousand dollars. It is an unusual case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would that be better for him than to come under our general bill, that we have about ready, and receive his annuity during the balance of his life?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I think it would, because he is not apt to live long.

Mr. HARDING. I should prefer the enactment of this bill, because it would bring immediate relief.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object to the bill. He has already been waiting for some time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEWARK TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] had to leave the Chamber. He asked me to report for him House joint resolution 193, authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Newark, N. J., with a special cancelling die for the Newark two hundred and fiftieth anniversary celebration, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, does not the Post Office Department object to the passage of that bill on the ground that it involves considerable expense?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the Senator from Alabama said the other day.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, what is the order under which we are acting? Have we a right to consider that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We have a right to consider bills that are on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is true, Mr. President; and I will withdraw the request, because it is not in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think there is yet time to consider Order of Business 324, House bill 407, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that the child-labor bill?

Mr. STERLING. No; it is the stock-raising homestead bill—a bill which was reached at the last call of the calendar, and two objections to its immediate consideration were withdrawn, and then the hour was nearly up.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that the bill should be considered, but the Senator from Arizona has an amendment which he desires to offer to the bill.

Mr. STERLING. That was urged the last time we were considering the calendar—that the Senator from Arizona had an amendment to this bill. Suppose he has; are we to wait for the Senator from Arizona to appear and present an amendment to this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I object to its consideration at this time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

ADJUDICATION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a bill that was objected to this afternoon, to see if possibly we can not pass it now. It is known as the Mann bill. It is a bill that has passed the House and was introduced by Congressman MANN. It proposes to repeal what is called the Crawford amendment, so as to permit the parties who have these cases pending in the Court of Claims to go on with their litigation.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not pass that in five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. We can pass it in half an hour, though.

Mr. SMOOT. But the unanimous-consent agreement is that we will take a recess at 6 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh! I did not know that. If I had known that, I would not have made the request.

Mr. SMOOT. We are working under a special order to that effect.

NAVAL DENTAL RESERVE CORPS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter merely by way of correction of an erroneous statement that was made here on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
August 4, 1916.

MY DEAR SIR: May I, in justice to myself and other members of the Naval Dental Reserve Corps, ask you to procure the publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the plea of not guilty to the charges stated and implied in the following quotation from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 12835, in reference to amendment 77, pages 52 to 56, naval appropriation bill, namely:

"Not a line was written by any member of the committee. The amendment about the Dental Reserve Corps was brought to me by Dr. Brown of Columbus, who is chairman of the legislative committee of the National Dental Association. The department made no objection to it, and it was put in exactly as it was handed to me by Dr. Brown, who told me it was satisfactory to all the members of the Dental Reserve Corps."

The wisdom and policy of this disclaimer of the responsibility of the committee for the origin and the strikingly peculiar provisions of the amendment are readily recognized, but, unhappily, there is thereby attributed to all the Dental Reserve Corps officers a degree of damaging responsibility which is therein disclaimed for the committee.

It is inconceivable to me that the Senate or any Senator would deny us the opportunity of making the same disclaimer through the same channel that was used for the committee's own protection.

I desire, however, to go further than merely entering the plea of not guilty and to deny most emphatically that any correctly informed Dental Reserve Corps officer expressed satisfaction with the provisions of the amendment which are known to be deceptive and a false pretense, the department having held these same provisions in existing law to prohibit instead of to authorize, as was the evident intent of the act of Congress, the more economic employment of Dental Reserve Corps officers when required to conserve the health and efficiency of the personnel.

To remain silent, under an imputation thus reflecting seriously on our intelligence, our sincerity, and our adherence to correct principles is too much to expect of men of character.

I have the honor to remain,
Faithfully yours,

WM. DONNALLY.

STATUE OF JAMES BUCHANAN.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent to take up Order of Business 152, Senate joint resolution 93, authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States. The committee reported this joint resolution with an amendment striking out the location and leaving the location to the Fine Arts Commission. I have a letter from Col. Harts, secretary of the commission, saying that they approve of the location that was already in the joint resolution. A joint resolution has come over from the House in the proper form, with the location as approved by the Commission of Fine Arts. I move, therefore, that it be substituted for the Senate joint resolution and passed. I move to substitute House joint resolution 145.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I think I shall have to object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the consideration of the joint resolution, so it will have to go over.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I will look into the matter, and the next time the calendar comes up I may withdraw the objection.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, this is a matter where contracts are pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Maryland that it would be necessary to have the original joint resolution as passed by the House before it can be considered here.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It has come over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Secretary informs the Chair that it has not.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It has come over, and has been referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The original is in the hands of the committee. It must be here on the desk of the Secretary before it can be considered.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senate resolution, which is in similar terms, has been reported with an amendment striking out the site.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; but there is a rule providing that the original bill as passed by the House must be here on the desk of the Secretary before it can have consideration.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have asked unanimous consent for the substitution, but the Senator from Pennsylvania objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not believe that it is subject to unanimous consent. That is one of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement we are only to consider bills on the calendar under Rule VIII; and as soon as the consideration of the calendar was completed, beginning with Order of Business No. 593, any bill on the calendar might be taken up by unanimous consent upon request of a Senator—just the bills on the calendar.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I was about to ask unanimous consent to consider two or three bridge bills that were reported this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know whether or not they come under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. NELSON. They are on the calendar. They were reported to-day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If I remember correctly, those bills were passed.

Mr. NELSON. Were they all passed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the bills were all passed this morning.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my recollection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What time is it?

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, August 7, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, August 5, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that in spite of the brutal instincts which seem to be in the ascendancy among some of the nations now engaged in a cruel war the godlike is asserting itself in solemn protestations and millions are being poured out to alleviate the suffering of the mangled men and the sorrowing women and children bereft of their loved ones; and we most fervently pray that out of it all the godlike may assert itself to a degree which shall make war a crime so hideous that it shall pass into oblivion; that Thy kingdom may come in the hearts of all Thy children; that they may think the thoughts they know they ought to think, do the things they know they ought to do, live the life they know they ought to live, and thus honor and glorify Thy holy name. In the spirit of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 54, 112, and 223 to the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6561. An act providing for the sale at public auction of all unsold suburban lots not reserved for public purposes in the Government town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for the issuance of patents for those previously sold under the act of May 2, 1906, on the payment of the price at which the said lots were reappraised under said act without further condition or delay.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16534. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboisstown, Lycoming County, Pa.; and

H. R. 16604. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Montgomery, Lycoming County, Pa., to Muncy Creek Township, Lycoming County, Pa.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill (H. R. 15957) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16290) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. SMOOR as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15494) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. SMOOR as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16912. An act granting the consent of Congress to Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 16875. An act granting the consent of Congress to Crisp County, Ga., to construct a bridge across Flint River, Ga., between Crisp and Sumter Counties;

H. R. 16891. An act granting the consent of Congress to Traill County, N. Dak., and to Polk County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North;

H. R. 16764. An act to authorize the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties in Pennsylvania, their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Watsonstown, Northumberland County, Pa., to White Deer Township, Union County, Pa.;

H. R. 16380. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Highland Township, Pennington County, Minn., to construct a bridge across Red Lake River;

H. R. 13224. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914; and

H. R. 7883. An act for the relief of Charlotte M. Johnston.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16699) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12197. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3069. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved March 4, 1915.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill H. R. 16699.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up the conference report on the Military Academy bill. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1085).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16699) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 5, 6, 7, and 9.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 8, 10, 11, 13, and 15, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"Provided further, That the present manager of the cadet store shall, on his own application, after 40 years' service as clerk, superintendent, and manager of said store, be entitled to be placed on the retired list of the Army with the pay of a retired pay clerk, Quartermaster Corps, of the same period of service."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That whenever a cadet shall fail to pass any required examination because deficient in any one subject of instruction he shall have the right to apply for a second examination regarding such subject by making written application therefor to the Academic Board within 10 days after being officially notified of such failure. The examination demanded shall be held within 60 days from the date of such application, and if the cadet being otherwise qualified shall pass the same by compliance with the requirements existing at the time of the first examination, he shall be readmitted to the academy: Provided further, That this proviso shall apply to those former cadets who failed in not more than two subjects during the current year who shall make application for such examination within 20 days after the approval of this act: Provided further, That any cadet who fails to pass any required examination shall have no more than one reexamination: And provided further, That nothing contained in section 1325 of the Revised Statutes shall render ineligible any former cadet honorably discharged from the Military Academy for deficiency in studies, if otherwise qualified, as a civilian candidate for appointment to any vacancy in the grade of second lieutenant under class 6 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to appoint three officers of the Army, whose duty it shall be to investigate and to make report to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1916, what is necessary to be done in the way of buildings and other improvements to accommodate and care for the increased Corps of Cadets, as provided by the act of May 4, 1916, together with the probable cost thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JOHN C. MCKENZIE,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The statement of the managers on the part of the House as to the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments in the Senate to H. R. 16699, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year 1917, and for other purposes:

The Senate receded from its amendments numbered 3, 5, 6, 7, and 9, Nos. 3, 5, 6, and 7 being amendments classifying privates in the academy into privates of the first class and privates; No. 9 being an amendment providing for two professional civilian instructors in gymnastics, etc., instead of one, as provided by the House.

The House receded from its disagreements on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, No. 1 being an increase of $500 for pay of seven professors and providing for the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel for a permanent professor who on July 1, 1916, should have served not less than 33 years in the Army, one-third of which service should have been as professor and instructor at the Military Academy, and also a proviso granting to the storekeeper, who has had 40 years' service, the privilege of retiring with the pay and allowances of a pay clerk, Quartermaster Corps. No. 4 is a mere correction of the omission of a word in the House bill. No. 8 is a new item for pay of one battalion sergeant major, $768. No. 10 is a proviso giving the chapel organist quarters and allowances as those of a second lieutenant. No. 11 is a new item for the purchase of the latest model sketching apparatus, $1,000. No. 13 is a new item for the purchase of one 8-ton road roller, $2,850. No. 15 provides for the instruction at the academy of Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador.

Amendment No. 2: Provides for a reexamination in the event of failure in any two subjects, and also grants to former cadets who have failed on their examination the same privilege as a civilian to be appointed a second lieutenant in the Army.

Amendment No. 12: Provides for an appropriation of $5,000 instead of $8,685 in the Senate bill and $3,879 in the House bill.

Amendment No. 14: Provided for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the enlargement and extension of the buildings, grounds, etc., and in lieu thereof the Secretary of War is authorized to have an investigation made as to the necessity for such improvements and report the same back at the next session of Congress.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JOHN C. MCKENZIE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman desires to ask some question about it, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 11240.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title and then read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 11240) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1052).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11240) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 11, and 14.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,
Managers on the part of the House.
N. P. BRYAN,
MILES POINDEXTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11240) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The proposed beneficiary is now dead.

On amendment No. 2: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. It is not believed that a higher rate than $12 per month is justified on the facts presented by the report which accompanied the bill.

On amendments Nos. 3 and 4: The House concurs in the Senate amendments. The first amendment corrects an error, and the later merely changes the phraseology of the bill.

On amendment No. 5: The Senate recedes. The rate of $20 per month to this widow is warranted by the evidence upon file in the case.

On amendment No. 6: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. It is not believed a pension is justified upon the evidence submitted in this case.

On amendments Nos. 7, 8, 9, and 10: The House concurs in the Senate amendments. This is only a change in the phraseology.

On amendment No. 11: The Senate recedes. It is believed that a pension of $20 per month is fully warranted upon the evidence submitted in this case, and that same should be approved.

On amendment No. 12: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The disabilities from which the soldier now suffers appear to be due to his own misconduct and not incurred in line of duty, as shown by the records of the War Department, and for this reason the committee did not believe the facts justified the proposed pension.

On amendment No. 13: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. This is only a change in phraseology.

On amendment No. 14: The Senate recedes. A pension of $12 per month to this soldier is fully justified in this case, and the item is accordingly approved.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 12194.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title and read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 12194) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1055).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12194) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

N. P. BRYAN,
MILES POINDEXTER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12194) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. It is not believed a pension is warranted by the evidence submitted in this case, and the bill is therefore one which fails to warrant approval.

On amendment No. 2: The Senate recedes. A pension of $12 per month to this soldier is fully warranted by the evidence upon file in support of the bill.

On amendment No. 3: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. This is merely the correction of an error in the name of the beneficiary.

On amendment No. 4: The Senate recedes. The facts of this case fully justify the approval of this case at $17 per month, and an increase in rate is fully warranted.

On amendments Nos. 5, 6, and 7: The House concurs in the Senate amendments. This is only a change in the phraseology.

On amendment No. 8: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The facts as presented by the report accompanying this bill fail to justify approval of this case.

On amendment No. 9: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The beneficiary is now dead.

On amendments Nos. 10, 11, and 12: The House concurs in the Senate amendments. This is only a change in phraseology.

On amendment No. 13: The Senate recedes. A pension of $12 per month to this soldier is fully justified by the evidence submitted, and for that reason the case is approved.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the Part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13620, an omnibus pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title and also read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 13620) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1053).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13620) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5 and 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, and 9, and agree to the same.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

N. P. BRYAN,
MILES POINDEXTER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13620) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The evidence submitted in this case fails to warrant approval of the bill, and it is not believed a pension is justified.

On amendment No. 2: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. This is merely a change in phraseology.

On amendment No. 3: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The beneficiary is now in receipt of a pension of $12 per month and it is not believed the facts and circumstances of the case justify an increase in rate of pension.

On amendment No. 4: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. This is only a change in phraseology.

On amendment No. 5: The Senate recedes. It is not believed that a higher rate than $24 per month, recommended by the House, is warranted, and the bill is therefore approved for that amount.

On amendment No. 6: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The evidence submitted in this case fails to warrant the belief that any of the disabilities from which the sailor now suffers were incurred in service and line of duty, and therefore approval of the bill is not justified.

On amendment No. 7: The Senate recedes. Upon the evidence submitted in support of this bill a pension of $12 per month is fully justified, and approval is therefore given the case.

On amendment No. 8: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. There is no evidence to show that any of the present disabilities from which the soldier now suffers were incurred in service and line of duty, and approval of the case is therefore not warranted.

On amendment No. 9: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The evidence is far from convincing that any of the disabilities from which the soldier now suffers were incurred in service and line of duty, and approval of the case is therefore not justified.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 14576, an omnibus pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title and also read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 14576) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1054).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14576) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 8, 10, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and agree to the same.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

N. P. BRYAN,
MILES POINDEXTER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14576) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. It is not believed the evidence submitted in this case justifies the allowance of pension, and therefore the case can not be given approval.

On amendment No. 2: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The soldier is now drawing a pension of $20 per month, and an increase is not justified upon the evidence filed.

On amendment No. 3: The Senate recedes. A pension at $17 per month is fully warranted by the evidence submitted in this case, and the same is therefore approved for that amount.

On amendment No. 4: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The evidence fails to warrant the belief that any of the present disabilities from which the soldier now suffers were incurred in service and line of duty, and the case is one, therefore, which can not be approved.

On amendment No. 5: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. This is merely a change of phraseology.

On amendment No. 6: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. There is no evidence to show that any of the present disabilities from which the soldier is now suffering were contracted in service and line of duty, and therefore approval is not justified.

On amendment No. 7: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The evidence fails to justify the belief that any disability from which the soldier might be suffering at this time was incurred in service and line of duty; the bill for that reason can not be approved.

On amendment No. 8: The Senate recedes. A pension of $12 per month to this widow is fully warranted by the evidence upon file, and the case is therefore approved.

On amendment No. 9: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The soldier is now in receipt of a pension of $20 per month, which is the maximum to which he is entitled under any existing law, and it is not believed that a higher rate than that is warranted by the evidence upon file.

On amendment No. 10: The Senate recedes. It is not believed a higher rate than $17 per month, recommended by the House, is warranted in this case.

On amendment No. 11: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The facts as presented by the evidence submitted in this case fail to warrant approval of the bill.

On amendment No. 12: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. There is not evidence to show that any of the present disabilities from which the soldier now appears to be suffering were contracted in service and line of duty, and therefore approval is not warranted.

On amendment No. 13: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. The evidence fails to show that the death of the soldier was in any way due to or connected with his service, and therefore approval can not be given the case.

On amendments Nos. 14 and 15: The House concurs in the Senate amendments. This is only a change in phraseology.

On amendment No. 16: The House concurs in the Senate amendment. There is no evidence to show that any of the present existing disabilities from which the soldier appears to be suffering were contracted in service and line of duty; therefore the case can not be approved.

On amendment No. 17: The Senate recedes. An increase to $12 per month is fully warranted by the evidence submitted in this case, and the bill is therefore approved for that amount.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 15957, an omnibus pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title and also read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 15957) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1090).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15957) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 22, 23, 29, 30, and 37.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 11, 18, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, and agree to the same.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

WM. HUGHES,
T. TAGGART,
REED SMOOT,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15957) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

Amendment No. 1: Only a correction as to service in the case of Frank O'Brien, proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 2: Strikes out the provision for pension in behalf of Alice P. Knapp, dependent mother of Steth B. Knapp, deceased.

Amendment No. 3: Reinstates the provision for increase in pension to $12 per month in the case of Charles E. Shermer, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 4: Reinstates the provision for pension at $12 per month in behalf of James J. McHale, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 5: Reinstates the provision for pension to Harry E. Brooks at $12 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendments Nos. 6 and 7: Correction as to service in the case of George E. Grubbs.

Amendment No. 8: Correction of an error in the case of Walter J. Frink.

Amendment No. 9: Reinstates the provision for pension to Tina Quinn, widow of John Quinn, deceased, at $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the two minor children of the deceased soldier until they shall reach the age of 16 years, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 10: Reinstates the provision for pension at $12 per month to Oscar G. Rottman, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 11: Correction of service in the case of Willard L. Anthony.

Amendment No. 12: Reinstates the provision for increase in pension for John Blueford to $17 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 13: Reinstates the provision for pension to Floyd T. Patterson at $12 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 14: Reinstates the provision for pension to Mary McAlister, dependent mother of Francis J. McAlister, deceased, at $12 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 15: Grants a pension of $30 per month, as proposed by the House, to John W. Lattimore, instead of $50 per month, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 16: Reinstates the provision for pension in behalf of Daniel M. Moser at $12 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 17: Reinstates the provision for increase in pension to Mary P. Byram, widow of Quincy Adams Byram, deceased, at $20 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 18: Strikes out the provision for pension in behalf of William McClaskey.

Amendment No. 19: Reinstates the provision for pension at $17 per month in behalf of Joseph Bailey, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 20: Reinstates the provision for pension at $12 per month to Andrew Conley, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 21: Only a correction as to service in the case of Jacob Amberg.

Amendment No. 22: Reinstates the provision for pension in behalf of William C. Winslow at $12 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 23: Reinstates the provision for pension in behalf of John Shannon at $12 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 24: Grants a pension of $12 per month to Robert Trexler, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 25: Strikes out the provision for pension in behalf of Simeon D. Morrison.

Amendment No. 26: Strikes out the provision for pension in behalf of Richard Thrash.

Amendment No. 27: Grants a pension of $12 per month to Arthur Magoon, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $17 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 28: Correction of an error in the case of Effa M. Rule, widow of William H. Rule, deceased.

Amendment No. 29: Reinstates the provision for pension at $17 per month to Reuben Solomon, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 30: Reinstates the provision for pension at $12 per month to Daniel H. Gerald, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 31: Correction of an error in the case of Charlotte M. Beckham, widow of Robert H. Beckham, deceased.

Amendment No. 32: Strikes out the provision for pension to Carrie A. Stillions, widow of Robert E. Stillions, deceased, and the two minor children of the deceased soldier.

Amendment No. 33: Strikes out the provision for pension to Lily D. Murphy, widow of Frank T. Murphy, deceased.

Amendments Nos. 34 and 35: Correction in service in the case of Cordelia Mulford, widow of Jacob Mulford, deceased.

Amendment No. 36: Grants a pension of $24 per month, as proposed by the Senate, to Cordelia Mulford, widow of Jacob Mulford, deceased, instead of $20 per month, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 37: Reinstates the provision for increase in pension to $20 per month in behalf of Mary A. Scott, widow of Jephtha Scott, deceased.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the Part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill S. 4654, an omnibus pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title and also read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4654) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1086).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4654) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, 9, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 19, 22, 23, and 24.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 5, 8, 11, 14, 18, 20, and 21, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount named insert "$24"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount named insert "$24"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"The name of Dennie Dixon, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"The name of Williamson S. Wright, late first Lieutenant Fourteenth Company United States Volunteer Signal Corps, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

And the House agree to the same.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

WM. HUGHES,
T. TAGGART,
REED SMOOT,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4654) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1, case of Joseph Wessler: Provides a pension of $12 as proposed by the House instead of $16 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 2, case of Charles A. Myers: Provides a pension of $24 instead of $30 as proposed by the Senate and $12 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 3, case of William Peters: Provides a pension of $24 instead of $30 as proposed by the Senate and $12 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 4, case of Virginia Watson: Provides a pension of $40 as proposed by the Senate instead of $30 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 5, case of Peter Black: Provides a pension of $20 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 6, case of James M. Freeman: Provides a pension of $20 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 7, case of Dennie Dixon: Provides a pension of $24 instead of $30 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 8, case of Louisa M. Fletcher: Provides a pension of $35 as proposed by the House instead of $40 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 9, case of Caroline Heywood: Provides a pension of $50 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 10, case of John A. Avirett: Provides a pension of $30 per month as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 11, case of Andrew Houlihan: Provides a pension of $30 as proposed by the House instead of $36 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 12, case of Edward J. Cuzzort: Provides a pension of $13 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 13, case of Elizabeth J. Burt: Provides for increase of pension for the widow of Brig. Gen. Andrew S. Burt at $50 as proposed by the Senate instead of $30 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 14, case of Edward D. Smith: Provides for a pension of $12 as proposed by the House instead of $16 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 15, case of Williamson S. Wright: Provides a pension of $12 instead of $20 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 16, case of Emer A. Robbins: Provides a pension of $20 as proposed by the Senate instead of $12 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 17, case of Benjamin Kelsey: Provides a pension of $30 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 18: Strikes out the provision for pension for Joseph A. Nolan.

On amendment No. 19, case of Curt Seay: Provides a pension of $16 as proposed by the Senate instead of $12 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 20: Strikes out the provision for pension for Samuel C. Cochran.

On amendment No. 21, case of James A. Saurbaugh: Provides a pension of $30 as proposed by the House instead of $40 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 22, case of Bertha Z. Smith: Provides a pension of $30 as proposed by the Senate instead of $12 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 23, case of Elizabeth C. Allen: Provides a pension of $50 per month as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 24, case of Elie Jones Quinby: Provides a pension for the widow of Col. Ira Quinby of $40 as proposed by the Senate instead of $30 per month as proposed by the House.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 5914), an omnibus pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title and also read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1087).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 6, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 21.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 5, 7, 8, and 11, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"The name of Charles Groves, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"The name of Lillias E. Knapp, widow of John J. Knapp, late captain, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

And the House agree to the same.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

WM. HUGHES,
T. TAGGART,
REED SMOOT,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Strikes out the provision for pension for William Bell.

On amendment No. 2: Strikes out the provision for pension for Odolon Valcour.

On amendment No. 3, case of Jennie G. George: Provides a pension of $35 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 4, case of George A. Wilson: Provides a pension of $24 as proposed by the Senate instead of $12 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 5: Corrects a typographical error.

On amendment No. 6, case of Martha L. Sternberg: Provides increase of pension to $100 for the widow of Surg. Gen. George M. Sternberg as proposed by the Senate instead of $50 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 7, case of Henry Koehler: Provides a pension of $12 as proposed by the House instead of $18 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 8: Strikes out the provision for pension for William R. Claxton, now deceased.

On amendment No. 9, case of Minnie Jeffers: Provides a pension of $12 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 10, case of Fonetta W. D. Scott: Provides a pension of $30 as proposed by the Senate instead of $12 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 11, case of William Meyers: Provides a pension of $12 as proposed by the House instead of $16 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 12, case of George W. Mosier: Provides a pension of $30 as proposed by the Senate instead of $24 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 13, case of Caroline Carr: Provides a pension of $20 as proposed by the Senate instead of $12 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 14, case of Charles Groves: Provides a pension of $12 instead of $24 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 15, case of Margaret A. Ede: Provides a pension of $50 proposed by the Senate instead of $30 as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 16, case of Flora C. Plumb: Provides a pension of $12 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 17, case of Margaret R. Thompson: Provides a pension of $30 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 18, case of Mary O'Hara Carnes: Provides a pension of $12 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 19, case of Mary A. Loveland: Provides a pension of $12 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 20, case of Lillias E. Knapp: Provides a pension of $40 instead of $50 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 21, case of Susan L. F. Rand: Provides a pension of $50 as proposed by the Senate instead of $40 as proposed by the House.

EDWARD KEATING,
CARL VINSON,
SAM R. SELLS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a moment or two?

Mr. KEATING. I will.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not recall which bill the item is in, but in one of these Senate bills there is an item carrying a pension of $100 a month to Mrs. Sternberg, widow of the former Surgeon General of the Army. When I first came down here I was besieged—as I think nearly all other Members of the House were at that time—by widows who wanted their pensions increased to $100 a month, and they all would recite particular cases where Congress had granted $100 a month to widows of some officers who had been killed in the war.

I think it was the general opinion at that time that Congress could not keep on making pensions at the rate of $100 a month just because somebody asked for them. I knew Surg. Gen. Sternberg and had the very highest personal regard and affection for him. I know his widow and have the highest regard for her. I do not think we ought to inaugurate the policy of paying $100 a month pension to any widow, and certainly not to any widow whose husband was not an officer killed in action. I have not objected to this bill. In fact, I do not recall just when this item was up in the House or whether, when the House reduced it, it was afterwards agreed to in conference. I want to say, as far as I am concerned, while I am quite willing to pay reasonable, liberal pensions, I am not in favor of paying a pension of $100 a month to every widow of every officer who happens to die in time of peace. And the action that we are taking will undoubtedly plague us. The people who are interested will know sooner or later that in some particular case, possibly in the matter of favoritism, we paid this large pension, and they will not be able to see why we should not pay them the same pension that we paid to Mrs. Sternberg or some other widow, and no one else will be able to see any reason for it. But we will have to hold a tight line in reference to such matters, or we will be lost. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, in the main, I fully agree with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said. The Sternberg pension was urged on the ground that Gen. Sternberg had served as chief of the commission appointed to fight yellow fever and because of the great service rendered the country and humanity by that commission it was thought his widow was entitled to this pension. It was further urged that the widows of practically all the members of that commission were now drawing pensions of at least $100 a month; that in some cases they were drawing pensions of $125 a month, and it was urged that the widow of Gen. Sternberg, who was the head of the commission, was entitled to as much consideration as the widows of other members of the commission. As I understand it the Senate Committee on Pensions reported in favor of $50 a month, and on the floor of the Senate the bill was amended to make it $100 a month. The House Committee on Pensions reduced the amount to $50 a month, and in conference we agreed to $100 a month. I am inclined to think that the Sternberg case is one of the worthy cases where the widows of officers have secured increased pensions. But the Senate of the United States is constantly sending to this House cases that are not nearly so worthy. And I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the time has come for this House to put its foot down in a rather emphatic fashion, because about all that is necessary now is for the widow of an Army officer to go to a United States Senator and he will set aside the law for her and secure an increase of her pension. That is accepted apparently as a matter of course at the other end of the Capitol, and I fully agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the custom should be stopped by the action of this House.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect how many officers lost their lives in this investigation that led to the discovery of the fact that the mosquito carried the yellow fever germ. I do not know whether the widows of all of those receive a pension similar to this or not.

Mr. KEATING. My recollection is that there are three or four widows of the members of the commission now drawing a pension of at least $100 a month.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, there are three cases—the Kissinger case and two other cases—where the widows do not draw pensions but receive $120 a month through the Army pay bill.

Mr. KEATING. It is really an annuity and not a pension.

Mr. MANN. They are not pensions. They do not go through the Pension Office; but that is theoretical. It is not a matter carried from the Pension Committee at all. It came in the Military Committee and was reported from that committee.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken about that. There are three widows, and one of them is drawing a pension of $100 a month.

Mr. MANN. One is carried at $125 a month in the military appropriation bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, I remember the Kissinger case; I had charge of it when I was on the Pension Committee. This was a pension for Kissinger himself; but my recollection is it was $75 a month.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It was $100. I am speaking of the soldier who submitted to the test; and he received $100 a month.

Mr. CULLOP. I think that is entirely too small.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce in the RECORD at this point a letter from Dr. Agramonte, who was a member of the Sternberg Commission, in which he testifies to the service rendered by Gen. Sternberg in connection with the fight on yellow fever.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of discussion concerning Gen. Sternberg's part in the campaign which resulted in the conquest of yellow fever. Perhaps the most impressive witness we can produce at this time is Dr. Agramonte, the surviving member of the famous Sternberg Commission. In January of this year Dr. Agramonte was in this city, and he addressed the following letter to Dr. George M. Kober, a distinguished scientist and one of Washington's most esteemed citizens:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 2, 1916.

GEO. M. KOBER, M. D.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DR. KOBER: It is with the greatest pleasure that I have read the pamphlet which contains the addresses delivered at the banquet tendered to the late Gen. George M. Sternberg in celebration of his seventieth birthday, so fortunately collected and preserved by you for the perusal of future generations of scientific men, who will no doubt find therein sufficient and ennobling inspiration.

The life of Gen. Sternberg, studied from the four points of view in which it was presented upon that memorable occasion, "the medical officer," "the scientist and author," "the philanthropist," and "the citizen," proves that it was as complete, as useful, and as worthy as any man may hope to live his own upon earth, with the assurance of leaving, upon quitting, imperishable memory of good deeds.

But as the modern scientist, in which character I knew Gen. Sternberg best, he excelled in one particular above most of his contemporaries; I refer to his broadmindedness; his readiness to rectify if in error was only comparable to his energetic defense of what he thought was right.

I feel in my heart that in the greatest achievement of modern preventive medicine—the almost total extinction of yellow fever in our hemisphere—he took an important part that has not been generally recognized, in spite of your pointing it out in your excellent speech. I say an important part, and I would be tempted to say the most important part, since by the elimination of many confusing and erroneous ideas with reference to the cause of the disease, obtained by his indefatigable work in South and Central America, he cleared the way for us who came after him, laboring in the same field of investigation; he saved us the work, and thus the waste of effort and time, which it would have entailed, by dealing with the fallacies in vogue during the last quarter of the nineteenth century, elucidating the question of yellow fever etiology in a manner nearly complete.

Only having lived in those countries, and particularly at the time when his investigations were undertaken, can one appreciate the enormous energy necessary and the great danger that must have been incurred to accomplish such result as revealed by his classical report. Not yellow fever alone, but other diseases as well, malaria, dysentery, typhus, if anything more deadly, then lay in ambush for the unwary, the overworked, or the systemically weakened, but how he escaped these diseases can only be ascribed to his remarkably sound constitution and the clean and pure manner of his life.

With regard to our own work I may say that Gen. Sternberg's instructions to Maj. Reed were so precise yet so complete that they embraced even human experimentation, a thing until then considered well-nigh impossible, and without the moral support which his reputation as a scientist of the highest order and his official position rendered us I am sure we would have never undertaken the method of investigation with which you are familiar, the results of which I need not extol here.

I thank you for sending me the booklet which has stimulated my writing this letter; I could not limit myself to simply acknowledge its receipt, for if in any way, by thought or action, I have the opportunity to render tribute to the memory of our departed friend you will find that I am ever ready to do so, as we say in Spanish, "with my heart in my hand."

Believe me, very cordially, yours,

AGRAMONTE.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recognized if I can get the time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Colorado has the time.
Mr. KEATING. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like 10 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I may not want to use it all.

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman.

CORRECTION IN CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution to correct language in a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 339.

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House in consideration of H. R. 15947 may change the following language on page 136 of the print of the bill with Senate amendments numbered, lines 2, 3, and 4, as follows: "Capt. John Gardner Quimby, retired, to be a captain on the active list, to take rank next after Capt. Thomas S. Rodgers," to read as follows:

"Capt. John Gardner Quimby, retired, to be a rear admiral on the active list, to take rank next after Rear Admiral Thomas S. Rodgers."

Mr. PADGETT. That is to correct the spelling, Mr. Speaker. When the House passed the bill Capt. Rodgers was a captain. He has since then been promoted in the regular order to rear admiral, and it is just to make the House provision consistent and proper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SHANGHAI DOCK & ENGINEERING CO. (LTD.) (H. DOC. NO. 1320).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of inquiry concerning a contract with the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co. (Ltd.), of Shanghai, China, for the construction of the single-screw steel collier No. 1, for the use of the United States Army, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered printed:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 21, 1916.

The SPEAKER HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In compliance with House resolution 275, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, "that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives detailed information in the War Department concerning the contract with the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co. (Ltd.), of Shanghai, China, for the construction of the single screw steel collier No. 1, for the use of the United States Army," I have the honor to submit the following report:

On April 15, 1913, there was received in the office of the Quartermaster General a contract, dated February 7, 1913, between Col. I. W. Littell, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, Manila, P. I., and the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co. (Ltd.), covering the construction of one steel collier, at a cost of $371,000; vessel to be completed in 16 months from date of contract. This was the first information that the Quartermaster General had that such a vessel was to be constructed by the Philippine authorities, no provision having been made in the estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 for such new vessel construction in the Philippine Department. Precedent was followed in this case, as the commanding general, Philippine Department, had authority to spend funds in much the same way as the Secretary of War is allowed to authorize the expenditure of funds in the United States.

This collier was planned to take the place of two old wooden colliers which had been in service for many years, one of which had been completely destroyed and the other was so rotten that it was difficult to keep her afloat. It was also desired to have a collier which could proceed to Corregidor Island under its own power with a cargo of coal in case of siege.

Under date of May 13, 1914, a supplemental contract was entered into with the above-named contractor, extending the time limit for completion to October 7, 1914.

On October 31, 1914, another supplemental contract was executed, extending the time for completion to December 15, 1914. From correspondence attached to this supplemental contract, it appears that the outbreak of the European war had delayed shipment of about 10 tons of material entering into the construction of the elevating gears of coal-discharging apparatus.

On March 16, 1915, the department quartermaster, Philippine Department, forwarded copies of correspondence explaining the further delay in completion of this vessel, which correspondence showed that on January 21, 1915, during trials of the collier, the coal-discharging machinery developed structural weakness and failed; and on March 15, 1915, it was decided by the contractors that new material must be designed and made to replace the parts which failed.

On March 20, 1915, the representative of the Quartermaster Corps at Shanghai submitted report to the department quartermaster, Philippine Department, inclosing marked photograph, showing the cause of the trouble with the coal-discharging machinery.

Under date of February 11, 1915, the department quartermaster, Philippine Department, forwarded report of the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co. (Ltd.) relative to the above-mentioned accident to machinery.

On May 15, 1915, the department quartermaster, Philippine Department, furnished copies of correspondence relative to the further delay in completion of this collier, in which the difficulties experienced by the shipbuilding firm in getting satisfactory action from the patentees of the coal-discharging machinery are fully set forth.

Under dates of January 14, 1916, and February 25, 1916, the department quartermaster, Philippine Department, forwarded copies of cablegrams from the contractor, stating that the British Government had delayed shipment of the new parts required until January. Based upon this correspondence, two communications, dated February 24, 1916, and June 1, 1916, respectively, were sent to the department quartermaster, Philippine Department, asking for report as to the advisability of applying any balance due the contractor on this vessel toward supply and installation of coal-discharging apparatus from the United States. To this the department quartermaster replied, under date of June 1, 1916, that he considered it inadvisable to make any change in the coal-handling apparatus of the collier, for the reason that it is of special design and it would occasion more delay to abandon the present machinery than it would to allow the contractor to complete the present installation.

Under date of June 24, 1916, there was received from the Secretary of State a communication from the London representatives of Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co. (Ltd.), requesting the State Department to instruct the ambassador at London to obtain permission from the British ministry of munitions for the patentees of the coal-discharging machinery to complete the same and ship to Shanghai. After consulting with the Manila authorities by cable, the Secretary of State was requested, under date of July 3, 1916, to instruct the ambassador in London to use his good offices to secure, if possible, the above-mentioned permission for fabrication and shipment of this material.

Transmitted herewith are photographic copies of the records of this department bearing on the case in question.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I feel justified in asking for 10 minutes by reason of the very deep interest that I personally feel in this case, having known Gen. Sternberg in his lifetime; and having during the past four or five years been pleased to make some investigation relative to the incidents of the Civil War and the subsequent period, I have come to feel that this particular item is extraordinary and should receive the unanimous approval of the membership of the House.

Gen. Sternberg was one of the giant figures of this century. Modest, unassuming, gentle in manner, as greatness always is, ever at work each year of his life, ever dedicated to the public service, every atom of his wonderful brain and energy given to humanity. He never spoke for himself. His modesty precluded that, but medical history and the military history of the last half century speak for him. He began his public service, if I can use that term in connection with the career of a surgeon in the Army, at the very outbreak of the Civil War. A young man with exceptional attainments and a splendid college training, he entered the Union Army as a surgeon and accompanied the Union forces to the disastrous field of Bull Run. He did not run from the field. He remained heroically and resolutely at his task. He stood on the field whence friends had fled, there where the Blue and the Gray commingled lay upon the first great battle field of the Civil War, and he bound up the wounds of both alike. [Applause.]

He was captured, of course, by the Confederates, and for a week, night and day, he used his talent and his energy to ease the pain, to relieve the suffering, and to save the boys of the North and the South. He then exhibited that daring which subsequently contributed to his great professional success. He borrowed the garb of a Confederate soldier one night and escaped, traveled 25 miles through the wilderness, swam the Potomac River, and the next day was ready for service here in Washington.

Years afterwards he presented the same characteristics for heroism and consecration to duty in many of the great Indian campaigns of the West, such that in one—perhaps the most notable that we have had—he was recommended for conspicuous gallantry on the field under fire and advanced to brevet rank by reason of his services on that occasion. He rose to such a position in the Army medical service that Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, in 1893 made him Surgeon General of the Army, and he immediately entered upon a reorganization of the service, its development being such that the present highly scientific and splendid condition is the result. He occupied that important position longer than any other man in the history of our Government.

But it is not so much of his direct connection with the military branch of the Government that commends this case to me as it is the long and distinguished service he rendered to humanity. In 1871 yellow fever broke out in the great city of New York. Gen. Sternberg had demonstrated that he possessed advanced knowledge of the subject of bacteriology, then a subject in its infancy the world over. He was the lone pioneer in the United States. He went to New York and combatted the yellow fever during that epidemic, and thereupon was looked upon by the authorities in this country as the greatest authority on that subject. In 1873, but two years later, an epidemic broke out in the Southland, that region that has been so severely devastated by this horrible plague. Looking the country over, Gen. Sternberg was selected. He packed his grip one night and took the first train to fight this fatal pestilence, as fearless as he was on the battle field of Bull Run.

In 1875 the plague ravaged New Orleans, La., and Mississippi. Sternberg was sent there to command the fight. Never once faltering, never once wavering, he knew his danger, but he battled and he won. Yes, he won; for the plague was checked, the land freed of the scourge, and countless lives saved, but he fell a victim to the horrible fever, there on the field of duty. He almost passed away, but with impaired health he was saved for future work for his country. He had been studying yellow fever intimately and closely. He continued that work for a quarter of a century, and performed those preliminary studies which narrowed the causes of yellow fever and enabled science to get a grip upon the dread disease. Here came into play his leadership in the realm of bacteriology, his trained mind, his extended experience. During this period by scientific research he demonstrated that the generally accepted theory of the celebrated bacteriologist, Sanarelli, as to the cause of yellow fever was wrong, as were many other theories that had been advanced, and so narrowed the field of necessary investigation that his eyes were squarely upon the mosquito.

A committee of three eminent physicians of this city, in behalf of the medical profession, recently prepared a memorial to Gen. Sternberg, and in it have this to say:

The members of your committee do not consider it unfair to the memory of Maj. Reed and his colleagues when they declare that much of the success achieved was rendered possible by the preliminary work of Dr. Sternberg, who had eliminated numerous errors committed by others, and had contested and overthrown the claims of several bacteriologists for the discovery of the specific organism. His conviction that all former claims were unfounded, or remained to be proven, is clearly evinced by the appointment of a commission which he personally selected.

It may be truly said that no history of this important discovery is complete without a just presentation of Sternberg's preliminary work. In giving due credit to all the participants of this splendid piece of research it must be remembered that all of his work was of the highest scientific value, and his daily contact with the sick, his autopsies and bacteriological investigations in different countries and climes in search of the yellow-fever organism, involved at least the same risks and heroism displayed by members of the Yellow Fever Commission.

In support of the foregoing statement your committee submits the following testimony from Dr. Aristides Agramonte, the only surviving member of the Yellow Fever Commission, who, on January 3, 1916, wrote to Dr. Kober as follows: "With regard to our own work I may say that Gen. Sternberg's instructions to Maj. Reed were so precise, yet so complete, that they embraced even human experimentation, a thing until then considered well-nigh impossible, and, without the moral support which his reputation as a scientist of the highest order and his official position rendered us, I am sure we would never have undertaken the method of investigation with which you are familiar."

"I feel in my heart that in the greatest achievement of modern medicine, the almost total extinction of yellow fever in our hemisphere, he took an important part that has not been generally recognized. In spite of your pointing it out in your speech (June 8, 1908). I say an important part and I would be tempted to say the most important part, since by the elimination of many confusing and erroneous ideas with reference to the cause of the disease, obtained by his indefatigable work in South and Central America, he cleared the way for us who came after him, laboring in the same field of investigation; he saved us the work, and thus the waste of effort and time which it would have entailed, by dealing with the fallacies in vogue during the last quarter of the nineteenth century, elucidating the question of yellow fever in a manner nearly complete."

Immediately after he became Surgeon General of the Army, with the power at his command, he organized this Yellow Fever Commission and placed at their disposal the 25 years of his work; and he had then become known as not only the pioneer, but the greatest bacteriologist in America.

You may be interested to know that when the great Dr. Koch, of Germany, was here a few years ago he placed his hand upon the shoulder of Gen. Sternberg and said: "Here is my brother in the work, one whom I admire among the men of the world." Well he might have said that, because in the very year that Dr. Koch discovered the tuberculosis bacillus Gen. Sternberg demonstrated and photographed it.

Later on he made one of the greatest contributions to our medical science, which was the discovery of the pneumonia bacillus, and the benefit of this epoch-making achievement gave to humanity and the world. Later on he became interested during the closing years of his life in a general organized movement throughout the country to wipe out the curse of tuberculosis. He headed the American society in that regard, and to its labors he contributed all of his talent and a large measure of his time.

But as to his work in the yellow-fever situation it seems to me an additional word might with propriety be said. He was the pioneer, the worker, the experienced man. His experience, his knowledge, and his genius selected the men for this commission which was to do so much for the world. He gave them their directions as to their work, and, as they say, he was their inspiration.

The distinguished Dr. William H. Welch, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, speaks of Gen. Sternberg's work in the following extraordinary language:

I was not only intimately acquainted personally with Gen. Sternberg, but I am familiar with the facts of his scientific and professional career and work.

The position of leadership attained by Gen. Sternberg not only in the Medical Corps of the Army but in the medical profession of this country attested by the important offices which he held, was based upon scientific and professional achievements of the highest order which brought him national and international fame.

Dr. Sternberg was the pioneer worker in the modern science of bacteriology in this country, and to this subject he has made contributions of great importance. He discovered the germ which causes lobar pneumonia and made valuable studies relating to this organism. He greatly advanced our knowledge, both from the scientific and the practical sides, of disinfectants and methods of disinfection. He published many valuable papers concerning infection and its problems, his "Manual of Bacteriology," which appeared in 1892, being a comprehensive and authoritative work.

Gen. Sternberg's researches upon yellow fever, extending over a period of a quarter of a century, are of great importance and an essential part of that series of investigations which led to the discovery of the mode of conveyance of this pestilence and the method of its prevention. With great zeal, industry, and skill he applied modern bacteriological methods to the search for the germ of yellow fever and to the claims arising from time to time as to its nature. This painstaking work had to be done, and it was accomplished by Gen. Sternberg in a manner which laid satisfactory foundations for further studies. These further studies were conducted under his administration as Surgeon General of the Army and by the so-called Army Yellow Fever Commission appointed by him or upon his recommendation. With the work of this commission he was in constant touch, and he welcomed the epoch-making results thereby attained as crowning the laborious series of investigations upon the same subject which had occupied his attention for so many years.

It is apparent from this bare mention of a few of the contributions of Gen. Sternberg to medical science in the domain of preventive medicine that he rendered important services to science and to humanity, services which deserve ample recognition by the Government of his country.

The work of this yellow-fever commission is one of the great achievements in the world's history. The Southland is at last free from the scourge. Cuba has become a health spot. The work of that commission enabled us to build the Panama Canal. It has enabled us to clean up western South America and the Central American States, and the world is no longer subject to one of the greatest of plagues.

Elihu Root, serving several years as Secretary of War, has the following to say of Gen. Sternberg's work:

I have received your letter of March 6, and I respond heartily to the very moderate statements which you make regarding Gen. Sternberg's merits and the claims of his memory to recognition by Congress. Senator GALLINGER's bill does not rest alone upon long and faithful service, including both the Civil War and the War with Spain, but chiefly and distinctively upon the great part which Gen. Sternberg played in the service rendered by the Medical Corps of the Army in the nine years during which he was Surgeon General.

The practical extirpation of yellow fever in Cuba and on the Isthmus of Panama and the development of methods of preventive medicine which have secured the phenomenal freedom from typhoid in recent years are achievements in which the Medical Corps of the Army bore a great part and won the highest distinction. Congress has paid great honor to the medical officers who in the field and in camp became distinguished for their part in this extraordinary work. Let no one think, however, that the man who was at the head of the corps can be left out of account of this creditable record. Such things do not happen by accident. No body of men accomplishes what our medical officers accomplished for the 10 years succeeding 1902 except in response to leadership, incitement, encouragement, opportunity, motive power, coming from the head of the corps.

The Medical Corps accomplished what it did largely because the man at the top was a pioneer in bacteriology, an advance worker in protective medicine, and had the enthusiasm and devotion through which science wins victories. That spirit communicated itself to the corps, directed its energies, made it the field of opportunity for scientific effort, kept good men in it, brought good men into it, and furnished the indispensable element of leadership without which the work could not have been done. Gen. Sternberg was the general commanding in that campaign. Congress has been honoring his subordinates gratefully and properly. It is all wrong that there should be no appreciation for the commander. I have not received yet the copies of resolutions, etc., which you have sent, but I do not need them, for I know about this subject myself upon the experience of four years and a half, during which it was my business to observe and estimate the influences working for and against efficiency in the War Department.

These men have all gone but one, these men who solved the problem. The man who organized the commission and was its inspiring genius and guide is the last to pass away. We have recognized merit and worth as we ought. If we do not, there is no meaning to a republic, no meaning to free government, no meaning to unmeasured generous service to humanity. We appropriately have given to the widows of two of the men who were on this commission $125 a month. One member of the commission is still living, a Cuban, Dr. Agramonte. As the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] has said, he has recently testified to the work of Gen. Sternberg in connection with the commission.

A soldier by the name of Kissenger, who was not a physician, offered himself to assist in the work. He was injured. We gave him a pension of $100 a month. He has since died and his widow is now receiving $100 a month. There is one more, the widow of Maj. Reed, who was acting chairman of the commission—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Kissenger is not dead. He is still living and drawing a pension, which is carried in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not care how the payment is carried; it comes out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But he is not dead.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from Illinois invited my attention to a paragraph which led me to think that the widow of Mr. Kissenger was drawing a pension in the way I have stated. If I am in error about that, I am glad to be corrected. The widow of Maj. Reed is drawing a pension of $100 a month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. KEATING. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Had Gen. Sternberg devoted even a portion of his lifetime to acquiring remuneration for his services he might have died a rich man. He died a poor man. He has left a widow. In my humble judgment he has contributed more for the well-being of humanity than almost any other one man I can name in the whole realm of medical science during the last half century. And we know what wonderful strides medical science has been making and what beneficent results have followed. It seems to me that a great—I do not mean to say generous, but I do think I have a right to say a fairly considerate—Government will recognize the lifetime of service, the heroic devotion, and the splendid achievements of this man and honor his memory, a memory that ought to be blessed and hallowed by every man in the South. He has done more for you than any other living man. I believe you agree with me that his widow, who is now of advanced years, ought to be able to live in reasonable comfort during the remaining period of her life, and the distinguished services of this noble man thereby in some degree recognized by an appreciative Government. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. KEATING. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, special pension legislation is objectionable in the very nature of it. Like all other kinds of special legislation for the benefit of individuals, it is subject to very great abuses; but it has become an established practice in Congress, and it is too late to take up that question. There is no need to quarrel about that.

The objectionable features of special pension legislation when presented regularly to Congress are palliated by the fact that these bills are referred to a committee which has as its duty looking up the evidence and considering each case separately and rendering a fair decision. That palliates this evil to some extent. Since we have that method of acting on this special legislation, we should insist that all measures which have that kind of object should be referred to the Pension Committee and should come before this body in a regular way, after having had fair consideration and some opportunity to have their merits gone into.

The matter of this mosquito experiment, which demonstrated that the mosquito was the vicious carrying medium of yellow fever, has been referred to on the floor. I wish in that connection to call attention to what I regard as a highly objectionable method of granting pensions. The Army appropriation bill, on page 30, carries several items that I look upon as pensions. One of them is the payment of $1,500 annually to Mrs. Jennie Carroll, widow of James Carroll, late major of the United States Army, and another is the payment of $1,200 to John R. Kissenger, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry. Those two items represent appropriations made on account of these mosquito experiments. Maj. Carroll made himself the subject of a mosquito experiment, and as the result he died. Subsequently, at some time before I came into Congress—I do not know whether it was by special bill, but I imagine that it came in here just as other things do, as a rider on this appropriation bill—

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that it was a special bill. I know there were special bills in some of these cases.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I hope it was by special bill, because that at least gives some excuse for it. But it came in here, and we are making appropriations of $1,500 a year to Mrs. Carroll, widow of Maj. Carroll, who died as the result of these experiments.

Another soldier who volunteered to submit himself to the experiment was John R. Kissenger, who was an enlisted man, and an appropriation is carried here in this bill for Mr. Kissenger, who I am glad to say is still alive, and is receiving $1,200 a year.

Now, the particular thing to which I wish to call attention is this, that in this bill, as it was originally presented to the House, the committee reported an appropriation of $600 for the benefit of Mrs. Carroll, the mother of Maj. Carroll. Thereby it was proposed to make an appropriation not only for the widow of this man who lost his life but for his mother, a thing that is absolutely unprecedented, so far as my knowledge goes, in the granting of pensions by the American Congress.

I say it is highly objectionable that such a thing should be done. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HAY], in answer to a point of order which I made to the items, argued that they were not pensions, that they were appropriations for the upkeep of the Army. I do not see how such an argument can be sustained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. KEATING. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, here are men, soldiers in the American Army, who voluntarily took the chance of losing their lives. I would not for a moment take away a flower that belongs in their wreath or depreciate their sacrifice to the slightest extent. They no more offered their lives, however, than you did, if you enlisted in the American Army, than I did when I enlisted, than any soldier does who goes to the front to serve his country. Men who submit themselves to experiments such as these are entitled to no more credit than a man who charges a battery and faces death in the mouths of roaring cannon. Certainly no different position can be sustained.

These men lost their lives in these experiments, and a compensation, an annuity, a gratuity, a reward, a payment, is proposed to be made to their widows. Is there any more reason why a man should have such a payment awarded by a rider on an appropriation bill, or that his family should have such recognition, than in the case of a man who goes out to fight and loses his life in open battle? Not at all. The only reason it was ever put in here, in my judgment, was because the pension committee did not see proper to give an allowance as large as the beneficiary thought it ought to have been. It is impossible to safeguard such legislation so long as one committee handles one feature and another another, and neither one knows what the other does.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. For a question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I suppose, of course, the gentleman takes into consideration the fact that the principle governing military pensions is based on wounds or disabilities contracted in the service in line of duty?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; and I should say that these men who submitted themselves to these experiments suffered in the line of duty.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This was a voluntary service, which no government could compel.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It could not compel it any more than a commander could order a soldier to go out as a spy and get information. A commander would not be likely to detail him on something that was a life and death service against his will. He volunteers, it is true, but the fact that he volunteers makes it no less in the line of duty than otherwise.

If the gentleman takes the position that in submitting to the mosquito experiment these men did not act in the line of duty, then I say that they are not entitled to any payment or pension whatsoever, any more than a man in civil life who submits himself to an experiment and loses his life.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But the gentleman—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If these men were not doing their duty as soldiers, if they were not serving their country when submitting to this experiment, then they are entitled to no payment and no especial recognition.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why should the matters come here in the Army appropriation bill when all other pensions are paid by another appropriation? It can not be defended.

I want to call attention to the fact that by this method of special legislation double pensions are likely to be paid without the knowledge of Congress and not as contemplated by law, and pension claims turned down by the Pension Committee as unworthy come up with a favorable report from the Committee on Military Affairs. It is something that ought to be very carefully watched. Under no circumstances should these matters come in here without full and fair consideration by a committee accustomed to handling such matters, and knowing what they are doing when they do handle them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KEATING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15048, an omnibus pension bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15048, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. BURKE, Mr. SHOUSE, and Mr. LANGLEY.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of reading a statement recently made by a very prominent American statesman on the subject of the tariff. After referring to what is expected to be done by the tariff commission provided for in the Kitchin bill, this distinguished statesman says:

It ought to be possible by such means to make the question of duties merely a question of progress and development, a question of adopting means to ends, of facilitating and helping business, and employing to the utmost the resources of the country in a vast development of our business and enterprise.

Let me repeat the first two or three lines:

It ought to be possible by such means to make the question of duties merely a question of progress—

And so forth.

Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that all reference to any question of revenue is omitted. I think it might be amusing and profitable to ask Members of this House to guess who is the author of that statement, and yet I do not care to waste so much time. Is it some high priest of protection; is it the representative of some great business interest that desires at all hazards to prevent any foreign competition? It scarcely seems possible that it could be a Democrat, because I observe in the Democratic platform the statement as to the tariff is as follows:

We declare it a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government under the Constitution has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to have one guess or perhaps two. I suggest that the author of those words is either Mr. FORDNEY, of Michigan, or Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not surprised at the suggestion of the gentleman, yet he is wrong. Strange though it may seem, strange particularly though it may seem to Members on the other side of the aisle, abhorrent possibly as it may seem to my friend the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], that statement was made by the President of the United States, Mr. Woodrow Wilson. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LONGWORTH. With pleasure.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman just read from an irresponsible sheet, not giving any name of the paper, magazine, or other source. Where is the gentleman's proof?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am not at all surprised that the gentleman from North Carolina should doubt somewhat the authority for that most remarkable statement coming from the leader of his party, and yet it is set forth in the Washington Post, a Democratic newspaper— [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman should not so reflect on the Democratic Party.

Mr. LONGWORTH (continuing). Bearing date of Saturday, July 29. I have read one sentence from it, and I am going to ask permission to incorporate the entire article.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will just permit me, I do not take back what I said when I asserted it is from some irresponsible sheet. I want to deny, in the name of the President and the name of the Democrats of this House and of former Congresses and in the name of Democrats throughout the country, that the President ever uttered such language, because, in my judgment, it is impossible for any man who voted for the Underwood Act or indorsed the Underwood Act, much less one who signed it, to have conceived and expressed publicly such high protective tariff sentiments.

The Washington Post is the earnest champion of all special interests, and especially of the highest protective-tariff interests; and I venture the opinion that it put that utterance in the President's mouth in order to injure the President with the real Democrats and patriotic tariff reformers of all parties throughout the country. I have never known even as high a protectionist as Mr. FORDNEY or Mr. MOORE, to whom the gentleman from Nebraska referred, to utter such a sentiment with regard to the tariff. The Democratic theory, as I have always understood it, is a tariff for revenue only. Even Mr. MOORE's and Mr. FORDNEY's theory—and the theory of the Republican Party in its palmyest stand-pat days—is a tariff for protection and revenue. The sentiment or utterances attributed to the President by that Republican high-tariff sheet is a tariff for protection only. The man who believes that import duties should be made merely a question of progress and development of business is bound to favor the repeal of the Underwood Act, for not a section or paragraph or sentence or line in that act was conceived or written upon any such theory. The President indorses the Underwood Act. Of course he never made such a statement as the gentleman from Ohio or the Washington Post attributes to him. I repeat my denial in the name of the President and the Democratic Party.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman's comment, I agree, is absolutely apropos; and yet this purports to be taken from a letter recently addressed by the President of the United States to the president of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. Now, I agree that I may be, possibly, a little late [applause on the Republican side], possibly a little late in offering this statement for the consideration of the House. It was made as long as a week ago, and possibly the President may have changed his mind since. [Applause on the Republican side.] But, at any rate—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, may I have two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks that he may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. At any rate, this statement came with that authority I have cited, and I assume we may easily determine the correctness of it by asking the president of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association to state whether it is correct or not. Now, I have great sympathy for the gentleman from North Carolina, and I do not wonder—

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman needs it, if the President wrote that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman must need it. I have the deepest sympathy with all Members upon that side of the House who attempt to follow the President in his lightning changes of opinion on all matters of great public policy. You are forced into the attitude of having to approve him both when he goes forward and when he comes back; both when he goes up and when he comes down; horizontally, vertically, diagonally, latitudinally, and parabolically. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the gentleman think that he made quite as rapid a change as the candidate of the gentleman's own party when he indorsed the plank of your party on woman's suffrage one day and came out for national woman's suffrage the next day?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, the gentleman from North Carolina was shocked more than I am and I am speaking out of sympathy for his feelings. Why, gentlemen, your approval must be flexible and adjustable, it must be mobile and double-jointed, if you expect to keep up that attitude with respect to the President's ever changing state of mind. You are continually forced to say as the old backwoodsman said, "Them's my sentiments, and if they don't suit they kin be altered." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print this article to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to incorporate in his remarks the article to which he referred. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

WAR'S EFFECT ON TARIFF—TRIP ABROAD MAY BE ONE OF NEW BOARD'S FIRST ASSIGNMENTS—WILSON'S VIEWS IN LETTER—INTENDS TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF PROVISION AUTHORIZING COMMISSION TO CONDUCT INVESTIGATION—QUESTIONS WHETHER TIME IS OPPORTUNE TO STUDY THE SITUATION IN EUROPE.

One of the first tasks assigned to the tariff commission to be created by the pending revenue bill may be a tour of European countries, including the belligerents, to study the effect of the war on industrial and trade relations of the United States and to report particularly information which might aid in the adjustment of tariff duties to meet conditions likely to follow the restoration of peace.

Administration officials let it be known that the plan to send the proposed commission abroad was being seriously considered in making public yesterday a letter from President Wilson to Samuel M. Hastings, of Chicago, president of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, in reply to a telegram from the association suggesting that a special commission be appointed to visit all foreign nations to investigate economic conditions and trade opportunities.

IDEA LONG IN MIND.

The President said whether the moment to act upon the suggestion was opportune was open to serious question, but that when circumstances justified it he intended to take advantage of the revenue bill's provision for investigation by the tariff commission. The letter, in part, follows:

"After all, what we are interested in is to ascertain all the facts surrounding our economic life, and to disconnect a fundamental thing like the fiscal policy of the Government with regard to duties on imports from party politics. We shall strive to do this through the instrumentality of a permanent nonpartisan commission, composed of able and experienced men, so that when the facts are once obtained the handling of our tariff question may no longer be made the football of politics."

"It ought to be possible by such means to make the question of duties merely a question of progress and development, a question of adopting means to ends, of facilitating and helping business and employing to the utmost the resources of the country in a vast development of our business and enterprise."

WORLD'S TRUST LAWS COMPILED.

"Through the Federal Trade Commission, which substitutes the milder processes of helpful counsel for the harsh process of the law, we already have for the first time a compilation of the trust laws of the world, together with a complete analysis of the manner in which foreign Governments encourage their business enterprises and associations. A committee of the House of Representatives now has under discussion a bill to permit cooperation among American manufacturers and business men exclusively for export trade, so that American enterprise may be able to meet more successfully the organized competition with which they are face to face in international markets."

"We have not been accustomed to the large world of international business, but it is evident that we must get acquainted with it immediately. America is already establishing new industries. Some of these, like the dyestuffs industry, for example, are old and well established in Europe and have been for generations. The study of such industries, their wages, and their general organization with reference to economy and efficiency of operation can not fail to be helpful to the business man of the United States and to the people in general."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In pursuance of the order made yesterday the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] for 15 minutes.

WAR PROSPERITY.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, without questioning the sincerity of our friends across the aisle, they have always seemed to be long on imagination and short on arithmetic. They are eloquent but not accurate, and in the exigencies of the present campaign have given wings to their fancies and lost track of the facts. In an attempt to show that the extraordinary demand for our products created by the war in Europe is not the cause of the present business boom, they assert that the exports of war material only amounts to 3 per cent of the total value of our manufactured products and are therefore too small in proportions to affect general conditions. As usual, they are wrong in their figures, wrong as to the amount of war material, wrong as to the value of our manufactured products, and the comparison is utterly fallacious and practically absurd. What is war material? Is it merely cannon food—powder, explosives, and shells, or rifles and cartridges? The veriest tyro in military affairs knows that food, clothing, and an infinite variety of equipment are as necessary to modern warfare as the weapons of the soldier, but the most important of these items are omitted from their calculations. And what is this total that they speak of as the value of our manufactured products and compare with our exports? Examine a census report to find out how it is made up and you will discover that it is in reality the total volume of business done by all our manufacturers, in which the products of each manufacturer are often included over and over again. With reference to these totals the United States Census of Manufactures (vol. 10, p. 21) gives this warning that "in combining the value of products of all industries, the value of products produced by one establishment and used as materials in another is duplicated, and the total, therefore, gives a greatly exaggerated idea of the wealth created."

I hold in my hand a bulletin from the census office issued this morning giving the latest official report on our manufactures—1914—from which it appears that the whole value added by our manufactures to the cost of material is less than $10,000,000,000. How then do our Democratic friends compute it to be three times as much? In this way: The blast furnace turns out pig iron, the value of which is listed and included in the totals given of products manufactured. The pig iron is made into steel by the steel manufacturer, and a duplication occurs when the value of the steel is included as part of the same totals. The steel is bought and made into an engine by another manufacturer and another duplication occurs. The engine is bought by still another manufacturer and he puts it in an automobile and another duplication occurs. Usually the product goes through the hands of several manufacturers and many duplications may occur. The result is that the figures obtained are worthless for purposes of comparison with the statistics of our export trade. If an automobile is exported, nothing but its completed value is included. The value of its parts turned out by some other manufacturer is not added thereto, and there are no duplications in the figures given for our exports.

Mr. Speaker, if it were true that the increase of exports of war matériel for the fiscal year was only 3 per cent of the value of our manufactured products for the same time, what of it, considering the way the figures for the total value of our manufactured products are obtained? The statement, however, is immaterial from any point of view, as our exports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, alone were over $2,000,000,000 larger than for the year ending June 30, 1914; and I shall show that all of this immense increase was due to demands created by the war, and is the factor that determines its effect on our business conditions.

Bear in mind at the outset that all wars change the course of trade. The present war, unparalleled in its magnitude, has, through blockades and closing of outlets, diverted commerce as never before, and every change has been for our benefit, opening new markets and new opportunities for trade on every side.

Everyone knows that a slight surplus of any product at once depresses its price and that a slight shortage invariably raises the market. The same is true with reference to wages. There were thousands of men out of employment before the war and wages were low. The war created a demand for workmen that could hardly be filled and wages naturally went up. The new demands for products and for labor caused by the war were so tremendous that they necessarily affected not merely the particular industries whose products were required but all kinds of business.

Some of the increases were so enormous that we can hardly credit the figures. In the 11 months ending May 30 of this year (1916) the exports of explosives were seventy-five times as large as in the corresponding months ending May 30, 1914. In comparative value the increase in this period was over $414,000,000, a sum so vast that in itself and alone it was sufficient to alter our commercial conditions. In the same period we exported five times the value of firearms that we did before the war, and our exports of shrapnel, shells, and iron and steel for war purposes increased over $100,000,000. We exported twenty times as much brass, and our exports of zinc rose from less than $400,000 to over $40,000,000. Both are a necessity in making munitions. You have heard much of the barbed-wire entanglements which protect the entrenchments. The war created an unprecedented demand for barbed wire and the exports increased from less than $4,000,000 for 11 months of the fiscal year of 1914 to over $21,000,000 in same period of the fiscal year of 1916.

SENT PRICES SOARING.

Before the war our exports of alcohol were insignificant, but it was needed for the manufacture of smokeless powder, and in the period last above referred to we exported nearly $7,000,000 in value. Aeroplanes became the scouts of the warring armies, and our exports rose from less than $230,000 to over $6,700,000. Cavalry and Artillery needed harness and saddlery, and in comparison with normal times we exported seven times as much of these articles. Armies not only need food but they are always extremely wasteful of provisions. Small wars have always caused flour, corn, and provisions to rise in value. Great wars have sent the prices soaring. Almost immediately after the declaration of war wheat went up 20 cents, corn 15 cents, and oats 10 cents. The closing of the Dardanelles shut out the greatest wheat exporting nation of the world—Russia. Last year every report of English success in their attack at these straits sent wheat down. If the Dardanelles could be thrown open tomorrow, wheat would drop 15 cents and a smash would ensue in the grain markets.

The demand for breadstuffs in the second year of the war was less than that for the first year, yet the exports of breadstuffs for the fiscal year of 1916 were more than two and one-half times as much as for 1914. Europe paid this country nearly $256,000,000 more for breadstuffs in 11 months of the last fiscal year than for the same period before the war, the most of which went directly to our farmers, enabling them in turn to buy that much more of manufactured products. It is said that a horse only lasts three weeks upon the modern battle line. This would seem to be correct, for while we only exported a little over $3,000,000 worth of horses and only $652,721 of mules in 1914, we exported over $69,000,000 worth of horses and $21,000,000 of mules in the fiscal year of 1916. Horses were a drug on the market before the war began. Is it any wonder that in the face of such demand the price of horses suitable for war purposes almost doubled? In 1914 we exported no horses to France. In the fiscal year of 1916 we exported over 175,000 in number. The great Napoleon once said that armies traveled on their stomachs. That this was true was shown when our exports of meat products increased for this period from less than $133,000,000 to $242,000,000. The increase in sales of breadstuffs and meats alone was sufficient to bring prosperity to the farmer.

Armies must have clothes, and we exported ten times as much woolen goods in the fiscal year recently concluded as we did in time of peace. Soldiers can not march without shoes, and our exports of boots and shoes were $30,000,000 above those of normal times. With so many men on the field of battle the warring peoples had not enough laborers to make locomotives or rails on which to run them, but their armies had to be transported, and our exports increased heavily in these lines. Iron and steel were needed for cannon and shells, etc., and the total of our exports of iron and steel was increased $322,000,000 over the antiwar period. The steel industry, which was sunk in a pit of depression before the war, was thus raised to the highest mark of its prosperity.

Attention has been called to the fact that our exports increased somewhat to the South American nations during the same period. This was only the natural result of the war. When they could no longer obtain manufactured products from Germany on account of the blockade, or from England and France, because their workers were too busy making munitions, the South Americans had to buy them in the United States. The exports to the neutral countries in Europe have also largely increased, but the increase passed through the neutral countries to supply the nations at war. Turn where you will to any increase worth noting in our exports and it will be found to be due to the war.

By reason of the enormous increase in our exports caused by the war the balance of trade with foreign nations in our favor for the last fiscal year alone was more than $2,100,000,000, a sum so gigantic that we can scarcely calculate the effects of it. Heretofore a balance of trade in our favor of $500,000,000 per annum was a source of great satisfaction in all business circles by reason of the stimulus which it gave business. In the last few months before the war the balance of trade was heavily against us, caused by the workings of the Underwood tariff under normal conditions, and gold to the amount of nearly $90,000,000 was sent abroad, just as it had been under the Wilson tariff of the Cleveland administration. The great balance created in our favor by the extraordinary conditions of the war turned back the golden stream. Since January 1, 1915, we have received from abroad over $700,000,000 in gold, as part payment of the indebtedness created by our enormous exports. This golden flood has permeated into every industry, has everywhere stimulated trade, has made money abundant and wages high, and helped to create temporary prosperity, which will burst like a bubble when peace is declared and normal conditions resumed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our prosperity has come through the blood and misery of our fellow men. In it there is nothing of which to boast, and much to regret.

If anything further is needed to show that the war was the cause of this enormous increase in the demand for our products, it can be found by an examination of the exports of products not used in war, which notwithstanding slight increases to some countries, as a whole, were reduced. The exports of agricultural implements, for example, fell off about one-half in 1916 as compared with 1914; for reapers, plows, and mowers are implements of peace alone. Typewriters are not used in war, although the present administration conducts its conflicts with them, and their exports fell off. Sewing machines were only exported about one-half as much as in normal times. Exports of stoves, structural iron, and sheet metal were greatly reduced. The warring nations are digging trenches instead of building houses and we exported about 50 per cent less of lumber as compared with times before the war. In normal times the Underwood tariff, like every other revenue tariff, increased our imports and lessened our exports, until the balance of trade was against us. The fact is that but for the war our exports instead of being so much greater would actually have been less than in times of peace.

Facts are stubborn things that will not down. In the face of these facts do our Democratic friends seriously think that they can make the people believe that the war is not the cause of the temporary prosperity that we are now enjoying? Do they think that our citizens will forget that when the war broke out our industries were depressed, our workmen largely out of employment, the balance of trade against us, our gold going abroad and a general panic impending? If so, they will find in November that the country realizes that nothing but a Republican protective tariff will save us from calamity when peace resumes its normal sway. [Applause.]

Comparative table showing notable increases in exports of specified articles from United States.

FISCAL YEARS ENDING JUNE 30.

Article	Eleven months ending May 30—
	1914 (before war)	1916 (during war)
Aeroplanes.....	$198,559	$6,709,883
Alcohol.....	64,439	6,954,315
Automobiles.....	24,583,425	91,954,466
Barbed wire.....	3,698,770	21,253,647
Brass.....	6,842,434	132,09,153
Boots and shoes.....	16,617,829	43,786,859
Breadstuffs.....	151,939,203	407,998,745
Cars and parts.....	6,914,217	21,987,933
Corn (included in breadstuffs).....	6,283,264	27,023,371
Explosives.....	5,877,915	414,655,383
Harness and saddlery.....	721,893	5,229,923
Meat products.....	132,686,390	242,371,169
Metal-working machinery.....	12,931,549	52,849,047
Miscellaneous iron and steel.....	16,783,661	120,107,054
Rails.....	9,893,022	15,957,637
Manufactured wool.....	4,367,771	50,883,822
Zinc, spelter and manufactured.....	369,667	40,563,719
Horses.....	3,221,557	69,008,116
Mules.....	652,721	21,121,419

FISCAL YEARS ENDING JUNE 30.

Total exports for year ending June 30, 1916.....	$4,333,698,604
Total exports for year ending June 30, 1914.....	2,329,684,025

Increase in exports..... 2,004,014,579

The SPEAKER pro. tempore (Mr. Cox). The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

MONUMENT TO JOHN ERICSSON.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, there is pending before the House of Representatives a bill introduced by Congressman FITZGERALD, of New York, for the erection of a suitable monument in the National Capital in honor of Capt. John Ericsson.

Years ago in the schoolbooks we learned that Baltimore was the Monumental City. It is now seldom so designated. This is largely due to the fact that within an hour's ride from the "metropolis on the Chesapeake" there stands by the lordly Potomac, at a point where the waters from the mountains meet the tides of the sea, our National Capital.

Pen of author and voice of orator have dwelt in studied phrase, polished sentence, and rounded period upon the plan, development, and prospects of the American Capital. It is at once a growing metropolis and at the same time practically devoid of the noise, smoke, and dust of industry found in other cities of the world containing 400,000 souls. Its regular streets, broad avenues, palatial homes, and great buildings, public and private; together with its numerous parks, whose areas describe many geometric outlines, all challenge the notice and command the favorable comment of visiting Americans and foreigners.

Some of the most interesting features of Washington are its monuments, erected as a protest against the oft-repeated statement that republics forget and are ungrateful. Between the Capitol and the Potomac, reaching toward the heavens, stands the greatest obelisk in the world. It was erected by a generous people's voluntary subscription and a congressional appropriation to the memory of Washington. Near the banks of the Potomac, beyond which rises in solemn grandeur Arlington Cemetery, the resting place of American heroism, is now being constructed a magnificent Greek temple in commemoration of Lincoln. [Applause.] In the various parks are imposing statues erected to brave, wise, and great Americans, "whose deeds crown history's pages, and time's great volume make." All these are in chaste marble, enduring granite, or imperishable bronze. These in the main are erected to commemorate America's native sons.

However, America did not come into national existence by native effort alone nor has that national existence been maintained independently of those who looked for the first time upon the sun in other climes or under other flags than ours. In an oblong square fronting the Executive Mansion is Lafayette Park. Here are beautiful walks under trees transplanted from many other countries. In the southeast corner upon an elevated pedestal, about which is the compatriot group, stands a bronze statue, with military trappings, of America's early, tried, and noble friend—Lafayette. [Applause.]

At the northeast corner is a similar statue erected to Kosciuszko, the Pole. May it stand there in grandeur until dismembered Poland, which gave him birth and for which he fought and fell, shall take its place among the other nations of the earth. [Applause.] In the southwest corner is another statue of heroic mold erected to Rochambeau, the great French general, who led his army, side by side with the Americans under Washington, up to triumphant Yorktown. The latest statue placed is in the northwest corner, that of Baron von Steuben, an officer under Frederick the Great. He became, after Valley Forge, the effective drill sergeant of our Continental Army. It was to a large extent his methods and discipline, added to the zeal, daring, and patriotism of the American Army, which humbled the land forces of Britain. [Applause.]

Nor are those who distinguished themselves on land alone remembered. In Franklin Park there has recently been erected a bronze statue of Irish Jack Barry, who nobly earned the title, "The Father of the American Navy." [Applause.] Recently the American Government in just retrospect condemned its own neglect of John Paul Jones, who under different flags had become in that period of revolution on two continents "the terror of the seas." As a measure of justice the American Government transported his remains from their Parisian resting place and placed them in a mausoleum at the Annapolis Naval Academy. Afterwards a statue enduring, imposing, and appropriate was erected to his memory at Potomac Park in the National Capital. The achievements of this Scot in gallantry and daring reflected luster all along his career, but never more than when he patrolled the seas in vigorous warfare against all who would assail the encradled Republic of the west. [Applause.]

But new obligations are being contracted by the Republic. They are being slowly discharged. To my mind, in this day of battle, this day when so many are profoundly impressed that our national peace and security rest upon a great and efficient Navy, it is fitting that we should do belated honor to the man whose genius, flashing through the guns of the Monitor in 1862, turned the ebb of Union fortune into the flood of confidence and victory. [Applause.]

John Ericsson was born with a genius for mechanics and a mind for mathematics. With the industry and persistence of his race this child of the north lived and closed his career with a record for achievement which, had he lived a few centuries ago, would have, by the iconoclasts of to-day, been called a romance.

He first saw the light under the northern sun in Vermeland, Sweden. His nativity was but a few degrees from the Arctic Circle. It was the land of the short day and summer and the long night and winter. Eighteen hundred and three was a year of great import to America. It was the year when Napoleon, intending to deliver his greatest indirect blow at Britain, ceded Louisiana to the United States, giving us the scope of an empire. Far off Sweden was then under the rule of the great Napoleon. There a boy was born who 59 years later was to prove a great factor in preserving intact, under the American flag, that mighty domain. Napoleon intended by so ceding Louisiana to build a western republic capable of battling successfully with Britain. That was an enterprise in which the great Corsican recognized his own inability, for already Britain's supremacy of the seas had confined Napoleon's triumphs to continental Europe.

The march of events confirmed the foresight of Bonaparte. Britain was successfully combated and our most marked victory was at New Orleans, the populous center of that great annexation. The supreme trial of the Republic was not destined to be with Great Britain or any other power. It arose between two parts of the Republic itself. In that John Ericsson earned the distinction which the bill for his monument now pending in this Congress would confer.

Between the Swedish cradle and the American tomb (1803–1880) we find many interesting facts. Ericsson exhibited a precocity for drawing at the age of 4. At 8 he became an adept at understanding and handling machinery. He was the builder of a perfect miniature mill at 9. At 10 he astonished Admiral Platten, the great Swedish canal builder, who prophesied for the boy an extraordinary future. At 13 he directed 600 Government military laborers in the construction of public highways. So the good roads builders of to-day may find a pioneer in John Ericsson. At 17 he became a soldier in the army of Bernadotte, under whom he was rapidly advanced. At 18 he was a surveyor in the King's service. His measurements and maps made at that time still remain marvels of accuracy and utility. At 23 he left his homeland of the north, where he deemed his abilities and activities circumscribed, for Britain was then as now the empire of the sea. There, he believed, there would be a demand for the creations of his brain and their perfection by his hand. [Applause.]

Britain was not an hospitable host for the Scandinavian genius. The man who rivaled Stephenson in producing the steam locomotive, the foreigner who produced at a London fire, the first steam fire engine, the alien who bound the cannon barrels against their bursting, and the originator of the screw propeller, came up against British official inertia and English red tape. While Ericsson could take dead metal and shape it to his will, chain the elements, make a gun safe, at last to its handlers, subdue the fire fiend, and, seizing upon the theory of bird flight, apply it to shipping, revolutionize in cheapness and speed navigation, yet, he could not jar loose the official mind of Britain. The official mind of Britain was much like the official minds of other countries which have so often dismissed the suggestions of genius with these insuperable objections: "We never saw it before. It was never done before." It almost leads one to inquire why the ancients wasted rocks with which to build pyramids. Were there not sufficient official skulls for the purpose?

So in 1839, wearied with Britain's official inaction, though he had acquired 30 British patents, he started for New York, the then ambitious port of the Western Continent, now the one through which passes more commerce than any other port of the world.

He had been schooled in his native land to look to officials and governments for patronage, but he learned in Britain, and had it confirmed in America, that governments are less inclined toward seeing and adopting enterprise than is private capital. This is probably due first to the fact that the government is not intent on accomplishing gain, and second, the machinery of government being hedged in by constitutions and laws, and controlled by many heads instead of one, is necessarily slow in either seeing or accomplishing that which is not warranted by precedent.

He came to America at the invitation of Robert F. Stockton, an American capitalist. In 1842 he designed, and the Government adopted, its first real steam war vessel, known as the Princeton. He invented an instrument for measuring distances in firing guns. The range finders on our great dreadnaughts are but the perfection of this instrument invented by Ericsson. Its importance may well be realized since size of guns, weight of projectile, resistance of armor plate, and distance between gun and target, constitute the four great facts in naval gunnery.

The New World became attractive to him. He conceived a patriotic devotion to the great Republic whose enterprising men and liberal Government gave him scope for his genius and industry. From this country he was granted 100 patents. So, in 1848, he abjured his allegiance to the Crown of Sweden and became a naturalized American citizen. Before our Civil War he conceived the Monitor and offered it to Napoleon III, there seeming to be no American demand, but Napoleon rejected it. By a strange coincidence, the character of the great battle in Hampton Roads was to either side suggested by Ericsson. Mallory, the naval secretary of the Confederacy, had been a friend of Ericsson's before the Civil War. In his then talks with the inventor, the ironclad was discussed, and Mallory later upon obtaining his position in the Confederate Cabinet, used Ericsson's thought, years before the war informally communicated, for the construction of the Merrimac.

The Civil War was on. Its first year had shown in the activities of the field the mettle of both sides, albeit lack of discipline and preparation were manifested on either side, but more particularly by the North. It is an ancient story now about the construction of the Merrimac. Her entering Hampton Roads, sinking our Cumberland, burning the Congress—both wooden vessels—and driving the Minnesota into a position of helplessness.

But the building of the Merrimac was not unknown to the northern authorities, and the time of her arrival where the battle must take place was of course reasonably forecasted. It seemed providential that preparation for meeting it should have been made by the one man then in the world capable of successful preparation. [Applause.]

On September 14, 1861, the Government entered into a contract with Ericsson to construct the Monitor. One of his claims was that it should be impregnable to shot. Think of it! In that critical period the Government, dealing with the only individual capable of meeting the great national crisis, inserted in its contract of purchase a condition that payment should be withheld unless that condition could be clearly met.

The Monitor's keel was laid October 25, 1861; her engines were steamed December 30. It was launched January 30, completed February 15, went into United States commission February 25, and on March 8 made her famous trip to Hampton Roads. Word painting of the first great sea fight, where gravity seems to have been conquered and where iron not only floated but fought iron, is left to the many writers and historians who with picturesque detail have given to the world an account of the first great naval battle as modern warfare then begun and since continued. Interesting as such an account might be, more interesting would be a statement of the fear and trembling on the decks of every northern wooden man-of-war. The consternation of Philadelphia, Boston, and New York, who saw in the immediate future the menace of their invaded ports, their destroyed shipping, and their wealth placed under tribute to the ironclad monsters already under construction and fashioned after the Merrimac. More interesting yet was the suspense and almost terror in Washington, where those in authority in anticipation saw the Merrimac steaming up the Chesapeake on into the Potomac, past Mount Vernon, and up to the National Capital, with guns trained on the Treasury and the Capitol, which meant more than a mere battle and the destruction of property. It meant a release of the southern blockade. It meant recognition of the Confederacy by all the powers on earth. It meant their commerce aiding the seceding group. It forecasted an unconquerable South and a permanently divided Nation.

Men sometimes refer to the battle in Hampton Roads as being undecisive, because neither ship was captured or sunk. But the best evidence of victory was the subsidence of fear throughout our Navy; the restoration of complete confidence in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia; the tightening of the southern blockade; the nonrecognition by foreign powers; the supreme relief and the glorious confidence of Lincoln and his Cabinet; and as time went on the complete victory by the North and the perpetuation of the Union left unquestioned proof of who was victor and who was vanquished in the first great battle of floating iron. [Applause.]

That in building the Monitor, Ericsson's chief consideration was for battle rather than navigation is suggested in the final end of the historic craft. Late in the year of 1862, as the northern naval forces were prosecuting their conquest against the shore defenses of the South, the Monitor was sent down the Atlantic coast. There, in a stormy sea, it passed Cape Hatteras; but in the increasing gale which followed it yielded to the battering of Neptune's artillery, and on the 31st day of December, 1862, it sank in that section of the sea which has claimed so many craft of both wood and iron and levied, year by year, heavy tribute of human life.

My attention has recently been called to the fact that Dr. Greenville Weeks, who was a surgeon on board the Monitor in its first battle cruise, and still with it on its final trip, still lives, at the age of fourscore years. He recently visited the great Capital whose preservation was the Monitor's prize in 1862. It may be a matter of general indifference, but to me one of the most interesting seafaring accounts I ever read was "The last cruise of the Monitor," written many years ago by Dr. Weeks, in which he graphically described the last trip and final passing of the Monitor upon which he had been an officer and witness in its battle triumph, and which he left on its final cruise only when it sank to rise no more.

There is a story of the ancient Swedish kings, and, by the way, one of them was named Ericsson, that a prince entitled to the throne must look upon it, then go and perform some great and heroic deed; then drink a libation from a skull before he takes his seat of power. Ericsson had looked upon a throne of metal, proffered by Neptune. He drank a libation from rebellion's skull, and became entitled to his throne. That right was confirmed by Neptune and Mars. [Applause.]

Some may think Ericsson's monitor was the chance thought of the dreaming inventor. It was not. It was the legitimate product of a highly organized, tempered, tried, and cultured brain, which always controlled and commanded a hand of cunning.

A tribute to Ericsson is, in a broad sense, a tribute to the race from which he sprung. No evidence of this would seem better or more appropriate just now than a quotation from Admiral Luce in a paper read before the Naval Institute April 20, 1876:

The monitor was the crystallization of 40 centuries of thought on attack and defense, and exhibited in a singular manner the old Norse element of the American Navy: Ericsson (Swedish son of Eric) built her; Dahlgren (Swedish branch of valley) armed her; and Worden (Swedish, wording, worthy) fought her. How the ancient Skalds would have struck their wild harps in hearing such names in heroic verse! How they would have written them in "immortal runes"!

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLDFIELD). The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, when Woodrow Wilson was nominated for President the Democratic newspapers and text books contained much about his peculiar fitness for this high office to which he aspired. We were told by his official biographer that "forty years of constant study and investigation before he ever became a candidate for office at all" had qualified him for this place as no other man who preceded him as President had been qualified. That he was better grounded in the science of government than anyone who had preceded him. That he had such a high conception of the obligation of public office that he would be less liable to make mistakes in the conduct thereof than anyone who had preceded him. That he was a positive character. Had rare good judgment, and that when once his judgment was formed on public matters he would not easily reverse that judgment. That when he spoke he always used the right word in the right place. That he said what he meant and always meant what he said. That he expressed his conviction in no uncertain terms. That it was hard indeed to get him to deviate in the least degree from a conviction once formed.

William Bayard Hale, the author of "Woodrow Wilson; The Story of His Life," gives us a striking illustration of this characteristic in Wilson by relating the following incident:

When Wilson was a student at Princeton he was a member of a debating society known as "Whig Hall." Princeton had another society at the same time known as "Clio Hall." The best debaters were selected from these two societies annually to contend for what was known as "The Lynde Prize." On one of these occasions Woodrow Wilson was selected as the champion of Whig Hall. The subject of the debate was to be "Protection versus Free Trade." The debaters were required to take sides by lot. Wilson put his hand into the hat and drew out a slip that required him to argue in favor of "Protection." He tore the slip up and returned to his seat. Nothing under heaven, he swore, would induce him to advance arguments for a thing in which he did not believe. He did not believe in "Protection." So the Lynde Prize went to somebody else.

I know that comparisons are sometimes odious, but the people of the United States are entitled to know whether the Woodrow Wilson of Whig Hall is the present Woodrow Wilson of the White House.

Let us see whether there is now nothing under heaven that would induce him to advance arguments for a thing in which he does not believe. The best evidence on this proposition is afforded by the many mental acrobatic feats performed by Mr. Wilson since he became President, to a few of which I desire to call the attention of this House.

MOLASSES TO CATCH FLIES.

One of the planks in the Democratic platform of 1912 declared "Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign." Frequently during that campaign Woodrow Wilson was inspired by the above plank to declare "our platform is not molasses to catch flies. It means business; it means what it says. * * * And they who talk one way and vote another are going to be retired to a very quiet and private retreat." Mr. Wilson might have believed in this plank of the Democratic platform at the time and might have believed in his own declaration with reference thereto at the time he made it, but it is painfully evident that soon after he became President of the United States he changed his mind with reference to both of them, and has demonstrated by his action and his treatment of that platform that its pledges were not made to be kept, and that it must have been molasses to catch flies. Subsequent events have proved that that is the only practical purpose it has subserved.

ONE TERM FOR PRESIDENT.

The Baltimore convention that nominated Wilson for President declared emphatically in favor of a single presidential term, and also advocated an amendment to the Constitution of the United States making the President of the United States ineligible for reelection, and the candidate of that convention was pledged to this principle. Woodrow Wilson accepted the nomination and accepted this plank in the platform, and much ado was made about it during the campaign of 1912. While he was a candidate for election he was in favor of it. After the election he immediately changed his mind and commenced doing and continues to do everything in his power to secure a reelection.

FREE TOLLS.

The Baltimore convention declared in favor of exempting from toll all American ships engaged in coastwise trade passing through the Panama Canal. Woodrow Wilson accepted this plank, and every speech and public utterance made by him during the campaign emphasized the wisdom of this declaration. But when he became President he changed his mind, and without giving any reason for it whatever demanded that the Democratic Congress then in power pass a law imposing on American coastwise ships the same charges that were imposed on foreign ships passing through this canal. And up to this goodly hour he has never given Congress or the people any explanation in defense of this action. He permitted it to leak out from those closely connected with his administration that it was done to appease the demands of England, but that this is not true is substantiated by the statement of Sir Edward Grey, British secretary for foreign affairs, who has openly declared that England at no time demanded that foreign vessels be permitted to pass through the canal on the same terms with American coastwise vessels; that England did not expect any such action on the part of this country and was surprised at what was done.

PROTECTIVE TARIFF.

All of his life, until within the last year, Woodrow Wilson has been unalterably opposed to a protective tariff. He has repeatedly in his written commentaries and in public speech declared it unconstitutional.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. After making that statement, I would just like to ask if the gentleman desired to modify it any, in the light of the statement read by Mr. Longworth, of Ohio?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion, and think another paragraph should be added to my speech. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Yet when brought face to face with a depleted Treasury and with a tariff-for-revenue-only law that has utterly failed to supply the necessary funds with which to defray the current expenses of government, he suddenly changes his mind and advocates the retention of a protective tariff on sugar.

Until during this present session of Congress he has been opposed to a protective tariff upon dyestuffs, but something happened, and he changed his mind and is now loudly proclaiming the necessity of a protective tariff on dyestuffs.

How does his present position on this subject compare with the position that he occupied when, as a member of "Whig Hall," he swore that nothing under heaven would induce him to advance arguments in favor of a protective tariff?

TARIFF COMMISSION.

The President, until quite recently, has been violently opposed to a tariff commission, looking upon it as an instrument utterly at war with Democratic principles and utterly inconsistent with his ideas of a tariff for revenue only. But something happened and he changed his mind, and we find him during the winter just past sending for Mr. KITCHIN, the gentleman from North Carolina, leader of the majority side, whom he informed of his change of mind and of his desire that he (KITCHIN) should introduce a bill for the establishment of a nonpartisan tariff commission. Mr. Wilson found as a result of this interview that Mr. KITCHIN was not as much of a mental acrobat as he, and that he would not consent upon demand to change his convictions of a lifetime, even at the behest of the President; that he laid some store upon principle; and that he would not surrender his principle, as the President was willing to surrender his, simply for expediency. So as an alternative the President induced the next ranking member of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. RAINEY, to introduce his tariff-commission bill. The original measure introduced by Mr. RAINEY provided for five members, but before this bill had been in the legislative hopper a week the President changed his mind again and had Mr. RAINEY introduce a new bill, which finally passed this House as a part of the general revenue bill, that provides for six members of the tariff commission.

In his Indianapolis speech—that he and his friends are now trying so hard to forget—the President declared that he had "put one over" on the Republican minority of this House by providing in the law creating a new trade commission a scheme for the investigation and scientific treatment of the tariff question, including all the conditions of trade in this country, the cost of manufacture, the cost of transportation, and all things that enter into the question of the tariff, in foreign countries as well as in the United States, and into all those questions of foreign combinations which affect international trade between Europe and the United States. He was of the opinion then that he had a commission to do all the things that are now expected that a tariff commission could do. But he changed his mind, and voiced that change in his demand that this Congress create an independent tariff commission.

REVENUE.

When this Congress first assembled, President Wilson delivered his message in person, and, amongst other things, declared that the additional revenue necessary to defray the expense of government should be raised by continuing the direct taxes then in force, and in addition that there be placed a tax of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline and naphtha, a tax of 50 cents per horsepower on automobiles and internal-explosion engines, a stamp tax on bank checks, a tax of 25 cents per ton on pig iron, and a tax of 25 cents per ton on fabricated iron and steel. But something happened. He got his ear to the ground, and he heard a mighty rumble of dissension coming from every quarter. He soon discovered that automobiles were no longer owned solely by the rich, but that almost every farmer in the country had either an automobile or an explosion engine. He also heard from the pig-iron workers of the country. He likewise heard from the fabricated iron and steel workers of the country. And he further discovered that, by reason of the confidence still obtaining in banking institutions of our country, the people deposited their money in banks instead of concealing it in their old shoes or elsewhere, and that the bank-check tax was especially odious. So he changed his mind; and in the revenue bill presented to this Congress, which was approved by the President before it was presented, not one reference is made to or a single cent of tax is laid on any one of the articles referred to in his message to Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

NEUTRALITY.

Soon after the European war broke out the President admonished our people that we should occupy a position of strict neutrality as between the warring nations; that we should be neutral in thought as well as deed.

At that time he set his seal of condemnation upon a proposition being entertained by some of our financiers to make a loan to some of the warring powers, and declared that such an act would be inconsistent with our position of neutrality. But something again happened, and in less than a year after he made this declaration of neutrality he openly encouraged the making of a loan of millions to these same warring powers, and then contended and now contends that such action is perfectly consistent with our position of neutrality. If he was right in his first position, he is certainly wrong in his second. Or if he is right in his last declaration, he committed an error in making the first. In any event he completely reversed himself upon this very important point. [Applause on the Republican side.]

On January 18, 1916, the President declared, through the Lansing note, "that a merchant vessel carrying an armament of any sort, in view of the character of the submarine warfare and the defensive weakness of undersea craft, should be held to be an auxiliary cruiser and so treated by a neutral, as well as by a belligerent government, and [our Government] is seriously considering instructing its officials accordingly." Within two months after taking the above stand, and announcing our position to the powers of Europe, to the utter amazement of the people of the United States, he changed his mind and reversed the attitude of our Government completely on this all-important subject by declaring that a merchant vessel has the right to carry armament and that by so doing it should not be held to be an auxiliary cruiser.

In his note of January 18 the President recognized the submarine as a legitimate instrument of warfare and suggested that international law should be changed to meet this new instrument of war. Within less than three months, on April 19, in his message with reference to his note to Germany delivered in this House, he took a directly opposite position and declared that the submarine was "incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long-established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals, and the sacred immunities of noncombatants." What transpired in this interim to cause the President to so completely change front? Something must have happened to cause him to change his mind, but what that something was he has never given to the public.

These contrary positions taken by the President came nearer getting us into war with Europe than all the other misunderstandings that have arisen up to date in our foreign relations. [Applause on the Republican side.]

At one time he declared that he wanted the fullest possible expression by Congress on the armed merchant-ship question, then suddenly changed his mind and declared that Congress had no right to express itself upon this question at all—that it was a matter solely for the Executive Department to deal with.

WARNING AMERICANS.

During the last of February of the present year he sent word to Democratic leaders in this Congress that he did not want the resolutions pending in this body warning Americans to stay off of armed merchant ships belonging to belligerents openly considered. For some unexplainable reason he changed his mind, and during the first days of March he sent word to these same leaders that he wanted these resolutions brought out on the floor of the House and defeated. In obedience to this demand fully 90 per cent of the Democratic side who were personally in favor of the warning resolutions voted against their convictions and in compliance with the President's demand to defeat them.

Repeatedly has the President warned Americans living in Mexico to leave that country, for the reason that the United States could not protect either their persons or property, notwithstanding the fact that these American citizens were in a place where they had a right to be, where their property interests were, and were entitled to the fullest protection of this Government. But when it came to warning Americans to stay off of armed merchant ships belonging to belligerents, the President changed his attitude entirely and not only neglected and refused to give this warning himself but also demanded that the Congress of the United States should not give such a warning.

MEXICO.

Soon after he became President, Mr. Wilson declared that the Mexican people had a right to decide their own internal troubles without any outside interference; that they had the right to establish their own form of government, no matter how much blood was shed in doing it, and that it was nobody's business but theirs. Very shortly after this he changed his mind and interfered himself in the affairs of Mexico, and declared that Huerta should not remain president of that unfortunate country, and immediately commenced conniving at his displacement by furnishing munitions of war to the bandit leaders of Mexico that they might the more completely terrorize the people of that country.

At another time he demanded that all Mexican claimants and aspirants for the presidency get together in a general conference to establish a de facto government and agree upon some one of their number to act as president, and threatened non-recognition of anyone who refused. Afterwards he changed his mind completely with reference to this scheme, abandoned it entirely, and recognized as the Mexican ruler Carranza, the only claimant who did not and would not join in his proposed conference.

He refused to recognize Huerta as President, declaring that he was not the head of a de facto government, yet he demanded that, as President, he salute the American flag; and to enforce this demand he sent an army of men and war vessels to Vera Cruz. After 19 of our boys were killed and a great many more wounded the President changed his mind and withdrew these troops and these war vessels without receiving the salute that he had so vociferously demanded, and so precipitate was his withdrawal of our war vessels that had it not been for the humane action of the officers of a German and a British vessel lying near by hundreds of American citizens would have been subjected to the merciless attack of enraged Mexicans.

He sent our Army into Mexico nominally for the purpose of capturing Villa, his former pet, and his bandit horde; but before capturing Villa, and without accomplishing any good purpose, he changed his mind, and after the Battle of Carrizal, in which a great number of our soldier boys were killed and a greater number wounded, he is now proposing, upon the demand of the impotent Carranza, to further humiliate this country by withdrawing our troops.

From first to last nearly a thousand American citizens and soldiers have been killed by the Mexicans, the deaths of more than three-fourths of whom may be traced to the wobbling policy, or want of policy, of President Wilson.

TOO PROUD TO FIGHT.

When the news came of the sinking of the Lusitania and the whole world stood shocked and appalled, Mr. Wilson said he was "too proud to fight"; but recently he gave evidence of changing his mind on this proposition by telling a meeting of preachers in New York that he always welcomed a fight and that he thought it must be in his blood. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I gather that the gentleman has already referred to about 25 different changes of policy on the part of the President of the United States. In order to be fair, the gentleman has perhaps included somewhere in his speech some one policy upon which the President has not changed his mind. Does the gentleman intend to refer to any such consistency on the part of the President? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, if I can find any I will. Possibly I may find one or two. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

MEXICO BEFORE UNITED STATES.

When Mr. Wilson became President of the United States he took a solemn oath to defend our country and our countrymen wherever they might be, but if he is correctly reported he has even forgotten this solemn obligation, for in his speech at Detroit recently made he declared it to be his purpose to "serve Mexico first." He made this astounding declaration by first charging that unnamed persons, save as he designated them "fellow citizens," are seeking to "exploit" Mexico; and then declared that "Mexico has justification for distrusting us." What right has even the President to declare that a number of "fellow citizens" are seeking to exploit Mexico? He gives us no facts to substantiate his charge, and it little becomes the President of the United States to make it. Better would it appear if this charge came from Mexico and that the President of the United States, whose duty it is to defend our fellow citizens, should demand the facts substantiating any such charge rather than to assume the truth thereof and declare upon such assumption that he will serve Mexico first.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. I suppose the gentleman wants to be correct?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. HELVERING. As a matter of fact, the President said he would serve the people of Mexico first, rather than those interested in exploiting Mexico.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. But the President is not justified in calling those who have spent their time and money in Mexico, by the invitation of an established government there, "exploiters."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was any exception made when Americans generally were ordered out of Mexico, to leave their property and take their chances?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. None.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there for a moment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] said something about the President being interested in the people of Mexico. Does not the gentleman from Indiana think he ought to be interested in the people of the United States who are in Mexico, even ahead of the people who are Mexicans?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. The Democratic platform at Baltimore declared that it would be one of its chief duties to protect the American borders and the rights of American citizens in foreign lands. [Applause on the Republican side.] In the face of that platform your President and mine has declared, "Get out of there; we can not protect you," and has raised no hand in behalf of those whose interests are in Mexico and whose lives have been lost or imperiled in Mexico.

That he intends to serve Mexico first is evidenced by the fact that on the 18th of March, nine days after the Columbus raid, in which a great number of our citizens were ruthlessly murdered, there arrived at Vera Cruz on a steamer from New York 1,350,000 rounds of soft-nosed cartridges and other munitions of war for Carranza. This Government is not only passively permitting the shipment of these munitions of war but in addition this administration is actively aiding in furnishing guns, cartridges, and other munitions of war to the so-called Mexican Government, for upon complaint being made by the Mexican Government to the State Department that cartridge-manufacturing machines from the Waterbury-Farrell Foundry at Waterbury, Conn., had been delayed, our Government took official action to hasten the shipment of these machines and saw to it that these machines were immediately shipped. That was in May, at a time when this Government knew of the intense feeling existing in Mexico against the presence of American soldiers on Mexican soil, this all happening after the American soldiers had been shot down at Parral and just before the ambush and massacre at Carrizal.

When Wilson first became President he found an embargo upon shipments of arms and ammunition to Mexico, this embargo having been fixed by President Taft. Wilson first declared that he would continue its maintenance, but in order to accomplish his purpose in ousting Huerta he changed his mind and lifted the embargo, and from that time to this he has permitted the furnishing of arms and ammunition to this bandit country, with which the life blood of our soldiers and citizens has been spilled. Do you not think it is pretty near time that he should change his mind and in the discharge of his obligation as President of the United States serve, for a period at least, the people of the United States first? [Applause on the Republican side.]

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

About the time of the meeting of the Sixty-fourth Congress President Wilson, in a letter to Senator CLARK, informed him that he would veto the Philippine bill if it had a provision in it fixing the time for Filipino independence. Before Congress was half through he changed his mind and agreed to approve a bill having this clause in it.

THE ARMY.

After the European war had been in progress for more than a year Mr. Wilson expressed his opposition to any material increase in the Standing Army and declared that there was no need of any increase. He then became the advocate of Secretary Garrison's continental-army plan. And to the enlargement of our Army on this plan he remained a firm advocate until the present Congress was well under way. Suddenly he changed his mind and abandoned Garrison and his continental-army plan and became the champion of the scheme now embodied in the Hay reorganization law. Secretary Garrison, not being as adept at somersaulting as the President and seeing no reason why this sudden change of front should be made, resigned his position, and the President called in his place a Secretary of War who would do his bidding, but who personally had always been against the present scheme of so-called preparedness.

Mr. Wilson has repeatedly expressed himself in opposition to the young men of our country spending their time in military training; that such training is not consistent with our form of government, and that it tends to militarism. But he has changed his mind on this proposition and is now demanding that 400,000 young men be trained and kept in training.

THE NAVY.

President Wilson was likewise opposed to any additional increase of the Navy, and officially declared that it was sufficient to meet all emergencies and that there was no occasion for the expenditure of money beyond the fixed program for its increase and enlargement. But over night he changed his mind on this proposition and is now demanding that our Navy shall be made the second, if not the largest, in the world.

TRUSTS.

With great blare of trumpets during the campaign of 1912, and immediately after he became President of the United States, Mr. Wilson declared it to be his purpose to save "the wretched and downtrodden" from the "grasping hand of private monopoly," and pledged himself and his party to the annihilation of all "kinds of artificial advantage"; that he would not be content with the bringing of civil suits for the dissolution of monopolistic trusts, but that those who were responsible for their management and control should be prosecuted under the criminal law. Then he changed his mind, and not only has he failed to institute any criminal proceeding against violators of the antitrust laws, but he has also abandoned the prosecution of civil suits for the dissolution of what he termed "these unholy and unrighteous combinations." Yea, more, he has been encouraging them in every way that he knows how, until to-day there are more trusts and larger trusts in this country than there have ever been in all its previous history.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

Before Mr. Wilson became President of the United States he declared himself in favor of using every possible means in check of foreign immigration. In his history of the American people, when discussing this question he said that the hordes that were coming into this country from Hungary and Poland and from the south of Italy were the most sordid and hopeless characters and that their standards of life and work were such as American workmen had never dreamed of hitherto; that we had prohibited the Chinese from coming into this country but that they were more to be desired as workmen, if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at our eastern ports. And during the campaign of 1912 he said in a public address in New York City, "We want American life kept to its standards and that the only standards of American life shall be standards of restriction; then we are all upon a common ground, not of those who criticize immigration but those who declare themselves Americans. * * * Of course, if the immigrants are allowed to come in unrestricted hosts and to stop at the ports where they enter and there to compete in an over-supplied labor market, there is going to be unhappiness; there is going to be deterioration; there is going to be everything that will be detrimental to immigrants." Thus did he, not only in his private writing, but in his public speech, cause the American people to believe that he was in sympathy with the sentiment of the country, then and now so largely in favor of putting the most stringent check upon foreign immigration. But these declarations made by him on this subject have proven to be but molasses to catch flies, for when he had an opportunity to put his words into acts he failed to do it; on the contrary he vetoed the Burnett immigration bill.

Now again has this bill passed the House during the present session with an overwhelming majority. It is now sleeping in the Senate. In making up the program of the Senate, selecting the bills which will be passed by that body during the remainder of this session, the Burnett immigration bill has no place. Why is this so, if it is not because the President will be compelled either to veto it, if he wishes for once in his life to be consistent, or else to sign it and again show to the world and again confirm his record of inconsistency. No one has heard of the President making a visit to the Capitol and applying the lash to the backs of Democratic leaders and demanding that the immigration bill shall be taken up and passed by the Senate during this present session, notwithstanding the fact that there is a greater demand for its passage from all sections of the country than there is for any other measure now pending in the Senate, unless it possibly be the child-labor bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

CHILD LABOR.

How different the conduct of President Wilson in his attitude with reference to the child-labor bill. This bill was not included in the Senate program, which had been submitted to the President and met with his sanction, and public announcement had been made that it, together with the immigration bill, would not be considered during the present session. After that announcement was made and the public was apprised of the fact that this measure would not be considered during the present session, the mighty voice of the people was heard from every city, village, and hamlet throughout the United States, except a few States in the South, which the President knows are with him politically anyhow, and when he heard this voice, without announcement or any prearrangement, he came to the Capitol, sent for the Democratic leaders of the Senate, and demanded of them that the child-labor bill be taken up and passed before adjournment. Dumfounded at this action, after his former agreement to the Senate program, the Democratic majority were for a time at an utter loss to know what they should do, but, agreeable to their former obedience and compliance with the whims and caprices of the President, they finally held another caucus, and have agreed to conform their action to this last change of mind of the President with reference to their program and will pass this bill.

What of the President's attitude with reference to child-labor legislation? The evidence furnished by him, written and oral, discloses that he has been opposed to the regulation of child labor by Federal legislation for years and that his opposition was based upon the fundamental proposition that any such legislation is unconstitutional. In one of his lectures on constitutional law, delivered in 1911, he said:

Its power—

The Federal Government—

is to regulate commerce between the States, and the attempts now made during every session of Congress to carry the implications of that power beyond the utmost boundaries of reasonable and honest inference show that the only limits likely to be observed by politicians are those set by the good sense and conservative temper of the country.

The proposed Federal legislation with regard to the regulation of child labor affords a striking example. If the power to regulate commerce between the States can be stretched to include the regulation of labor in mills and factories, it can be made to embrace every particular of the industrial organization and action of the country. The only limitation Congress would observe should the Supreme Court assent to such obviously absurd extravagances of interpretation would be the limitations of opinion and of circumstances.

Since Mr. Wilson delivered the above opinion there has been no change in the Constitution of the United States either extending or abridging its powers of legislation upon this subject. If it was unconstitutional at the time Mr. Wilson delivered that opinion, it is unconstitutional now. He has written much on constitutional law. He is delighted to be recognized as an authority upon this subject. Therefore what he says thereon is entitled to more than ordinary weight, and his change of attitude should receive more than ordinary attention. Something has caused him to change his mind and to become suddenly a great advocate of Federal legislation to control child labor. What can it be that has so suddenly caused this change? He has made no explanation, and are we not warranted in concluding that it is molasses to catch flies? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Notwithstanding this eleventh-hour conversion and the political purpose of his action, which is so patent, a Member of this House in a public speech within the least week declared that if this bill passes President Wilson will be entitled to all the glory and all the credit for its becoming a law. As a matter of fact, he will be entitled to no credit if honest conviction and unselfishness of action are to be counted the measures of credit. His contribution to this legislation will be like the contribution of King John to the Magna Charta—wrung from him by the people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

LABOR LEGISLATION.

The Democratic platform of 1912, for the purpose of inducing the labor vote of this country, contained the following plank:

The expanding organization of industry makes it essential that there should be no abridgment of the right of wage earners and producers to organize for the protection of wages and the improvement of labor conditions, to the end that such labor organizations and their members should not be regarded as illegal combinations in restraint of trade.

Mr. Wilson accepted this plank and gave it his hearty indorsement in public addresses during the campaign. In his speech of acceptance, in speaking of this plank and of the laboring classes of the country, he said:

No law that safeguards their life; that improves the physical and moral conditions under which they live; that makes their hours of labor rational and tolerable; that gives them freedom to act in their own interest; and that protects them where they can not protect themselves, can properly be regarded as class legislation or as anything but a measure taken in the interest of the whole people, whose partnership in right action we are trying to establish and make real and practical. It is in this spirit that we shall act if we are genuine spokesmen of the whole country.

That is the way he talked before the election, when he was anxious to secure the suffrage of the 2,000,000 voters contributed from the laboring classes, but what was his performance after the election? The Democratic majority in the Congress that followed made a pretense to carry out this plank in their platform by inserting in the sundry civil bill "that no part of the $300,000 provided therein for the enforcement of the antitrust law should be expended for the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the condition of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful." This bill was signed by the President and it became a law. However, he accompanied his signature with a statement showing that he had changed his mind completely with reference to the plank, to which I have heretofore alluded, concerning labor organizations being exempt from prosecution under the antitrust law and concerning which he had declared that they should have the fullest freedom to act in their own interests. In this statement he said:

I have signed this bill because I can do so without in fact limiting the opportunity or the power of the Department of Justice to prosecute violations of the law by whomsoever committed. If I could have separated from the rest of the bill the item which authorizes the expenditure by the Department of Justice of a special sum of $300,000 for the prosecution of violations of the antitrust law, I would have vetoed that item, because it places upon the expenditure a limitation which is, in my opinion, unjustifiable in character and principle. But I could not separate it. I do not understand that the limitation was intended as either an amendment or an interpretation of the antitrust law, but merely as an expression of the opinion of the Congress.

I can assure the country that this item will neither limit nor in any way embarrass the action of the Department of Justice. Other appropriations supply the department with abundant funds to enforce the law. The law will be interpreted in the determination of what the department should do by independent and, I hope, impartial judgments as to the true and just meaning of substantive statutes of the United States.

He employed the most forceful language at his command in declaring his opposition to this character of legislation and emphasized the fact that he had completely changed his opinion with reference to the rights of union labor being privileged exemption from prosecution under the antitrust law. Afterwards Congress passed the Clayton antitrust bill, in which it is endeavored to exempt labor organizations from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law, but this, too, is merely a pretense according to the opinion of the President, for with reference to it he has declared that it "grants no privilege not already enjoyed."

ECONOMY.

In his pre-election declarations the President was very positive in his promises for retrenchment in public expenditures, and denounced in scathing terms the extravagance of the Republicans in their conduct of public business. But after he became President he changed his mind, and while he had the complete domination over the Congress that passed the appropriation bills and had the power to veto any or all of them, yet the first Congress after he became President appropriated $114,000,000 more than any previous Congress, and the Sixty-fourth Congress will increase this figure by many millions, not counting a cent for the extra cost of preparedness.

NEW OFFICES.

President Wilson as a candidate also inveighed against the army of useless offices and officers who are yearly sapping the Government of millions of dollars for no good purpose, and promised retrenchment in this branch of the Government. But after he was elected he changed his mind, and instead of decreasing the number of offices and officers he has created many new offices and commissions, and has added to the office-holding class more than 30,000, with an increased salary list of $42,000,000 annually.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. Wilson has been on every side of the woman-suffrage proposition. He has been against the right of woman suffrage entirely, but all at once he changed his mind on this proposition and became an enthusiastic advocate of woman suffrage, and voted for the suffrage amendment in the New Jersey election last fall. It was heralded from one end of the country to the other that he was going home to vote for it, which he did. Had his picture snapped as he was entering the election booth for this purpose, which was printed in most of the metropolitan papers. The amendment was beaten by more than 50,000. This caused the President's mind to go on center. Which way it will slip before the November election no one can tell. [Applause on the Republican side.] For the present he is contenting himself by declaring this question should be left to the States to determine, like until very recently he declared that child labor should be determined.

BRYAN.

One of the most remarkable changes of mind made by the President was with reference to William Jennings Bryan. Before the election he was in favor of knocking him and all of his theories and vagaries, including his initiative and referendum, into a "cocked hat." After the election he took him into his official household and set him for a time at the head of the table and put in vogue many of his teachings that he had formerly condemned. Bryan, because of the change of mind of the President on the subject of preparedness and his foreign policies, was daily witnessing the feathers being plucked from his dove of peace, and in order to save his cherished bird from absolute annihilation he departed from the house of Wilson. Since his departure his theories of government remain with the President only as a memory.

CIVIL SERVICE.

Before his election the President expatiated much on the necessity of civil-service reform, and promised that with his election merit should count and should be recognized in the advancement of those holding public place. But when he became President all of his beautiful theories with reference to civil service were forgotten. He changed his mind concerning the fitness of men for appointment and the necessity of their meeting the requirements of civil-service examination, as is evidenced by the fact that he has made more Executive orders appointing men to office, who otherwise would have had to pass the civil-service examination, than any man that has ever been President of the United States before him.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

At one time he was bitterly opposed to the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people, but when it became evident to him that this reform was popular throughout the country he suddenly changed his mind and became one of its warmest advocates.

INSIDIOUS LOBBY.

During the campaign of 1912 Mr. Wilson, the candidate, had much to say about the iniquities of the insidious lobbyist, declaring that Congressmen must be protected from their baleful influence; that they should be free to act, without either threat or cajolement or other influence. But upon this, too, has he changed his mind and has himself become the greatest lobbyist with which Congressmen have to contend. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Not content with his constitutional prerogative to initiate and suggest legislation through official messages and to defeat legislation by veto when it does not suit him, he directs like a monarch from the throne what legislation must and what shall not be considered by the Congress. To accomplish his purpose he is not sparing with the party lash, nor does he mince words as to what will be the fate of those who do not yield to his demands. Woe unto the recalcitrant Congressman of his political faith who refuses to do his bidding; his lot, indeed, is a hard one. Like Rob Roy, the robber, who insisted that he should do all the robbing, our President insists that he should have a monopoly on all lobbying. [Applause on the Republican side.]

CENTRAL BANKS.

Before his election President Wilson was in strict accord with his party leaders and the Baltimore platform in its condemnation of the so-called Vreeland-Aldrich banking bill. He opposed the establishment of a central bank. Opposed the bank ownership of stock in banking institutions and also opposed liquid assets. These things were undemocratic and had been since the days of Jackson. After the election, however, he changed his mind and became the champion of the present reserve-bank law, which contains every one of these features that were formerly so objectionable to him. In fact they furnish the nucleus of strength for whatever of virtue there is in this measure, and the central bank so long despised by Wilson and his party became the keystone to the arch.

CONCLUSION.

I have mentioned but a few of the many changes of front taken by the President. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Many more as striking as the ones named might be enumerated. These, however, should be sufficient to convince the ordinary man of the absolute instability and unreliability of our President with reference to any important matter of state. They certainly demonstrate that there has been a mighty change come over the President since he was an idealist at Princeton University; that the Woodrow Wilson of Whig Hall and the Woodrow Wilson of the White House are two quite different individuals. Then he was living among and was possessed by his ideals. He had not been touched by the poison of sordid ambition or maddened by the thirst for power. High place, and the desire for continuance in high place, have completely transformed him. Long since has he ceased to be an idealist and has become an opportunist pure and simple. He can declare, as he has been declaring in almost every speech he makes, that he cares nothing for what may be in store for him or what happens to him as a result of the November election, and that it is only the judgment of the future with which he is concerned, but his actions speak louder than his words, and the future will judge him by his acts rather than by his declarations. That judgment will be, like the judgment pronounced by Jacob upon Reuben, "Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel." [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLACKMON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. BLACKMON. I rise to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, a Member of this body, Mr. RODENBERG, of Illinois, made a statement in the House on yesterday, which appears in to-day's Record, in which he says that the southern Members of this House are "an abomination in the sight of the Lord." [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Louder!

Mr. BLACKMON. Well, I am going to speak loud enough for every honest man in this House to realize that that statement is absolutely untrue, and is, in my judgment, a statement that no man should make on the floor of this House.

I know a number of gentlemen on the Republican side, and there is not one of them who, in my judgment, is "an abomination in the sight of the Lord." [Laughter.] If that be not true, if there are Republican Members of this House who are "an abomination in the sight of the Lord," they ought not to be here. If there is a Democrat here who is "an abomination in the sight of the Lord," he ought not to be here. I leave that to the gentleman on the Republican side of the House, an ex-Speaker of this body, and I say that he does not indorse such a statement as that.

Mr. CANNON. As what?

Mr. BLACKMON. That the Members from the South collectively are "an abomination in the sight of the Lord."

Mr. CANNON. I think very highly of all of them whom I know, I believe without exception, as individuals; but I think that the Lord, if He took any notice about governing, would condemn the policies of the Democratic Party.

Mr. BLACKMON. The Lord in His wisdom will condemn him, and the respectable Christian people of the district of the gentleman who made that statement will also condemn him.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am sure the gentleman wants to be fair. I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] make the statement that he is referring to, and I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] to say that he regarded the gentlemen upon the other side very highly, but that politically their actions were an abomination in the sight of the Lord.

Mr. BLACKMON. I will ask the Clerk to read the paragraph to which I refer, from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

I have nothing whatever to say against these gentlemen of the South, because I am proud to be able to say that among them I number some of my warmest personal friends. Individually they are agreeable, affable, and courteous gentlemen, but collectively, as a political aggregation, they are an abomination in the sight of the Lord. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLACKMON. The applause on the Republican side, my friends, refers to the Almighty.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield just a minute?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. While they were talking about President Wilson changing his mind, I remembered that God Almighty changed His mind. He looked upon man once and was pleased with him, and said he was good. He looked upon him again, and was so displeased with him that He even repented that He had made him. I think He saw a Republican when He repented.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it not possible that He looked upon the gentleman from Texas? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SLOAN. If the gentleman will yield right there, I wish to suggest that when the Lord changed His mind it was an exception, but in the case of the gentleman in question it is a profession.

Mr. BLACKMON. Of course, I am not a philosopher, but I will tell you what I think about it. No man who has been in this House with me during the six years I have been here has ever heard me say an unkind word against a Republican, whether he came from the North or the East, or any other section of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is the truth, gentlemen. I have friends on the Republican side of this House for whom I have the greatest respect. They are good, true, honest, straightforward men, and I think we have reached the time when the man on that side of the House who undertakes to revive the sectional feeling that existed at one time has a head about the size of an acorn—not big enough to make a good meal for a squirrel. [Laughter.] On both sides of this House we are here to legislate. Our politics are different, but there ought not to be abuse of individuals, for the membership of this House does not deserve it. [Applause.] I could not let the statement of the gentleman from Illinois go by without uttering my protest against it. I say to you gentlemen here to-day that the Republican Members of this House, individually and collectively, are not "an abomination in the sight of the Lord," and no man ought to make such a statement about the Members on this side. I think that individually and collectively we ought to tone down these sectional orators who retard and are detrimental to substantial legislation for the people of the country. I do not object to what the gentleman said about the Democratic Party. I am informed that he made that same speech out in his district at one time, when another man beat him to a frazzle. It might happen again; and if so, I do not think there will be any great weeping, wailing, or gnashing of teeth among the Christian people of his district, and certainly not, so far as Congress is concerned. So I say that Republicans and Democrats alike ought to frown down any attempt to revive sectional feeling. I know that the Representatives from the South, as a rule, are good men. I know that the Representatives from the North, the East, and the West, as a rule, are good men. We differ in politics, but that is all. I simply wanted to make the statement to the House that I condemn the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that the Members from the South collectively and as a party are "an abomination in the sight of the Lord." I believe we all have a fair chance with Him if we do right. I sincerely trust that the Members from the North, the South, the East, and the West, will so conduct themselves in Congress that none of us will be "an abomination in the sight of the Lord," not even the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]. [Applause on both sides of the House.]

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 184. Joint resolution providing for one year's extension of time to make installment payments for the land of the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, Nebr.;

H. R. 2534. An act to adjudicate the claims of certain settlers in Sherman County, Oreg.;

H. R. 14483. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Williston, N. Dak.;

H. R. 15635. An act for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co.;

H. R. 15322. An act granting the consent of Congress to Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North;

H. R. 10554. An act to extend the time of the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation for the commencement and completion of its bridge across the Hudson River, in the State of New York;

H. R. 10931. An act for the relief of Drs. Blair and Blake, Dr. W. J. Maxwell, Dr. R. C. Evans, and J. B. Blalock;

H. R. 14534. An act permitting the Missouri River Transportation Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River in the State of Montana;

H. R. 11749. An act for the relief of the administrator of the estate of John M. Waples;

H. R. 16097. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Mo., authorized by an act approved June 17, 1914.

H. R. 3896. An act for the relief of John H. Janssen;

H. R. 15318. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Hendrum, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Elm River, Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States;

H. R. 13785. An act for the relief of Sarah S. Plank;

H. R. 14823. An act to authorize the Savage Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Yellowstone River in the State of Montana;

H. R. 10116. An act for the relief of certain settlers under reclamation projects;

H. R. 8318. An act for the relief of De Barbieri & Co., of Valparaiso, Chile;

H. R. 5864. An act for the relief of Thomas P. Sorkilmo;

H. R. 12208. An act adding certain lands to the Teton National Forest, Wyo.;

H. R. 10305. An act to grant certain lands to the State of Oregon as a public park, for the benefit and enjoyment of the people;

H. R. 2209. An act for the relief of W. W. Blood; and

H. R. 486. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the old post-office building and site thereof at York, Pa.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the subject of naval and military expenditures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject of naval and military expenditures. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the Philippine bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the Philippine bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, after the reading of the Journal and the clearing of business from the Speaker's table, and after all other regular proceedings of the House, I may have 10 minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on Monday next, not to interfere with business on the Speaker's table or any other business.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that mean after the Unanimous Consent and Suspension Calendar is completed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the consent is granted, not to interfere with any business of the House.

Mr. NOLAN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, August 7, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting detailed information in the War Department concerning the contract with the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co. (Ltd.), of Shanghai, China, for the construction of the single screw steel collier No. 1, for the use of the United States Army (H. Doc. No. 1320), was taken from the Speakers' table, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRITT: A bill (H. R. 17333) for the relief of the heirs of Capt. W. D. Miller; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17334) for the relief of the estate of Harry Johnson; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 17335) granting an increase of pension to Gardner W. White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLINE: A bill (H. R. 17336) granting a pension to Charles Hathaway; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 17337) granting a pension to Mary Ettie Gray; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of Bernette Bachelier, of Whitinsville, Mass., favoring the Susan B. Anthony amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRAY of Indiana: Petition of H. C. Simcoke and other citizens of Richmond, Ind., protesting against the passage of House bills 491 and 6468; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

Monday, August 7, 1916.

(Legislative day of Saturday, August 5, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Beckham	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Gronna	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Brandegge	Hardwick	Overman	Smoot
Bryan	Husting	Peterson	Sterling
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Taggart
Chilton	Jones	Ransdell	Thompson
Clapp	Kenyon	Reed	Vardaman
Colt	Kern	Robinson	Williams
Culberson	Lane	Sheppard	Works
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Sherman

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] on public business. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is unavoidably absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. THOMAS answered to his name when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. JAMES, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Mr. WEEKS, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that further proceedings under the call be vacated.

The motion was agreed to.

CHILD LABOR.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want at the outset to say that I favor just and humane child-labor laws by the States. My own State has a child-labor law. It is not what I would have it to be and it is not what it will be if the State is left alone. Some years ago we passed an act in relation to child labor, and gradually we have been making a stronger and stronger act every year. I have no doubt when the next legislature meets it will enact as good a child-labor law as there is now in any State if we are left alone.

I do not favor the pending bill. I think it is an unjust interference with the domestic affairs of the States. I find no warrant in the Constitution for it, and there is in the Constitution an utter want of power conferred on Congress to enact such legislation. I therefore think the bill unconstitutional.

There is a division of sentiment in my State in regard to this bill, but no allegiance to my party or to its platform would compel me to support it. If every man, woman, and child in my State should ask me to support this bill, I could not do so, Mr. President, for I would then be violating the solemn oath which I took at that desk to support the Constitution of the United States.

Several Senators have spoken deprecatingly of North Carolina. Mr. President, I am going to put some statistics into the RECORD which are startling. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] spoke about moral standards. I undertake to state here to-day that with regard to child labor North Carolina has as high moral standards as has any other State in the Union. Our children are as well cared for, and perhaps better cared for, than those in any other State in the Union. Several years ago I invited and urged the Senate of the United States, when my people were being slandered, to send a committee to that State and let them investigate conditions there. We have asked the Commerce Committee to send a committee to North Carolina to see what is being done in that State in reference to our child labor.

Mr. President, would you believe it when I tell you that between the ages of 14 and 16 years there are fewer children in North Carolina in the jails, in the prison houses, and in the workhouses than there are in any other one of 45 of the great States of the Union. I ask, Mr. President, to print as an appendix to my remarks certain statistics I have here from the Census Department. I am proud to put them into the RECORD, so far as North Carolina is concerned, but I am ashamed to put them in the RECORD in regard to forty-odd other States of the Union, and especially as to this model city—the District of Columbia.

In 1898 we passed what was called the model child-labor law for the District of Columbia. In 1914 we passed a law providing that no person should work more than eight hours a day in this city. Not longer ago than last week, a Senator passing along the street close to a drug store here, saw a beautiful woman crying bitterly. He asked her what was the matter. She said "I have been selling soda water in that drug store, getting $10 a week to support my widowed mother; but an inspector has come around and turned me out. What am I to do? Where am I to go? Shall I starve?" In the years to come, if crime should overtake her, she could say, I presume, with the noted criminal, "My country's laws have made me what I am."

Listen, Senators, to these startling figures, which I have had prepared by the Census Department, showing the number of children under 15 years of age committed to prisons, jails, workhouses, and reformatories. How many do you suppose, giving the numbers per hundred thousand, of the children from 10 to 14 years of age are in these institutions in the District of Columbia? There are 385 in this model city, while in North Carolina there are but 15.

Then, I have selected one State from each of the groups of States. Vermont, in the New England States, has 102 children in such institutions; Massachusetts has 279; while North Carolina has only 15; and New York has 249.

Now, let us come to the Eastern, the Northern, and the Central States. Indiana has 129 while North Carolina has but 15. Among the West North Central States, in Missouri the number was 122 per 100,000. In North Carolina, in the South Atlantic group of States, the number, I repeat, was 15.4 per 100,000. In Kentucky, in the East South Central group of States, the number was 94.9 per 100,000. So it goes, Mr. President, showing that North Carolina had far fewer children in workhouses and prison houses than had any of 45 of the great States of the Union.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, what was the number in Arkansas?

Mr. OVERMAN. In Arkansas the number was 45 per 100,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator mean 45 out of a hundred thousand in a year?

Mr. OVERMAN. The figures refer to children under 15 years of age committed to prisons, jails, workhouses, or reformatories in 1910, according to the Tenth Census, number per 100,000 children 10 to 14 years of age. I want to say that I had a compilation made concerning children committed to institutions in the District of Columbia following the passage of the child-labor act for the District of Columbia and also a similar compilation made of conditions prior to the passage of that act. Prior to the passage of the act the number was 348 per 100,000, while following the passage of that act the number increased to 389.5.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the merits of this matter; but since North Carolina has been alluded to several times upon this floor I desire to say that, so far as that State is concerned, it makes a splendid showing, I think—better than any other State. While many other States are increasing in illiteracy, the old North State is decreasing, and also, Mr. President, in school attendance of persons of school age North Carolina, with 481,000, stands at the head of the South Atlantic States, surpassing every other Southern State but Texas, and ranks eleventh in the whole United States, notwithstanding her large colored population—about one-third—and her rank of sixteenth in population.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. To what does the Senator from North Carolina attribute the low rate of children in the jails, workhouses, and reformatories in North Carolina? He has just said North Carolina had a very stringent child-labor law.

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; I did not say we had a stringent law. I think we have not. I wish we had. I said that it was not what I should like it to be.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is what I can not understand. The Senator says the law is not as stringent as it should be, and yet he produces statistics to show apparently that where the law is stringent the most lamentable results have followed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have cited statistics showing the facts. I do not know whether child-labor laws have had anything to do with the conditions or not; I do not say they have; but I started out to say that certain newspapers and magazines had been taking North Carolina for their text; and yet, according to the statistics, the condition of children in that State is better than in 45 other States; and I think the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] will admit that the reports before the committee show that the children of North Carolina are well taken care of.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question for information?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. What penal and reformatory institutions do the statutes of North Carolina provide for children within the ages contemplated by the figures which he has presented?

Mr. OVERMAN. We have reformatories; we have prisons and jails; but we rarely ever send children under 15 to jail. We send them to workhouses or to other houses of correction.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do the figures which the Senator has compiled comprehend all of the children who are confined in any sort of penal institution or poorhouse in the State of North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. In North Carolina, yes, sir; just as they do in other States, applying generally to reformatories, jails, and prison houses. As to North Carolina, I had the Director of the Census have a statistician make up the report from the census returns.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator know how many reformatory or penal institutions for children there are in North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. We have one State reformatory.

Mr. ROBINSON. When was that established, or about when?

Mr. OVERMAN. It was established about 10 or 15 years ago.

Mr. ROBINSON. For what year are the figures the Senator is giving?

Mr. OVERMAN. For 1910.

Now, Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Arkansas, the Senator from Idaho, and also my friend, the distinguished Senator from Iowa, what are we going to do with these children if this proposed law goes into effect? What is going to become of them? Here, for instance, is an orphan boy who is now getting, say, $10 a week and supporting himself. If you turn him out and deprive him of the opportunity of working, what are you going to do with him? Where will he go? Here is a dependent mother with two children, who are supporting her, making bread and meat for her and them—what are you going to do with them? At the present time the children who are working have the advantages of Sunday schools and of other schools; they have churches, and are you going to drive all of them back to the farm? Many of them have no farm to which to go. Are you going to make them tenants? They have no stock with which to begin work on the farm.

Now, I desire to suggest to the Senator that one way out of it is a pension system. According to the high moral standards to which we want conditions to conform—and I know every Senator wants the highest possible standards to prevail for the benefit of the children—if the present system is absolutely destroyed the alternative is a pension system, under which the children and the dependent widowed mothers shall be pensioned.

I have a suggestion to make, and I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa what he thinks about it. Children who are now 14 years of age and who are working in the mills in two years will become 16 years old. Then they may work, no matter what law might be passed; then they would not be turned off on the world. Therefore I want to introduce an amendment to this bill providing that the act shall not take effect until two years after it has been approved, so that children can go on supporting their mothers and supporting themselves until they arrive at the proper age, and so that they will not be turned loose without anyone knowing what is to become of them. Do not send them to prison houses and to workhouses and to jails, but give them time. We gave the barrooms in the cities two years in which to close; we have given the bankers two years in which to adjust their affairs; we have given the railroads two years in which to rearrange their business, and why not give those who are to be affected by the pending bill two years in which to work the matter out? I ask the Senator if he would object to that?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, answering the question of the Senator from North Carolina, I beg to suggest that, as I understood, the objection of those who appeared before our committee in behalf of the factories in North Carolina, it was that the provision in the bill which limited the children under 16 years of age to eight hours' work per day was the provision that would interfere with these industries. They all claimed that the prohibition against employing children under 14 years of age in the factories would bring about little, if any, change. They did not want to employ children under 14 years of age; but they said that children under 16 years of age ought to be permitted to work more than eight hours a day, because their factories—and I am speaking especially of the cotton factories—were so adjusted that, if the spinning room could be operated only eight hours a day, the spinning room being the place in which children are employed, it would affect the carding room and the weaving room, so that these two parts of the factory would also be compelled to work but eight hours per day. With that statement, I say that I am entirely willing, so far as I am individually concerned—and I speak for no one else—that time shall be granted in which these factories can so equip their spinning rooms as to be able to do in eight hours what is required by the other ends of the factory, namely, the carding room and the weaving room. I do not know how long, with the exercise of reasonable diligence, it will require to so adjust these factories that they may be able to continue without serious loss. This bill gives one year, and I thought that was enough. I can hardly conceive that the factories can not so rearrange their affairs in this respect within a year as to accomplish the purposes they have in view. If the Senator from North Carolina can show me that it will require more than one year to do what I have suggested, I shall not object to a reasonable extension of the time; but I speak for no one but myself.

Mr. OVERMAN. I expect to take up that matter when I offer the amendment, and show the necessity of it, which I think I can show to the Senator from Iowa. I was alluding to it here from the humanitarian standpoint.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I have been advised by some manufacturers that while ordinarily they could purchase and put in the machinery in 12 months, there is now quite a large demand upon the manufacturers of the machinery, and with this increased demand it would probably be impossible in less than two years to procure the machinery and make the additions to their plants required to increase the spinning part of their plants so as to limit the work to eight hours and yet complete a sufficient amount of work to supply the balance of their factories, and that it is the difficulty about obtaining the machinery that is one of the elements that makes it important for them to have two years.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not expect to take up much time with the argument as to constitutionality. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] says there are only nine Senators opposed to this bill. Like the goat in the animal convention, they have all voted; so I can not hope to change anybody's opinion. But I do want to say this, in reply to the Senator from Arkansas:

In the splendid argument he made, the great speech he made upon this subject, he says that the commerce clause of the Constitution is plenary, and that is so. Nobody denies that. The court has said so, but there are exceptions, and I think there are more exceptions than he stated. The court, in the very opinion he read, said, "You can not, under the guise of the commerce clause of the Constitution, legislate on something which is really going outside of commerce," as you are doing in this case, and going into manufacturing and production.

The Senator said that the other limitation was the fifth amendment of the Constitution. I admit that, but he said there is nothing in the tenth amendment to limit it.

Now, Mr. President, I want to tell the Senator a little piece of history that he has forgotten. It will be remembered that North Carolina did not go into the Union when it was first formed. When George Washington was elected she took no part in that election. She was as free and independent as any country in the world. She declined to go in. George Washington was President, and North Carolina was out of the Union. But John Hancock and other distinguished men who framed the Constitution were anxious that North Carolina should come in, and he and others wrote letters down there asking them to come in. Our people were jealous of their rights. They said, "Under this commerce clause of the Constitution we do not know what the Federal Government will do; there must be some limitation on it"; and she did not go into the Union at first. I want to say in passing that she was the last to go out of the Union, and did not go out until she was forced out. She did not go in until the last, except Rhode Island. In 1789 she adopted the Constitution, but not until the tenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted; and it was understood then to be a guaranty that the Federal Government should not in any way interfere with the domestic concerns of the States. They said it would not; they wrote down there time and again that it would not interfere with their domestic concerns, and North Carolina said, "Write it in the bond and we will go in, and not until you do write it in the bond will we go in."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, it is also a fact, is it not, that Thomas Jefferson was the author of the greater part of the first 10 amendments, including the one to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. And that he insisted on their adoption for the very reason, among others, described by the Senator?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, of course, Hancock—I have seen his letters—Jefferson, and others wrote that the people should have their rights reserved, and it should be guaranteed in the Constitution that they should control their own local and domestic concerns. Mr. President, upon this fact of history Jefferson Davis, in his History of the War between the States, takes the State of North Carolina, her act and the history of those times, as the basis for the great argument he made for the right of secession. But that was shot to pieces and went down forever at Appomattox. The Constitution is still here, however, and the tenth amendment to the Constitution, which guarantees to the people the right of home rule and local self-government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina suggest that the Constitution should be interpreted according to the letters that were written into North Carolina before she adopted or ratified the Constitution?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. If he does, I shall be glad if he will produce the letters so that we can see how much they differ from the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether I can produce the letters or not. I know that North Carolina stayed out of the Union at first, and did not go in for a year. I know why she stayed out. I know why, because the debates show it in the journals—that the guarantee had not been made in the Constitution that she should have the right of local self-government.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will permit me, contemporaneous history is always useful in construing the real meaning of a constitutional provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite true; but if the Supreme Court of the United States has considered contemporaneous history and has put a certain construction upon the Constitution, as I view it the subject has already passed away from our consideration.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course if they have not done so, then there is nothing in the Senator's position.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator that we are bound by the Supreme Court, and I want to ask the Senator now—I know he is a candid Senator, and open and free and frank—has the Supreme Court ever gone as far as this bill proposes to go?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Supreme Court has gone further than this bill proposes to go; but I assume what the Senator desires to ask me is whether the Supreme Court has ever decided a case exactly like this one, and I answer that it has not; that hitherto there has been no legislation exactly parallel to the measure now under consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I know that the Supreme Court has upheld as constitutional laws passed by Congress affecting the health of people who live in States other than that from which the article of commerce was shipped and laws designed to protect the morals of the community and to protect it from false pretenses. I know it has done that; but I have never known a case where the Supreme Court steps out from the article going into commerce that affects somebody else outside of the State, steps over and away from commerce, steps into a cotton mill, and undertakes to control an innocent subject of commerce that is injurious to no man anywhere in the world.

Can anybody cite me a case where that has ever been done? I challenge any Senator to show me where any act has been upheld by the Supreme Court forbidding the entrance into interstate commerce of innocent articles, articles that affect nobody injuriously, that affect the health of no community, that injure no man, that deceive nobody by reason of misbranding—I defy any Senator to show me where the Supreme Court has ever held any law that has done that to be constitutional.

Mr. President, for some 10 years bills of this character, in one shape or another, have been pending in the Senate or the House of Representatives with no chance of being considered, for the reason that few in either House of Congress believed there was any authority in the Constitution for such legislation. But now, by propaganda, petitions, literature, and lobbying, and because of the noble sentiments which these bills reflect, there seems to have come a great change of sentiment in these two bodies.

For a hundred years or more it was almost universally considered that no legislation could be enacted which was not authorized by the Constitution. Now in this day and hour with many it seems to be the theory that anything not forbidden by the Constitution can be enacted. That clause of the Constitution which says all power not granted by the Constitution is reserved to the people is regarded lightly and is void of meaning. A distinguished man who loves the fundamental principles, so sacredly guarded in the past, once declared that there was nothing left of the Constitution but the commerce clause.

If this legislation is constitutional, Mr. President, there will be nothing left of the rights of the States, but there will be an absolute absorption of the police powers of the 48 sovereign Commonwealths, and there will be no barrier in the way of centralization of all power in Washington, to which goal we are now rapidly drifting.

In the Fifty-ninth Congress this question was up for consideration—it was treated as a joke—when a resolution was passed by the House of Representatives referring to the Judiciary Committee the question of the constitutionality of such a measure. The chairman of that great committee is dead, and I regretted that my friend, the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], forgetful of that ancient saying, "Of the dead say no evil," should have denounced Judge Jenkins in such unmeasured terms. Whatever, Mr. President, you may say of him, no one, I think, will deny that he was a great lawyer. He was only one of 18 lawyers who agreed with him, some of whom are now the most prominent lawyers in the House of Representatives, and others who have left that body have a national reputation as lawyers of great ability. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER and JOHN A. STERLING are both Members of the House at this time; ALVA ALEXANDER, CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD, JOSEPH N. GILLET, and other Republicans; JUDGE DE ARMOND, D. H. SMITH, JUDGE HENRY D. CLAYTON, ROBERT L. HENRY, JOHN F. LITTLE, and W. G. BRANTLEY, Democrats. These are some of the great lawyers who composed that great committee.

After a review of all the authorities and a careful study of the question, on February 6, 1907, a unanimous report was made to the House, which, among other things, said:

In the opinion of your committee, there is no question as to the entire want of power on the part of Congress to exercise jurisdiction and authority over the subject of woman and child labor. In fact, it is not a debatable question. It would be a reflection upon the intelligence of Congress to so legislate. It would be casting an unwelcome burden upon the Supreme Court to so legislate. (See Rept. No. 7304, 59th Cong., 2d sess.)

At that time I was a Member of the Senate, and the question was debated here by Senators SPOONER, KNOX, and others, who took the same position as the House committee, and, with the exception of Senator BEVERIDGE, there was not a Senator on this floor who did not think this measure was unconstitutional. So many of the Senators had this opinion that it was hardly given the proper consideration. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate was of the same opinion.

Now, Mr. President, I have heard Senators say since this measure came up for consideration that they had serious doubts about the constitutionality of it, but they would vote for it and put it up to the Supreme Court. I was simply shocked at such expressions.

I have been taught to believe in the doctrine, and this was the doctrine of the fathers and has been the doctrine taught by all the text-writers and almost universally conceded until these later days, that when one held any doubt about the constitutionality of a measure all doubt should be solved in favor of the Constitution.

I call your attention, Senators, to what one of the greatest lawyers and greatest text-writers who ever lived in this country said upon this question, a man who was greatly honored by the people and much respected by the lawyers. I quote from Judge COOLEY, in his "Principles of Constitutional Law," second edition, page 150:

Legislators have their authority measured by the Constitution; they are chosen to do what it permits, and nothing more, and they take solemn oath to obey and support it. When they disregard its provisions, they usurp authority, abuse their trust, and violate the promise they have confirmed by an oath. To pass an act when they are in doubt whether it does not violate the Constitution, is to treat as of no force the most imperative obligations any person can assume. A business agent who would deal in that manner with his principal's business would be treated as untrustworthy; a witness in court who would treat his oath thus lightly, and affirm things concerning which he was in doubt, would be held a criminal. Indeed, it is because the legislature has applied the judgment of its members to the question of its authority to pass the proposed law, and has only passed it after being satisfied of the authority, that the judiciary waive their own doubts, and give it their support.

Mr. President, let us deal frankly with each other. This bill is not for the purpose of regulating commerce, but its main purpose—its ultimate purpose—is, under the guise of regulating commerce, to regulate production in the manufactories and mills in the country. Its purpose is to regulate the ages and the hours of labor at which children shall work in the mines and manufacturing plants in the States. It is indirectly to do what you can not do directly. It is to put a State under duress and compel it to do that which some States have done in order, as has been stated in this debate, to have uniformity.

It is conceded that Congress has no power to regulate the hours of labor and the ages at which children shall work in a State in any capacity or occupation. My friend, the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], in his very able speech upon this bill, the great and honest lawyer that he is, admitted this to be so, as will be seen in the following colloquy which took place between us at that time:

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has Congress a right to prescribe directly the hours of labor or the age at which a child shall work?

Mr. KENYON. I think it has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. In the Senator's opinion as a lawyer, it has not?

Mr. KENYON. It has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think everybody will agree with the Senator that that is true. Now, I come to the question I was going to ask. Can Congress do indirectly that which it can not do directly?

Mr. KENYON. We have done it. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has instanced the phosphy law and I have instanced the oleomargarine act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Another principle came into play in those instances. Action was taken by Congress in those cases because of the deleterious effect of the article itself. It is now proposed to prescribe that cotton goods, under certain circumstances, shall not enter into interstate commerce. Nobody contends that they are injurious or that their effect is immoral. It is upon those grounds that Congress has always held that certain goods should not be shipped in interstate commerce.

Mr. KENYON. I will answer the Senator in this way: I have no hesitancy in saying, of course, that if Congress should pass an act that children should not work more than a certain number of hours in North Carolina upon articles to be shipped in interstate commerce, Congress would have gone beyond its power. But we do not say that. Cotton or anything else can be manufactured in the mills of North Carolina employing children 4 years old, if they can work at that age. The proposed legislation which I am discussing does not stop that. The products of such factories in North Carolina can be sold in North Carolina. The proposed legislation does not stop children working, but simply says that if they are employed under a certain age the instrumentalities of commerce shall be withdrawn from those goods.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then is not the purpose of this bill to do that which Congress can not do?

Mr. KENYON. No; the purpose of this bill is to do just what Congress can do, and that is to stamp out child labor.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. KENYON. To stamp out child labor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is not the purpose of the bill to regulate the hours of labor and the ages of employees?

Mr. KENYON. No; it is not. If manufacturers want to go on employing children, they can do so; the proposed legislation does not stop them.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator's point; but is not the real purpose of the bill to provide that mill employees shall not work a greater number of hours than the hours prescribed in the bill and shall not employ operatives under the age specified?

Mr. KENYON. I understand that even under such a bill as has been enacted in Massachusetts the mill owners can have children of the age not prohibited work eight hours and then others work another eight hours, and carry on business in that way.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator frankly if it is not the purpose of this bill to have Congress do indirectly that which it can not do directly?

Mr. KENYON. Well, I do not say Congress can not do it directly. If it is in the power of Congress to pass an act under the commerce clause, then it does not make any difference what effect that act may have upon the manufacturing interests of any State or the agricultural interests of any State, or anything else, so long as it does not bump up against the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

The learned Senator says he wants uniformity in child-labor laws.

Mr. President, I doubt whether you ought to have uniform laws in regard to this matter. I have no doubt the Senator from Iowa has thought about it. Climatic conditions ought to have something to do with it. A child in the South matures much earlier than a child in Maine or a child in Minnesota or a child in the Senator's State. So you see if in these domestic affairs Congress begins to legislate it is going to create trouble, because what will do for one State will not do for another State. What will do in Wisconsin will not do in North Carolina, and what will do in North Carolina will not do in Wisconsin. Therefore I think in these matters of local concern this attempt to have uniformity will create trouble, bitterness, and jealousy.

Forty-six States now have these beneficial laws, as my own State has, but some are more drastic, some are more beneficial than others; but gradually, step by step, the States are improving their child-labor laws.

Mr. President, there are many wholesome laws in some of the States, which, in order to have uniformity, and for the good of the country, should be adopted by all of the States. However, there are many laws which are necessary, and their enactment would be wise and wholesome for one section of the country, which would not be for another section, and to that section would prove injurious and burdensome.

I should like to see uniformity in divorce laws and insurance laws, but uniformity can be obtained without congressional action, and without the usurpation of the reserve powers of the States. A few years ago there was a wide difference in the negotiable-instrument laws of the States, and the business of the country was suffering on account of it. There was a demand for uniformity, and the commercial interests, the public sentiment of the country, forced uniformity, and they corrected this evil, so that now a large majority of the States have the same negotiable-instrument law, and congressional action was neither sought nor demanded; was not even thought of. The evil remedied itself, as many other evils affecting and acting to the detriment of all the people will do in time.

The laws of Congress must affect and bear upon all the people alike, and the usurpation by Congress of the rights to legislate upon these matters of domestic concern would work a great wrong and hardship upon some and cause jealousy and bitterness, which might prove disastrous. Time and mutual intercourse and commercial dealing among the people of the States will in time bring uniformity wherever there should be uniformity.

Mr. President, Congress has no power to interfere with the domestic affairs or the police powers of the States. Congress has no right to employ its legislation for any such purpose.

In the words of that great lawyer and able judge, Abel P. Upshur:

Congress has no right to employ for one purpose means ostensibly provided for another; to do so would be a positive fraud and a manifest usurpation; for if the purpose be lawful it may be accomplished by its own appropriate means, and if it is unlawful it should not be accomplished at all. Without this check it is obvious that Congress may by indirection accomplish almost any forbidden object. (Upshur on the Federal Government.)

The evils for which the bill intends to prohibit in no way affect commerce, but its purpose is to prohibit evils that are peculiarly of domestic concern, and these evils are anterior to the time when jurisdiction of Congress attaches. That is, when the article produced enters into commerce when it starts on its journey to another State.

Can Congress pass a law forbidding interstate commerce in cotton goods produced by adult labor who worked more than eight hours a day in a mill? I take it that no one will even pretend that we can. Then, Mr. President, to prohibit cotton goods from entering into interstate commerce because it was produced by children at the age of 14 years, or who worked 10 hours a day, shows that the purpose of this bill is to do exactly that which the distinguished Senator says can not be done, and which every lawyer will concede to be true. It is not the cotton goods you are after. You are after the cotton goods, and in my judgment will violate the Constitution in order, as you contend, to protect the children in the mills.

There is probably, Mr. President, no limit to the power of Congress to deal with commerce as soon as it begins its transit or journey and until it ends and to deal with it while in transit between the States; also it has full power to prescribe all the rules, regulations, and conditions under which it is governed. But as Congress has the exclusive power over interstate commerce, so the State has the exclusive power to control its own domestic and internal affairs, and it should be permitted to do so without question. Without the consent of the State the Congress has not only no business but no power to interfere. And for any fancied act of omission or commission, I must say it is going very far for one citizen of another State or one high in authority in this Government to condemn and threaten the extinction of her rights as a State.

I am free to admit, Mr. President, that in some matters affecting the interstate commerce where citizens or corporations of one State are so conducting their business as to work an injury to citizens of other States, and where the other States, even under their reserved power, are powerless to protect themselves against the wrong done them on account of the power which has been surrendered to the Government, it is necessary for Congress to interfere and legislate for the purpose of controlling and regulating in these matters—such as the rate bill, the pure-food bill, the food-inspection law, dangerous matches, diseased cattle, oleomargarine, white slave, lottery, and other bills of like character, all of which receive my hearty indorsement—and in my opinion no legislation for a century has done more for the good of all the people.

But when it is proposed to regulate and control these matters which can be controlled whether the State will or will not, as regards articles of commerce which in themselves can possibly work no injury upon citizens of other States, or the ultimate consumer, I deny the power of the General Government to interfere in any respect to the point where it begins its transit.

Though Congress and the scope of Congress over its regulations, under these laws, have been extended so as to include manufacture, the mere fact that goods are manufactured in the State for export to another, this fact in itself does not constitute in them interstate commerce within the meaning of the Constitution. This is so held by the Supreme Court of the United States in the celebrated case of Coe v. Erroll (116 U. S., 517).

In that case certain logs cut at a place in New Hampshire had been hauled to the town of Erroll, on the Androscoggin River, in that State, for the purpose of transportation beyond the limits of the State to Lewiston, Me., and were held at Erroll for a convenient time for shipment, and taxes were assessed on these logs for city and county and State purposes and the question was whether these logs were subject to taxation like other property in New Hampshire, as they were to be exported into another State, and Justice Bradley delivering the opinion of the court, says:

Does the owner's state of mind in relation to the goods—that is, his intent to export them and his partial preparation to do so—exempt them from taxation? This is the precise question for solution.

There must be a point of time when they cease to be governed exclusively by the domestic law and begin to be protected by the national law of commercial regulation, and that moment seems to us to be a legitimate one for this purpose in which they commence their final movement for transportation from the State of their origin to that of their destination. When the products of the farm or the forests are collected and brought in from the surrounding country to a town or station serving as an entrepôt for that particular region, whether on a river or a line of railroad, such products are not yet exports, nor are they in process of exportation, nor is exportation begun until they are committed to the common carrier for transportation out of the State to the State of their destination or have started on their ultimate destination to that State.

Until then it is reasonable to regard this as not only within the State of their origin, but as a part of the general mass of property of that State, subject to its jurisdiction and liable to taxation. Then if not taxed by reason of their being intended for exportation, but taxed without any discrimination in the usual way and manner in which such property is taxed in the State, * * * the point of time when State jurisdiction over the commodity of commerce begins and ends is not an easy matter to designate or define, yet it is highly important both to the shipper and to the State that it should be clearly defined so as to avoid all ambiguity or question. But no definite rule has been adopted with regard to the point of time at which the taxing power of the State ceases as to goods exported to a foreign country or to another State. What we have already said, however, in relation to the products of a State intended for exportation to another State will indicate the view which seems to us to be the sound one on that subject, namely, that such goods do not seem to be part of the general mass of property subject as such to its jurisdiction and to taxation in the usual way until they have been shipped or entered with a common carrier for transportation to another State or have been started upon such transportation in a continuous route or journey.

The courts have universally held that the police power of a State is as broad and plenary as its taxing power, and the police power is in the State and not in the General Government. This being the doctrine as to the taxing power, Mr. President, all property in the State therefore is subject to the police power of that State so long as it remains in the State and before it starts upon its journey as commerce from one State to another.

If Congress can regulate child labor in our factories and mines under the interstate-commerce clause or any other clause of the Constitution, it has the power and can with the same reason regulate child labor upon the farm, can regulate the ages at which boys and girls of the farm can pick from the boll the fleecy staple which is taken to the gin and then to the factory to be manufactured into cloth. It can regulate the ages at which the farmers' children shall work in the great wheat fields in the States of the Northwest, for the farmers have in mind when the wheat is produced that a greater portion of it is for interstate commerce, and it is to be shipped abroad to other States and foreign countries. The production of wheat and its manufacture into flour, though intended for such, is not interstate commerce. Neither is the production of cotton and its manufacture into cloth interstate commerce, though intended for such. If it is within the power of Congress to enact such legislation as this, it would have the power to pass an act providing that no goods should be shipped in interstate commerce which was not produced by union labor. Congress would have a right also to fix the minimum-wage scale in the States and say that no goods should be shipped in interstate commerce that were made by any employee receiving less than $3 a day. As Justice Bradley says:

It is not the owner's or producer's mind which makes the commodity interstate commerce.

CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Besides the court itself some of the greatest lawyers in the country, some of the greatest text-writers in this country, and others, have spoken upon this very question and declared without hesitation that such a bill as this is unconstitutional.

President Roosevelt in one of his messages to Congress said:

The horrors incident to the employment of young children in factories or at work anywhere are a blot on our civilization. It is true that each State must ultimately settle this question in its own way, but a thorough official investigation of the matter, with the results published broadcast, would greatly help toward arousing the public conscience and securing unity of State action in the matter.

Ex-President Taft, who is recognized as one of the great lawyers of the country, so recognized by his political friends and foes alike, in one of his great lectures to the students of Yale, discussing this very subject, said:

Bills have been urged upon Congress to forbid interstate commerce in goods made by child labor. Such proposed legislation has failed chiefly because it was thought beyond the Federal power. The distinction between the power exercised in enacting the pure-food bill and that which would have been necessary in the case of the child-labor bill is that Congress in the former is only preventing interstate commerce from being a vehicle for conveyance of something which would be injurious to people at its destination, and it might properly decline to permit the use of interstate commerce for that detrimental result. In the latter case Congress would be using its regulative power of interstate commerce not to effect any result of interstate commerce. Articles made by child labor are presumably as good and useful as articles made by adults. The proposed law is to be enforced to discourage the making of articles by child labor in the State from which the articles were shipped. In other words, it seeks indirectly and by duress to compel the States to pass a certain kind of legislation that is completely within their discretion to enact or not. Child labor in the State of the shipment has no legitimate or germane relation to the interstate commerce of which the goods thus made are to form a part, to its character, or to its effect. Such an attempt of Congress to use its power of regulating such commerce to suppress the use of child labor in the State of shipment would be a clear usurpation of that State's rights.

President Wilson in one of his lectures on Constitutional Law, in 1911, expressed himself as follows as to the unconstitutionality of this legislation:

Its power (the Federal Government) is "to regulate commerce between the States," and the attempts now made during every session of Congress to carry the implications of that power beyond the utmost boundaries of reasonable and honest inference show that the only limits likely to be observed by politicians are those set by the good sense and conservative temper of the country.

The proposed Federal legislation with regard to the regulation of child labor affords a striking example. If the power to regulate commerce between the States can be stretched to include the regulation of labor in mills and factories, it can be made to embrace every particular of the industrial organization and action of the country. The only limitations Congress would observe should the Supreme Court assent to such obviously absurd extravagancies of interpretation would be the limitations of opinion and of circumstance.

Watson, on the Constitution, says:

Closely akin to the question of regulating manufacturing is the question whether Congress can forbid the hauling of a commodity, by a carrier of interstate commerce, which was manufactured in a State, for instance, by women, or children under a certain age, as has recently been maintained. This question is of far-reaching effect, and if such power exists in Congress it would result in the most complete invasion of the sovereignty of the States by the General Government which has ever been accomplished under the Federal Government.

And he then proceeds with an argument and citations from the Supreme Court to show that Congress has no such power.

Now, what does the Supreme Court say upon the question?

In the case of Kidd v. Pearson (128 U. S.), Justice Lamar, in writing the opinion of the court, discusses this question at length, and I quote at some length, as it draws the line between the regulation of commerce and manufacture and the reserved rights of the States and the power of Congress to pass such a bill as this. Said the court:

No distinction is more popular to the common mind or more clearly expressed in economic and political literature than that between manufactures and commerce. Manufacture is transformation—the fashioning of raw materials into a change of form for use. The functions of commerce are different. The buying and selling and the transportation incidental thereto constitute commerce, and the regulation of commerce in the constitutional sense embraces the regulation at least of such transportation. The legal definition of the term, as given by this court in County of Mobile v. Kimball (102 U. S., 691, 702), is as follows:

"Commerce with foreign countries and among the States, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities."

If it be held that the term includes the regulation of all such manufactures as are intended to be the subject of commercial transactions in the future, it is impossible to deny that it would also include all productive industries that contemplate the same thing. The result would be that Congress would be invested, to the exclusion of the States, with the power to regulate not only manufactures but also agriculture, horticulture, stock raising, domestic fisheries, mining—in short, every branch of human industry. For is there one of them that does not contemplate more or less clearly an interstate or foreign market? Does not the wheat grower of the Northwest and the cotton planter of the South plant, cultivate, and harvest his crop with an eye on the prices at Liverpool, New York, and Chicago? The power being vested in Congress and denied to the States, it would follow as an inevitable result that the duty would devolve on Congress to regulate all of these delicate, multifarious, and vital interests—interests which in their nature are and must be local in all the details of their successful management.

It is not necessary to enlarge on but only to suggest the impracticability of such a scheme when we regard the multitudinous affairs involved and the almost infinite variety of their minute details.

It was said by Chief Justice Marshall that it is a matter of public history that the object of vesting in Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States was to insure uniformity of regulation against conflicting and discriminating State legislation. See also County of Mobile v. Kimball (supra, at p. 697).

While the courts have held that the commerce clause of the Constitution is plenary, provided it does not conflict with some other clause of the Constitution, yet it also says that this power can not be exercised by Congress arbitrarily.

Judge Harlan says in the Lottery case:

We may, however, repeat, in this connection, what the court has heretofore said, that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, although plenary, can not be deemed arbitrary, since it is subject to such limitations or restrictions as are prescribed in the Constitution. This power, therefore, may not be exercised so as to infringe rights secured or protected by that instrument. It would not be difficult to imagine legislation that would be justly liable to such an objection as that stated, and be hostile to the objects for the accomplishment of which Congress was invested with the general power to regulate commerce among the several States. (Idem, p. 303.)

In the case of Adair v. United States (208 U. S., 161), decided at October term, 1897, in which a portion of an act passed by Congress, known as the Edmond Act, was declared unconstitutional—that section of the act which forbade railroads engaged in interstate commerce to discharge from their employment employees because of their membership in any labor organization.

The court declared, because this regulation had no real relation to commerce sought to be regulated, it was beyond the power of Congress to prescribe, was unconstitutional, and void.

Mr. Justice Harlan, who delivered the opinion of the court and who delivered the opinion in the Lottery case, said:

The power to regulate interstate commerce is the power to prescribe rules by which such commerce must be governed. Of course, as has often been said, Congress has a larger discretion in the selection or choice of the means to be employed in the regulation of interstate commerce, and such discretion is not to be interfered with except where that which is done is in plain violation of the Constitution. * * * In this connection we may refer to Johnson v. Railroad (196 U. S. 1), relied on in argument, which case arose under the act of March, 1893. That act required carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars used in such commerce with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes. But the act upon its face showed that its object was to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, and this court sustained its validity upon the ground that it manifestly had reference to interstate commerce and was calculated to subserve the interests of such commerce by affording protection to employees and travelers. It was held that there was a substantial connection between the object sought to be attained by the act and the means provided to accomplish that object. So in regard to the employers' liability cases (207 U. S. 463), decided at the present term. In that case the court sustained the authority of Congress, under its power to regulate commerce, to prescribe the rule of liability as between interstate carriers and their employees in such interstate commerce, in cases of personal injuries received by employees while actually engaged in such commerce. The decision on this point was placed on the ground that a rule of that character would have direct reference to the conduct of interstate commerce and would, therefore, be within the competency of Congress to establish for commerce among the States, but not as to commerce completely internal to a State.

Manifestly, any rule prescribed for the conduct of interstate commerce, in order to be within the competency of Congress under its power to regulate commerce among the States, must have some real or substantial relation to or connection with the commerce regulated. But what possible legal or logical connection is there between an employee's membership in a labor organization and the carrying on of interstate commerce? Such relation to a labor organization can have in itself and in the eye of the law no bearing upon the commerce with which the employee is connected by his labor and services. * * * It results, on the whole case, that the provision of the statute under which the defendant was convicted must be held to be repugnant to the fifth amendment and as not embraced by nor within the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, but under the guise of regulating interstate commerce and as applied to this case it arbitrarily sanctions an illegal invasion of the personal liberty as well as the right of property of the defendant Adair.

Then, Mr. President, I ask what real connection has the child who is employed in the mill, which manufactures the cotton goods, with commerce, any more than an employee of a railroad, which is one of the instrumentalities of commerce, who joins the labor union?

The denial of the manufacturer from shipping in interstate commerce his goods which were in part produced by child labor, in the language of Justice Harlan, is repugnant to the fifth amendment of the Constitution as not embraced by or within the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce but under the guise of regulating interstate commerce, and such legislation arbitrarily sanctions an illegal invasion of the personal liberty of the manufacturer.

This legislation for the indirect purpose of regulating manufacture under the guise of regulating commerce is not only arbitrary but in violation of the fifth amendment of the Constitution.

In People v. Hawkins (157 U. S.), the court says:

The citizen can not be deprived of his property without due process of law. Any law which annihilates its value, restricts its use, or takes away any of its essential attributes comes within the provisions of the Constitution and its power.

We have cotton commission merchants who buy and sell cotton goods. The commission merchant buys and has shipped to him, within the State, goods produced in part by child labor. Now if this bill becomes a law he can not ship these goods to another State, and therefore the value of his property is lessened, its use is restricted, and his property destroyed without due process of law; and Congress is exercising a power which infringes on the rights secured by the organic law other than the commerce clause and, as Mr. Watson in his work on the Constitution also says:

There is no power in Congress to control the manufacture of goods in the States destined for interstate or foreign commerce, and consequently Congress is unable to control the labor of persons engaged in manufacturing products in the States which are intended for interstate or foreign business. Such regulations are left to the State. The power to make such regulations resided there before the Constitution was adopted, or the Union was formed, and it was not surrendered by the States to the General Government.

Those cases cited as authority for this legislation are where the article shipped in interstate commerce directly affects the health, the morals, or deceives the ultimate consumer, or has some real or substantial relation to or connection with commerce regulation, or where the article or articles deleteriously injure the public in the State or community or that from which it is shipped.

Cotton goods are not misbranded cotton goods and in no way injure the health or the morals of the ultimate consumer, nor are they in any way deleterious to anyone.

The Lottery case which is so confidently relied on prohibits the shipment of the lottery ticket in interstate commerce because of its gambling nature and, therefore, as in the doctrine laid down in the White-Slave case, is injurious to the morals of the people. In the Lottery case, which is the strongest case cited, that the decision might not be drawn upon as a precedent for future extension of the legislative power, the learned Judge Harlan confines it to the precise issue and notifies the profession that the court will not extend the power further, and says in one of the concluding paragraphs of the opinion:

We decide nothing more in the present case than that lottery tickets are subjects of traffic among those who choose to sell or buy them.

The Supreme Court, in the First Employees' Liability Case (207 U. S. 463), states very strongly the principle of law for which I am contending.

The learned Justice McKenna, in delivering the opinion, has this to say in paragraph 3:

3. It remains only to consider the contention which we have previously quoted, that the act is constitutional, although it embraces subjects not within the power of Congress to regulate commerce, because one who engages in interstate commerce thereby submits all his business concerns to the regulating power of Congress. To state the proposition is to refute it. It assumes that, because one engages in interstate commerce, he thereby endows Congress with power not delegated to it by the Constitution; in other words, with the right to legislate concerning matters of purely State concern. It rests upon the conception that the Constitution destroyed that freedom of commerce which it was its purpose to preserve, since it treats the right to engage in interstate commerce as a privilege which can not be availed of except upon such conditions as Congress may prescribe, even although the conditions would be otherwise beyond the power of Congress. It is apparent that if the contention were well founded it would extend the power of Congress to every conceivable subject, however inherently local, would obliterate all the limitations of power imposed by the Constitution, and would destroy the authority of the States as to all conceivable matters which, from the beginning, have been, and must continue to be, under their control as long as the Constitution endures (pp. 502-503).

Manufacture is transformation. Commerce is traffic, intercourse. Manufacture of cotton is taking the fleecy staple into the mill and transforming it into cloth. Commerce is the shipment of the cloth from one State into another. Manufacture is one thing, while commerce is entirely a different thing. Over one the State has absolute power, over the other Congress has plenary and absolute power to control and regulate.

In this connection and for the purpose of this argument I will read the tenth amendment or article:

ARTICLE X. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

And Mr. Madison declared the purposes of the Government to be under the Constitution—

To support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well in its limitations as in its authorities; to respect the rights and authorities reserved to the States and to the people and equally incorporated with and essential to the success of the general system.

As there was in those days of its adoption, there is to-day, it seems, a strong sentiment growing in this country for a consolidated or centralized government, for the extinction of the rights of the States, and abolition of State lines.

Mr. President, under our dual system of government the reserved and delegated powers respected and no intrenchment upon one nor the other, this country has progressed beyond the wildest dreams of the fathers, our civilization has rapidly advanced, our increase of wealth has been marvelous, and there is no reason why the system should be changed and the limitations placed in the Constitution be obliterated. There is no reason for any departure from the fundamental principles as construed and expounded by the founders of the Republic and by the highest court of the land.

And this great body which represents the States should see to it that there shall be no invasion upon these powers, should see to it that the fundamental principles of our free institutions are maintained in their full strength and vigor. For an encroachment upon these reserved rights to the extent which the tendencies of the time seem to be leading would be for the Central Government to interfere with, administer upon, and control the industrial, the local, and the domestic concerns of the people in the States, and when once begun and the precedent established there is no telling where it would lead nor where it would end, and State sovereignty would finally be no more. Instead of impairing the sovereignty of the State it is the duty of Congress to uphold and protect it to the last.

If more power is needed for the successful operation of the Government owing to changed conditions, the way is clearly pointed out, the method is provided for in the Constitution by Article V. Let an amendment be submitted to the States. In any event let the people be consulted, let their sacred will be known, let their consent be given to the surrender of any of their rights, and without their consent let nothing be done by an unwarranted construction.

It might be important here to observe that in the debates in the constitutional convention history shows that much more extensive grants of commercial power were proposed, asked for, and most strenuously advocated, but all such propositions were voted down and this simple clause adopted by the wise men who composed that convention and who, being fresh from the people, respected their will.

If Congress is to regulate the cotton mills and mines, why not let it go into the regulating business generally? Regulate the flour mills, the steel mills, the shoe factories, the clothing factories, and regulate the farms; regulate the laws in regard to health; let it regulate every branch of industry which contemplates an interstate or foreign market, and then there will be little left for the State to do.

Where the evils exist the States can and will correct them. I insist that in this Christian land of ours there is no less of higher moral ideas and humanitarianism—the brotherhood of man—in one State than another. We are all living and moving on a higher, nobler, and more Christian-like plane, I trust, and where one State has seen its duty and legislated in favor of humanity and corrected these evils you may soon expect that the Christian and patriotic sentiment in other States will cause their legislatures to act in these matters until we have the uniformity that is so much desired.

And again, Mr. President, the law which will suit one State might not prove satisfactory to the people of another State, where conditions are entirely different, and the regulation should be left to each State, which knows its own conditions best.

Mr. President, let the powers enumerated in the Constitution remain limited. Let the reserved powers in the people be undisturbed. Let the integrity and autonomy of the States be upheld; encourage State pride. Centralization would be a constant menace to the liberties of the people, breeding corruption and oppression. These reserved powers are in the people of the States. They are theirs to hold, they are theirs to surrender; but when once surrendered they can never be regained. I say with a great judge who wrote it, that that government is the best which while performing all its duties interferes the least with the lawful pursuits of the people.

In the language of the great father of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson:

It is not by the consolidation or concentration of powers, but by their distribution that good government is effected. Were not this country already divided into States, that division must be made that each might do for itself what concerns itself directly, and what it can so much better do than a distinct authority. Every State is again divided into counties, each to take care of what lies within its local bounds; each county again into townships or wards, to manage minuter details; and every ward into farms, to be governed each by its individual proprietor. Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap we should soon want bread. It is by this partition of cares, descending in gradation from general to particular, that the mass of human affairs may be best managed for the good and prosperity of all.

Mr. Justice Hughes, in his recent address to the New York Bar Association, in January, said:

But in the face of the difficulties already before us, and destined to increase in number and gravity, we remain convinced of the necessity of autonomous local governments. An overcentralized government would break down of its own weight. It is almost impossible even now for Congress in well-nigh continuous session to keep up with its duties, and we can readily imagine what the future may have in store in legislative concerns. If we did not have States we should speedily have to create them. To preserve the essential elements of this system, without permitting necessary local autonomy to be destroyed by the unwarranted assertion of Federal power and without allowing State action to throw out of gear the requisite machinery for unity of control in national concerns, demands the most intelligent appreciation of all the facts of our interrelated affairs and far more careful efforts in cooperation than we have hitherto put forth.

Along this same line, I quote from a great speech of Senator Root in his address on "The Essentials of the Constitution," at Princeton University about two years ago:

If the power of the States were to override the power of the Nation, we should ultimately cease to have a Nation and become only a body of really separate, although confederated, State sovereignties, continually forced apart by diverse interests and ultimately quarrelling with one another and separating altogether. On the other hand, if the power of the Nation were to override that of the States and usurp their functions, we should have this vast country, with its great population, inhabiting widely separated regions, differing in climate, in production, in industrial and social interests and ideas, governed in all its local affairs by one all-powerful central government at Washington, imposing upon the home life and behavior of each community the opinions and ideas of propriety of distant majorities. Not only would this be intolerable and alien to the idea of free self-government, but it would be beyond the power of a central government to do directly. Decentralization would be made necessary by the mass of Government business to be transacted, and so our separate localities would come to be governed by delegated authority—by proconsuls authorized from Washington to execute the will of the great majority of the whole people. No one can doubt that this also would lead by its different route to the separation of our Union. Preservation of our dual system of Government, carefully restrained in each of its parts by the limitations of the Constitution, has made possible our growth in local self-government and national power in the past and, so far as we can see, it is essential to the continuance of that Government in the future.

Mr. President, I will close by reading from an address of Mr. Justice David J. Brewer to the Arkansas and Texas Bar Association July 11, 1906, on the subject "Two Periods in the History of the Supreme Court." Justice Brewer, as I have said, was a great judge and a great statesman, and he seemed to have in his mind's eye where it would lead if Congress should continue to invade the field of the local domestic concerns of the people.

Referring to political contentions on behalf of the extension of the commerce power, Justice Brewer said:

If we listen to the contentions of some, we shall be led to believe that when the farmer sows his wheat, having in view the gathering in the fall of a crop of grain which he intends to sell to a mill in some other State, the power of Congress attaches as upon a beginning of interstate commerce and continues until the wheat has been manufactured into bread and eaten by the consumer. * * *

Because a manufacturer may intend to dispose of some of his products in interstate traffic it is said that Congress has the right to supervise the entire action of his manufacturing establishment. Inasmuch as it is difficult to draw the line in our great industries between that commerce which is wholly within the State and that which is carried on between the States, the contention is that Congress may take full control of the entire industry, the greater power of the Nation swallowing up the smaller power of the States. I might go on and enumerate many other illustrations, but these serve my purpose.

Is there not danger in this tendency, and may we not wisely consider whether it ought not to be stayed? I know it is said that the National Government is more efficient than the States; can reach supposed ills in their entirety when the States can only reach them partially. But is efficiency the only test? If it is, then a centralized government with a dictator is the ideal government, for none has such efficiency and thoroughness as a government under the absolute control of a single individual. * * *

Never will we pass the danger line until those who dwell in all our communities realize that upon themselves rests the burden of our civilization. It is human nature to turn responsibilities off if possible, and if you develop in the locality a general feeling that in a government at Washington rests full responsibility the individual will steadily lose the spirit of independent, public-spirited citizenship. I am not pessimistic. I believe in the glorious future of this Republic, for though I clearly see the tendency to-day I as firmly believe that there will be a glorious resurrection of that spirit of individuality, that sense of personal responsibility which can alone give to this Nation an enduring and brilliant future. * * *

Where is that individuality to-day?

That which I wish to call attention to is that too much and too frequent interference by government blunts the sense of individual responsibility, and the danger is that we drift to a condition where the individual abandons his own duty and simply appeals to government. So that if a man buys a pair of shoes which pinch his feet he will rush to the legislature for some statute regulating shoemaking, and for fear the State legislature can not reach every shoemaker in the land, hasten to Washington to have Congress undertake the work of regulation under its power over interstate commerce.

APPENDIX.

State.	Total number of children 10 to 14 years of age, 1910.	Children under 15 committed to prisons, jails, workhouses, reformatories in 1910.
		Number.	Number per 100,000 children 10 to 14.
North Carolina.....	265,964	41	15.4
Massachusetts.....	284,960	554	194.4
Rhode Island.....	47,014	146	310.5
Connecticut.....	95,272	168	176.3
Wisconsin.....	246,154	161	65.4
Illinois.....	520,955	457	87.7
Minnesota.....	214,402	104	48.5
California.....	173,945	87	50.0

District of Columbia.

Year.	Total number of children 10 to 14 years of age.	Children under 15 years of age committed to prisons, jails, workhouses, or reformatories.
		Number.	Number per 100,000 children 10 to 14.
1904.....	123,525	82	348.6
1910.....	24,649	96	389.5

<sup>1</sup> Estimated.

Illiteracy decreasing.

	Total number of children 10 to 14 years of age, 1910.	Children under 15 years of age committed to prisons, jails, workhouses, or reformatories in 1910.
		Number.	Number per 100,000 children 10 to 14 years of age.
United States.....	9,107,140	9,629	105.7
Geographic divisions:
New England.....	559,556	1,061	189.6
Middle Atlantic.....	1,726,086	3,121	180.8
East North Central.....	1,706,759	1,723	101.0
West North Central.....	1,170,674	853	72.9
South Atlantic.....	1,396,083	1,327	95.1
East South Central.....	969,343	624	64.4
West South Central.....	1,016,531	408	40.1
Mountain.....	239,610	289	120.6
Pacific.....	322,523	223	69.1
New England:
Maine.....	64,588	68	105.3
New Hampshire.....	36,271	37	102.0
Vermont.....	31,451	88	276.8
Massachusetts.....	284,960	554	194.4
Rhode Island.....	47,014	146	310.5
Connecticut.....	95,272	168	176.3
Middle Atlantic:
New York.....	785,826	1,962	249.7
New Jersey.....	228,695	405	177.1
Pennsylvania.....	711,565	754	106.0
East North Central:
Ohio.....	425,602	552	129.7
Indiana.....	255,508	279	109.2
Illinois.....	520,955	457	87.7
Michigan.....	258,480	274	106.0
Wisconsin.....	246,154	161	65.4
West North Central:
Minnesota.....	214,402	104	48.5
Iowa.....	222,577	115	51.7
Missouri.....	324,191	398	122.8
North Dakota.....	59,392	17	28.6
South Dakota.....	60,021	4	6.7
Nebraska.....	121,782	63	51.7
Kansas.....	168,309	152	90.3
South Atlantic:
Delaware.....	19,308	41	212.3
Maryland.....	129,605	340	262.3
District of Columbia.....	24,649	96	389.5
Virginia.....	237,563	212	89.2
West Virginia.....	131,027	111	84.7
North Carolina.....	265,964	41	15.4
South Carolina.....	192,406	186	96.7
Georgia.....	315,217	206	65.4
Florida.....	80,319	94	117.0
East South Central:
Kentucky.....	252,905	240	94.9
Tennessee.....	243,328	167	68.6
Alabama.....	253,196	186	53.7
Mississippi.....	219,914	81	36.8
West South Central:
Arkansas.....	179,879	81	45.0
Louisiana.....	193,791	179	92.4
Oklahoma.....	186,069	47	25.3
Texas.....	456,792	101	22.1
Mountain:
Montana.....	29,686	74	249.3
Idaho.....	31,902	2	6.3
Wyoming.....	10,829	1	9.2
Colorado.....	69,688	133	190.9
New Mexico.....	34,408	13	37.8
Arizona.....	18,091	43	237.7
Utah.....	40,070	23	57.4
Nevada.....	4,936
Pacific:
Washington.....	92,802	99	106.7
Oregon.....	55,776	37	66.3
California.....	173,945	87	50.0

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I would not delay action on the bill, for which I recognize there is widespread favor, but I can not vote for it for the reasons which I will state as concisely as possible:

First. Clearly the States have the power and authority to deal with the subject of child labor in all its phases. There is no dispute as to that. The States are dealing with it. Twenty-two States, having a population of 54,484,888, prohibit the working of children in mines and quarries. Some States, which have no such prohibition, have no mines or quarries. Twenty-eight States, including Florida, have standard provisions, without exemptions, fixing 14-year limit in factories and canneries. See page 9 of report.

Sixteen States, including Florida, have laws that declare no child under 16 years of age shall be employed in any occupation injurious to health or dangerous to life, limb, or the morals of such child.

Florida provides a State inspector whose duty it is to see to the enforcement of the law. I know of no complaint in that regard. I deny that there is need of Federal inspectors to supervise the work of State officers, empowered to harass and inconvenience and oppress our people by arbitrary inspections, making complaints before United States commissioners, arresting and prosecuting them before the Federal courts in the process of earning their salaries. We have too many inspectors, special agents, secret service employees, and the like now, costing the people hundreds of thousands of dollars for the privilege of being watched from the time they arise in the morning until they retire at night, in order that they may be certain not to eat or drink, buy or sell, or do anything that would violate some law. If some ambiguous, omnibus statute should escape the citizen's notice or knowledge some inspector or special agent is on hand to hurry him to prison. Russia and Mexico must soon take lessons from the United States when it comes to restraining, under the guise of controlling, the liberties of the citizen. Laws have been and are being enacted by the States on this subject, as fast and as effective as the need for them is brought home to the people. Local conditions should not be ignored, and these conditions no general national legislation can adequately meet. Granted the legislation proposed would serve a high purpose, I can not believe it would be wise to pass this bill or that it is the best way to handle the subject. It is a field already occupied by practically all the States, and the States and local communities are in position to deal with it directly and to correct every evil, national or individual, which it is desired to correct.

It is argued that the State laws are not enforced, but I answer, Who is given the right to pass that judgment? and if that conclusion be true, it by no means follows the Congress has power for that reason to go into a State and interpose to correct such dereliction.

That would be an unwarranted, bold assumption of power by Congress.

I shall not argue the question. Senators' minds are made up. The bill will pass. My purpose simply is to state some of the principles involved, some we should preserve and some we will hark back to later. What we do here will be deliberately, not hastily and unthoughtfully, done.

Second. It seems to me even if we concede that child labor, as it exists in the United States, is a "national evil," that legislation by Congress is desirable to correct it, the more serious question is whether the remedy proposed in this bill is a constitutional remedy. If convinced it is not, my duty is to vote against it.

After serious consideration and no little study, no doubt rests in my mind on that point.

Let us keep in view that Congress can do nothing that is not granted in the Constitution, while the States may do anything not denied to them, and examine the provisions of Article I, section 8, paragraph 3, of the Constitution, to which we must look for the authorization of this power sought to be exercised under this bill, which reads:

The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

I do not believe that it was originally intended that in the power to "regulate commerce * * * among the several States" should be included the power to prohibit such commerce.

In the case of Dooley v. United States (183 U. S., 171), Chief Justice Fuller said:

But if that power of regulation is absolutely unrestricted as respects interstate commerce, then the very unity the Constitution was framed to secure can be set at naught by a legislative body created by that instrument.

Mr. Judson, in his work on Interstate Commerce, page 506, distinguishes between the three classes of commerce mentioned. Tucker on the Constitution, volume 2, pages 528-529, says:

The power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce was given in the same terms, diverso intuitu. In the first, to protect all against the machinations of foreign enemies; in the second, to protect and promote the free and unobstructed movement of men and things between the States in the family of the Union.

The States, in favoring the new Government, had for their object facilitating, not prohibiting, commerce—freeing commerce from the restraints which had existed.

Again, Congress, while having exclusive power to regulate commerce "among the States," has no such power to regulate the manufacture of goods in the States on the ground that such goods may become the subjects of interstate commerce. If Congress has not the authority, granted or implied, to regulate manufacturing in the States, clearly it has not the power to control or direct or suppress the manufacturing plant.

This bill undertakes to provide for Federal regulation of the hours of labor in the States. We look in vain for any grant of power to Congress in the Constitution to regulate the hours of labor in the States.

I do not agree that Congress may do indirectly what under the Constitution it has not power to do directly, and the recent decision in the Oklahoma case, Two hundred and thirty-eighth United States, should eliminate the excuse for a sneer at that proposition.

It seems clear that an admission of the existence of such power would be full of danger, in that it might lead ultimately to the destruction of the reserved rights of the sovereign States.

The effort here is not to regulate commerce of any kind, but in order that the Federal Government may enforce the laws which Congress may enact respecting the employment of children in certain kinds of labor, to regulate the hours of labor, and to control the manufacture of products in the States.

To contend this may be done, no matter how noble the purpose, is to proclaim the doctrine advanced by Charles Sumner in the distressing period of the country's history, when desperate measures were resorted to, that—

Beyond all question the true rule under the National Constitution * * * is that anything for human rights is constitutional * * *. There can be no State rights against human rights; and this is the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Two cases of the Supreme Court are principally relied upon to support the claims of the advocates of this bill, to wit:

What is known as the Lottery case (188 U. S., 331) and the White Slave case, Hoke v. United States (227 U. S., 308).

If we concede that these cases support the contention that Congress may prohibit interstate commerce, when the article of commerce is not inherently impure, not an "outlaw" of commerce, which I deny, still we must bear in mind it is commerce, and not manufacture, that may be prohibited, according to these cases.

It is not claimed that the article manufactured or produced by child labor as it exists in the States is in itself impure, unsound, unclean, dangerous to health and morals. The movement of such articles in commerce neither of these cases holds may be prohibited by Congress.

The fifth amendment to the Constitution protects such property from confiscation. The manufacturing plant is not the "outlaw" when the only complaint is the method, the practice employed in the process of manufacture. Can Congress prescribe that every cannery must have a glass roof, otherwise the goods coming from it can not move in interstate commerce?

The Supreme Court holds that even though, in certain circumstances, Congress may prohibit commerce in an article after its creation, it may not prohibit its creation.

The cases of Kidd v. Pierson (128 U. S., 1) and United States v. E. C. Knight Co. (156 U. S., 12) support this view.

These cases and the cases of United States v. De Witt (9 Wall., 47) and Coe v. Erroll (116 U. S., 517) seem to me conclusive against the constitutionality of this bill.

Justice Lamar said, in United States against E. C. Knight Co.:

The fact that an article is manufactured for export to another State does not of itself make it an article of interstate commerce, and the intent of the manufacturer does not determine the time when the article passes from the control of the State and belongs to commerce.

Justice Bradley said, in Coe against Erroll:

What we have already said, however, in relation to products of a State will indicate the view which seems to us the sound one on that subject, namely, that such goods do not cease to be part of the general mass of property in the State, subject, as such, to its jurisdiction and to taxation in the usual way, until they have been shipped or entered with a common carrier for transportation in a continuous route or journey.

Here the article, logs, had been cut and were intended for interstate commerce, and had started on their journey, but they were held to be subject to the jurisdiction and laws of the State where they were and had been cut.

These considerations oblige me to vote against the bill, while in cordial sympathy with every proper and lawful effort to protect the child from harm or injury, or oppression, or hardship by exactions or practices in respect to labor.

In the same breath I must say that there is no reason appealing to me why this protection of the child's rights and prevention of wrong and injustice should be limited to consideration of that one object, the child's labor.

Under the Senate amendment any producer, manufacturer, or dealer is prohibited from shipping or delivering for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any article or commodity the product of any mine or quarry in which within 30 days prior to its removal from the mine or quarry children under the age of 16 years have been employed or permitted to work.

If a manufacturer or producer permits a child under the age of 16 years to be employed in producing an article or commodity, a dealer in that article who ships or delivers for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce that article or commodity, if by oversight, accident, or neglect section 5 is not complied with, violates the law and may be arrested and punished as the act provides. He may have had nothing whatever to do with the employment of any of the labor employed in producing the article. He may have had no knowledge or information regarding the means employed in its production. The article or commodity may have no objectionable feature whatever on any ground, per se.

Again, no producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any article or commodity the product of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States in which within 30 days prior to the removal of such product therefrom children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 years and 16 years have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day or more than six days in any week or after the hour of 7 o'clock p. m. or before the hour of 6 a. m.

Congress undertakes to say in effect by this bill that in no State shall there be employed or permitted to work in any "mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment" of any kind a child under the age of 14 years.

Further, that no child between the ages of 14 and 16 shall be thus employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day.

Further, that no such child shall be thus employed or permitted to work before the hour of 6 a. m. and after the hour of 7 p. m. nor more than six days in any week.

These are all matters which Congress is granted no power or authority, express or implied, to control or regulate. Any person who violates these provisions may be punished for the first offense by a fine of not more than $200 and for each subsequent offense by a fine or not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The bill gives authority to the Secretary of Labor, or any person he may select, to enter and inspect at any time "mines, quarries, mills, canneries, workshops, factories, manufacturing establishments, and other places in which goods are produced or held for interstate commerce" and to employ assistance for the purposes of the act.

The opportunity for oppression under this bill is unlimited. The power to drive to bankruptcy and ruin producers, manufacturers, and dealers is given Federal agents in unmistakable terms.

These inspectors and assistants employed by the Federal authority will have in their hands the means to close the doors of mills, canneries, workshops, factories, or manufacturing establishments and other places where goods are made or held for interstate commerce and harass and have fined and imprisoned their owners and operators practically at their will.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think the Senator means exactly what he has stated in a part of his remarks. If I understood him correctly, he stated that this bill prohibits the employment of children within these hours. It only prohibits the transportation of the goods made in those factories if they do employ children over certain hours.

Mr. FLETCHER. My argument is that the effect of that is to accomplish the other result; that the real purpose is the prohibition as to the labor, not as to the transportation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, certainly; but it is not prohibited. Everybody agrees that it could not be prohibited.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; but I am arguing that that is the effect of the bill and the real purpose of the bill, and that it is attempting to do indirectly what it could not do directly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator entirely.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Florida has asserted, with a good deal of emphasis, that the Government of the United States can not in any instance do indirectly what it has no power to do directly. Does he apply the same principle to every power granted to Congress in the Constitution? For instance, does the Senator say that the taxing power can not be used to accomplish indirectly what can not be done directly?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will not attempt to say that the taxing power can not be used with the result of working out a consequence which flows indirectly from the exercise of that power; but that should not be the primary purpose of the exercise of the power by Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call the Senator's attention to what was done in the early days of the war, and which gave rise to a very well known decision of the Supreme Court. Congress wanted to prevent the circulation of State bank currency. It had no power to prohibit the circulation of that kind of money directly, but its only desire was to prohibit it; and I ask if it be not true that we did prohibit it by imposing upon it a tax of 10 per cent?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree with the Senator that when the 10 per cent tax was imposed on State bank circulation it had the effect of prohibiting that circulation; but that was done under a positive, direct grant of power to Congress—namely, the power to tax.

Mr. CUMMINS. But this is done under the direct, positive power given to Congress to regulate commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. To regulate commerce—precisely. It is not the commerce regulation that I am finding fault with. It is the attempt on the part of Congress to regulate and control and direct the employment of labor, and the exercise of that power in directing and controlling and supervising manufacturing in the various States, which is purely a matter within the police power of the State.

Mr. CUMMINS. The prohibition against the employment of children under certain circumstances is simply the effect, the consequence, of prohibiting the shipment of certain goods, and the prohibition against the shipment of certain goods is a regulation of commerce just as the tax upon State bank circulation was in form a tax upon an article or an instrumentality with which Congress could not deal directly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Now, the Senator is branching off upon another proposition where an article is an outlaw of commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. What makes it an outlaw?

Mr. FLETCHER. That power might be exercised where it is injurious to health, where it is dangerous to public morals, and that sort of thing, but there is no such claim made as to the goods manufactured in these factories, that the goods are impure, that they are unsound, that they are unhealthy, that they are immoral in themselves.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will put the Senator another inquiry, if he will permit me. Does the Senator doubt that Congress has the right to levy a tax upon an import that will be sufficiently high to prevent the importation?

Mr. FLETCHER. Whatever Congress does in the exercise of that power is in pursuance of a direct grant of authority in the Constitution.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. WORKS. The illustration of the Senator from Iowa is quite an unfortunate one. It does not touch the real question involved here at all. That was a case where Congress had power and jurisdiction to act; but its effect was unlawful and it escaped an adverse decision of the Supreme Court only because that court would not inquire into the motives of Congress in enacting the law. It was doing a lawful thing, but really doing it for an unlawful purpose, and that was the question the Supreme Court did not inquire into.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I respond to the Senator from California?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. In my judgment, the illustration is a very pertinent and a very apt one. It of course is not precisely like the bill before us, but the express power had been given to Congress, and while taxation is ordinarily supposed to be laid for the purpose of getting a revenue, Congress can lay a tax to destroy as well as to create a revenue.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. A tax can be used to promote the general welfare of the country, just as every other express power in the Constitution can be used.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania will state his point of order.

Mr. PENROSE. I have risen several times to be recognized and the Senator from Iowa has apparently gone on without recognition from the Chair. This is a very important bill, constituting a radical departure in the policy of the American Government, this debate is impressive and interesting, and I think Senators ought to be here to listen to it. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Brandagee	Hitchcock	Norris	Smoot
Bryan	Hughes	Oliver	Sterling
Chamberlain	Husting	Overman	Thomas
Chilton	James	Penrose	Thompson
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Ransdell	Vardaman
Culberson	Kenyon	Robinson	Williams
Cummins	Kern	Shafroth	Works
Curtis	Lee, Md.	Sheppard
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Shields
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, perhaps I should not let pass the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa in regard to the legislation in connection with the tax on State banks and in connection with the prohibitive tariff as being unquestionably sound and proper and constitutional. I believe myself there is a very solemn protest against that sort of legislation, and that really there was an assumption of authority to a great extent on the part of Congress in respect to both the legislation with reference to the tax on State banks and in reference to laying duties that absolutely prohibit importation. It is very questionable whether under the Constitution Congress has not exceeded its power and authority in both those instances. A great many people feel that it has, and so contend in good faith. It seems to me, as I said, there was an assumption of authority there that it is doubtful whether it is justified by the language of the Constitution. But in both those instances Congress was acting under direct and express authority, which distinguishes the cases from the one presented by this bill.

I was proceeding to say, Mr. President, that under the provisions of this bill in several instances the assistants to the Secretary of Labor would be empowered to enter at any time any factory, mill, cannery, place of manufacture, or other place where these goods are held for the purpose of inspecting and endeavoring to enforce this law, and that such a power given to these special agents, unlimited in number, would arm them with authority to so hamper, hinder, and obstruct the exercise of the right of the manufacturers in respect to their business as to become an intolerable situation.

I would not for any consideration contribute to investing any such authority or power in any set of men. Especially is such a proposal abhorrent when the men chosen for that kind of work may be strangers to the people affected and alien in interest. I can not bring myself to believe that the policy advanced by the bill is wise. I am convinced it proposes legislation unsound in principle.

I can quite appreciate that in some circumstances and under some conditions the privilege of a child under 16, and even under 14, years of age to work is a blessing of the highest character. The welfare of the child, the good of society, may be subserved by the reasonable employment of such a child in useful labor. Work, under proper conditions—wholesome, healthful employment, not too hard or difficult—never on earth injuriously affected the morals of the child. Idleness, with its proximate consequences, on the other hand, voluntary or forced, has always been a fruitful source of vice and evil.

The situation does not make it necessary or justify the enactment by Congress, in the public interest, of a measure which must inevitably lead to conflict of jurisdiction, confusion of laws, and clashing of authority. The bill opens the way, moves far along that road which leads toward the gradual destruction of the rights of the States and the undermining of the constitutional liberty Americans have not ceased to love. The leadership of the future will be founded on commercial and industrial progress. Admit the constitutionality of this bill and you recognize a power in Congress to shackle commerce and strangle industry. When that day comes you will realize you have thrown to the winds the leadership and the power of the United States.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, so much has been said, and so well said, in this discussion that I shall not undertake at any length to go into either the constitutionality or merits of the bill; but I do not feel at liberty to allow a vote to come without expressing my opposition to the principles and the provisions of this legislation.

It is of no consequence now to consider whether the Constitutional Convention intended in the grant to regulate commerce to include a provision to prohibit commerce. The judicial decisions construing acts of Congress have adopted that principle of prohibition; but heretofore neither the Congress nor the courts have undertaken to go outside the realm of commerce and deal with the production of articles which afterwards might go into commerce. Legislation heretofore has dealt with commerce. This legislation deals not with commerce but with production. Indeed, Mr. President, that is the purpose of the bill.

The report of the committee states in distinguishing the Senate committee's substitute from the bill as passed by the House:

The House bill seeks to stigmatize commodities produced in whole or in part by proscribed child labor in the processes of actual manufacture. The Senate amendment penalizes the producer.

Again, on page 5 of the report, there is this language:

The committee therefore recommends that the prohibition be of the shipment of the product of a factory, mine, etc., in which, within 30 days prior to the removal of the product therefrom, child labor has been used within the specified standards of ages and hours. This is placing the prohibition on the shipment of the products of a plant using child labor, and not on the shipment of the products actually made by the child.

In other words, it is not honest legislation. That is more clearly shown by reference to the last paragraph of the bill.

Section 6 provides that the word "person" shall include, among other things—in the case of a dealer, means only to transport or to ship or deliver for shipment from the State, Territory, or District of manufacture or production.

What does that language mean? As explained in the committee report, it means that—

Under the House bill dealers in States other than that of production or manufacture are penalized unless protected by the manufacturers' guaranty, while in the Senate committee bill this very great burden which would thus be imposed upon commerce is totally removed.

The Senate committee, however, finds it necessary to retain a provision relating to guaranty in so far as dealers within the State of production or manufacture are concerned, in order to prevent evasions of the law.

In other words, Mr. President, the only penalty upon a dealer occurs in the State of production, in a jurisdiction with which Congress has no power to deal, and in the only place where Congress has the power to legislate the dealers are relieved from any restrictions at all in the interest of commerce. If that does not show that it is not the purpose of the bill to regulate commerce at all, but that the purpose is to legislate with reference to child labor itself, nothing could make it plain.

It is said that there is no harm in doing indirectly something that can not be done directly, and upon that basis appeal for the support of the bill is made because, Mr. President, no man in the Senate contends for a moment that Congress has the power to deal with the subject matter of the bill, to wit, child labor. Is there any objection to doing a thing indirectly that you can not do directly? In the first place, it is a plain usurpation of power. There is no subject of legislation under our Government that is not held either by the States or by the Federal Government. It is admitted that the Federal Government has no power to deal with this subject as such. Then, Mr. President, the conclusion is inevitable that we perpetrate a fraud upon the reserved powers of the States when we enact this legislation.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] propounded the inquiry to my colleague whether we have power to levy a prohibitive tariff. Of course we have the power. We have the power because the courts will not inquire into the motives of a coordinate branch of the Government. Mr. Justice Miller long ago held that it was robbery, although done under the taxing power of the Government.

Now, Mr. President, it does not lessen the responsibility of a legislator to say that the courts will not overturn the legislation. We too take an oath to support the Constitution, an oath as binding as the oath taken by the judiciary, and it is hardly fair to the judiciary when an item of legislation comes along that seems to have public sentiment behind it or upon which proposition there may be some doubt for Members of Congress to evade their responsibility and pass it on to the courts. When we have to deal with a question that might hurt there is an easy way of avoiding responsibility and of allowing the courts to assume it. But when we do that we are neither candid nor honest.

And then what happens, Mr. President? You place upon the judiciary the burden of seeming to overturn the will of the people as expressed in the legislative branch. It is to the credit of the courts that they have usually been true to their obligations.

Mr. President, is not the passage of legislation of this character which the court must finally consider responsible, at least in some degree, for several unfortunate conditions? Is it not responsible, in a way, for the humiliating circumstances that men, even in official situation, even in the Congress of the United States, will rise up and say they have no respect for the Constitution of their country? Yet there are men who say they do not believe the Supreme Court has the right to pass upon the constitutionality of an act. It is unfortunate in another respect, that the people are made to believe that the court itself has usurped authority when it declares the act unconstitutional.

It is only a few years ago when we had quite a large element in this country expressing their disapproval upon the ground that the courts had usurped authority and held that we should recall judges, because they had assumed to overturn the acts of the legislative branch, not only recall judges but that we should recall the decisions of the judges. I say that puts a responsibility upon the courts that we ought not to transfer from our shoulders to theirs.

Again, Mr. President, there is a difference, as has been pointed out in several addresses during this discussion, between the duty of the legislator and the duty of the judge. In Congress and in legislative body the burden of showing that the act is constitutional is upon those who advocate it. We ought not to vote for a bill unless we are convinced that it is constitutional, and the court may not overturn an act of Congress unless convinced that it is unconstitutional.

So it comes about that a man may vote to sustain an act of the legislature in the capacity of a judge which he ought not to have voted for under his oath if he had been a member of the legislature that passed it.

Mr. President, what are the reasons urged for the passage of this bill? In the report of the committee it is said that it is done because the employment of child labor is a national evil. Yet in the report on page 7 we find this language:

With the passage of the South Carolina law, only three States—North Carolina, New Mexico, and Wyoming—remain with an age limit for the employment of children less than 14 years, though some of the States allow children as young as 12 to be employed for reasons of poverty, or during the vacation season, or in canneries.

So this legislation is asked for because it is supposed that North Carolina, New Mexico, and Wyoming have not enacted legislation that is satisfactory to Members of Congress.

We then turn to the table on page 12, and looking at the child labor employed in those States we see how pressing this demand is. North Carolina, in manufacturing and mechanical specified occupations, has employed children between 10 and 13 years of age, 6,344, and between 14 and 15 years of age, 8,475; in the extraction of minerals she has employed 15 children between the ages of 10 and 13 years and 27 between 14 and 15—that is, the total for North Carolina is 14,861.

In New Mexico, in manufacturing and mechanical occupations there are 29 employed between the ages of 10 and 13; 90 between the ages of 14 and 15. In the extraction of minerals there are 10 employed between the ages of 10 and 13, and 42 between the ages of 14 and 15; a total of 171.

In Wyoming, in the manufacturing and mechanical occupations, between the ages of 10 and 13 there are none; between 14 and 15 there are 17. In the extraction of minerals, between the ages of 10 and 13 there are none, and between the ages of 14 and 15 there are 39; making a total for Wyoming of 56—14,861 for North Carolina, 171 for New Mexico, and 56 for Wyoming; a total of 15,088.

The laws of the other States have been conformed in a general way to a standard bill, so there remains only one State employing any considerable number of children. It is pointed out in this report that some of the States make exceptions to standard provisions. The exception of poverty is the chief one in those States. A child between 12 and 14 years of age who must work because of poverty is exempt from the law.

Mr. President, I have never been in a cotton factory. I do not know of my own knowledge what the conditions are in North Carolina. I believe, however, the people of North Carolina know. I believe the people of that State have more interest in the welfare of their children than have the Members of Congress, because their lives are wrapped up in them. They are to be the future citizens of North Carolina, to govern it, and to carry it forward in its civilization.

I can understand that it might, whether wise or not, be necessary for a child to go to work, earning an honest living, rather than to be placed upon the charity of some State institution or of some individual. That is a question which I have no doubt has been considered in the various States. I have never understood that work was specially harmful and that idleness was of great benefit to children. A day or two ago, while this discussion was proceeding, I was sitting by one of the oldest and most influential Members of this body upon the other side of the Chamber, and he said when he was 12 years of age he was plowing with a yoke of oxen. I imagine that if men accustomed to earn their living in the sunshine, out in the open, on a day like this, could have their way about it, they would think that work in the shade in a building was infinitely preferable.

This body is made up of men who, for the most part, were engaged in making their living in the shade, in buildings; so that they think that work in the shade in buildings is injurious to health. If it were made up of farmers, who have to work in the sunshine, and who have never in their actual experience found the theoretical benefits which occur to us from their labor, with their backs bended in the hot sun, they might pass legislation providing that if children worked in the fields they should not work more than eight hours a day; but if they had the opportunity to work in a building, where they were protected from the weather, they might work as long as they pleased.

What are you going to do with the children when you forbid them to enjoy the right to earn a living under this bill? That, too, is a serious question. This bill says they shall not labor; but it does not say to them what they can do. I do not believe we are going to much improve upon the policy that has heretofore obtained of allowing this Government to deal with the common interests of the States and allowing the States to deal with the matters that affect themselves, with the matters that they have reserved. I know it is unpopular to speak about State rights. When anybody mentions the rights of the States it is usually supposed that he is referring to the Civil War; yet, Mr. President, it seems to me that in the years ahead of us, there is nothing so important in our Government as the insistence upon the old-time division of powers between the Federal and the State Governments. This bill breaks down that distinction.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Florida said a moment ago, if I understood him correctly, that this bill was intended only to take care of a few children in North Carolina, New Mexico, and Wyoming, and he read from the report showing the number of children in those States under 13 years of age, I think, who were employed in factories and in quarries. The Senator from Florida is always fair, and therefore I assume that he has overlooked what I regard as the chief purpose of the bill, which is to limit the hours of labor of all children employed in these industries, under 16 years of age, to eight hours per day. The figures that he has given, however, have no application whatever to the vast number of children in many States who are permitted to work more than eight hours a day.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, Mr. President, I was reading from the report of the committee; and I shall read further on page 7:

With regard to the exemptions from this age limit—

I suppose that is what we were talking about—

Mr. CUMMINS. No. The figures which the Senator gave, if I may be permitted to make the suggestion to him, covered the children in those three States who are permitted to work in the forbidden industries of the age of 13 or under, but they have no relation whatever to the number of children throughout the United States who are permitted under the laws of their respective States to work more than eight hours a day. North Carolina, for instance, has a great many more children working in excess of eight hours a day than she has children under 13 years of age working; and there are a great many States whose labor laws permit children under 16 years of age to work 11 hours—possibly 11 hours is the limit—and I think there are several States which permit them to work longer than that.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, I do not want to draw any conclusions not warranted by this report; but I read this from page 7 of the report:

With regard to the exemptions from this age limit which still obtain in some of the States, it may be said that these are being rapidly repealed, it being almost universally claimed that such exemptions are against the best interests of the child, where the welfare of the child alone is considered.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has but to refer to his colleague from Georgia, who is on his right, to learn that the laws of Georgia permit children under 16 years of age to work more than 8 hours a day; and that is true of many other States.

Mr. BRYAN. I have given the number of children in those three States which the committee state were not satisfactory in their legislation—the number of children employed between 10 and 16 years of age in the various employments, and I think I gave the total number; at least I gave it as it is reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. But when the Senator referred to three States as being the only States that would be affected by this measure, I think he fell into an error, so far as permitting children under 14 years of age to labor in those industries generally. He may be right; but so far as permitting children under the age of 16 to work more than 8 hours a day, he is not right. There are three prohibitions in the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. First, that a child under 14 can work in these places; second, no child under 16 can work more than eight hours a day; and, third, no child under 16 will be permitted to work earlier than 6 o'clock in the morning nor later than 7 o'clock at night.

Mr. BRYAN. In order that there may be no false impression created, I will read again from the report of the committee, on page 11:

Taking the population figures of the country for 1910, it may be said that 89,242,314 out of 91,972,000 have declared for the 14-year age limit by State legislation; 86,496,694 have declared for the prohibition of night work for children under 16 years of age. In the States recognized as mining States 41,837,431 out of 53,565,917 have enacted the 16-year age limit as a standard for children employed in mines, while 52,551,796 people, a clear majority of all, have prescribed an eight-hour day for the employment of children under 16 years of age in factories, while several States, which have not yet reached the eight-hour day for children under 16, have a shorter working day for such children than for older workers.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a statement on page 12 of the report, which is as follows:

According to the census of 1910 there were 2,266 children under 14 years of age employed in mines and 15,401 between 14 and 16 years of age. There were 22,000 children under 14 years of age employed in manufacturing and mechanical occupations specified and 176,137 between 14 and 16 years of age who would be affected by the provision relating to the eight-hour day and to the prohibition of night work.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, if the Senator from Florida will look on page 10, under paragraph (c), headed "Eight-hour day under 16 in factories and canneries," he will find the list of States, 19 in number, whose laws prohibit children under 16 from working more than eight hours a day. The other 29 do not prohibit them.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, three States were selected out of the States which had not satisfactory child-labor laws or had not made efforts in that direction which, in the opinion of the committee, were satisfactory, and they are referred to in the report and were referred to by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] in his address. I was undertaking to find out how many children in those States were affected. That was the purpose I had in reading the figures.

The second reason the committee gives for urging legislation is found on page 12, as follows:

In some of the States there is only a slight pretense of enforcement; the power of factory inspection is denied the proper officials and the appropriations for the enforcement of the law are also withheld.

Mr. President, that means to say that the States themselves do not enforce their laws, and therefore Congress will pass and enforce its own act. It is claimed that the States, although in the first place many of them make proper laws, will not enforce them. That is a pretty serious criticism of the States of this Union. I believe that if the time ever comes when the States will not enforce their laws and that the enforcement of them must be had by Congress, then we will have to change our form of Government. But, Mr. President, not all the laws of the States and not all the laws of Congress are obeyed; men violate laws; and it would be so much easier to enforce laws bearing directly upon the things to be affected than in this roundabout way, under which you must have a large number of inspectors hunting the channels of interstate commerce for a bolt of cotton cloth, for instance.

The next reason given is that the conventions of the two great parties have indorsed this bill. Well, Mr. President, if we put it upon that ground, I say that, in my judgment, the conventions had better content themselves with dealing with questions of general policy. In neither of the conventions can constitutional questions be discussed under the most favorable circumstances. The Democratic convention indorsed the House bill; but we are to vote not for the House bill but for a Senate substitute for the House bill, which shows that there is nothing in that contention.

Mr. President, I have already said this is not honest legislation. It is to be acted upon here without due regard being had for constitutional requirements, and is then to be passed on to the courts. If this legislation shall be upheld by the courts then the States will have no rights reserved to them worthy of mention.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I have here brief communications on the subject of child-labor legislation from three very able and thoughtful men, well known throughout the country—ex-President Charles W. Eliot, of Harvard University; Dr. Stephen S. Wise, the distinguished rabbi of New York; and Dr. Lyman Abbott, who is well known—all of which I should like to have read and printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

HON. JOHN W. KERN.

ASTICOU, ME., July 21, 1916.

MY DEAR SIR: I venture to express the opinion that in view of the coming presidential election it would be very unwise to postpone the passage of the child-labor bill until December next. The Democratic Party needs the support next November of the numerous Republicans and Progressives who are interested in the child-labor legislation. The party has nothing to lose by passing the bill, and possibly much to gain.

Sincerely, yours,

CHARLES W. ELIOT.

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., July 21, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR KERN: You know better than I the importance of passing the child-labor bill without delay. The professions of the platform will seem hollow, indeed, if at the behest of southern Senators the bill remains unpassed. The bill is of supreme importance in itself. Its passage may be decisive in respect to the fortunes of the party.

Faithfully, yours,

STEPHEN S. WISE.

OGUNQUIT, ME., July 24, 1916.

HON. JOHN W. KERN,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Being probably in favor of the passage of the Federal child-labor law, we beg you to give it your favorable consideration, and we very much hope that such a bill will be passed at this session.

LYMAN ABBOTT.

Mr. and Mrs. HERBERT LEE ABBOTT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to have the first communication read again.

The Secretary read as follows:

ASTICOU, ME., July 21, 1916.

MY DEAR SIR: I venture to express the opinion that in view of the coming presidential election it would be very unwise to postpone the passage of the child-labor bill until December next. The Democratic Party needs the support next November of the numerous Republicans and Progressives who are interested in the child-labor legislation. The party has nothing to lose by passing the bill, and possibly much to gain.

Sincerely, yours,

CHARLES W. ELIOT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. By whom is that signed?

The SECRETARY. By Charles W. Eliot.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I have listened to this debate with a great deal of interest and considerable edification. It involves an issue which, I think, affects profoundly the welfare of this country and the welfare of its people. I have just heard read at the desk the communications stating that child-labor legislation is a matter of great consequence to the Democratic Party in the present campaign. I agree with what has been said in that respect. I believe that any party intrusted with power that fails to heed the people's demand for this sort of legislation will have the consequences of not passing proper legislation along this line visited upon its head. I hope, however, that this will not be a mere party question. I desire to speak of the matter from a somewhat higher and broader point of view. In the few minutes which I am going to consume I wish to speak of the merits of the proposition and endeavor to meet some of the objections, if I can, which have been raised against this bill.

One remarkable thing about the debate on this bill has been the unanimity with which Senators have risen to their feet and said that they agreed with the fundamental principle underlying this bill, namely, legislation that should prohibit or at least reduce to a minimum child labor. I do not believe there is one Senator who has risen on the floor to argue that child labor is a good thing or that child labor in this country has anything but a demoralizing influence upon the welfare of the country; in fact, almost every Senator has prefaced his remarks with the statement that if the Government of the United States, the Congress of the United States, could prohibit child labor, then it should be done; and if I understood the arguments of Senators and their position correctly, I understand them to mean that if it were not for constitutional objections they would not only vote for this bill but would speak in favor of it and give it their most cordial and hearty support.

I do not believe that that statement will be challenged. I think it can be said, without fear of successful contradiction, that the Senate and the House of Representatives, almost to a man, agree that if Congress has the power to prohibit child labor in this country it should pass such a law; and the only objections that have been raised by Senators, either upon this side of the Chamber or upon the other side, have been that they fear Congress has not the constitutional power to do so. Further than that, I think this discussion has brought the issue down to a few very narrow points.

It has been conceded here, I think, that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the Congress may legislate in regard to interstate commerce; that it may pass laws regulating commerce, and that it has passed constitutional laws regulating commerce between the States; but that the only argument which has been made along that line is that nothing of the precise nature of this bill has ever come before the Supreme Court of the United States for adjudication. They say that while laws have been enacted prohibiting things evil or bad in themselves from being admitted from any State into another, never before has Congress passed a law and its constitutionality been upheld where it goes back of the act of commerce itself, namely, to the production of the article. So it would seem that the opponents of this bill, so far as its constitutionality is concerned, take this position: That while a law would be constitutional, and that legislation of this kind would be constitutional, if the thing of itself, the article itself, were inherently bad, if the commodity to be sent into another State were of such a nature that the very introduction itself would exert a sinister or bad influence upon the State into which it was being admitted, yet that this bill goes further than that and proceeds to prohibit trade upon articles good and wholesome in themselves.

I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] made that point—that never had a bill been passed regulating commerce which went back to the question of its manufacture, instead of being attached only to the thing itself or to the traffic in the thing itself. I think that point was sufficiently answered by the Senator from Iowa, who pointed to the act which prohibits and forbids the commerce in trust-made articles from one State to another. I understand that we have a law which forbids interstate commerce in trust-made goods, goods made illegally, goods made contrary to the antitrust law. There at least is one example. Now, suppose a trust manufactures any article, whether it be tobacco or anything of that kind, bread-stuffs, crackers—take crackers, for instance—I do not know whether there is a cracker trust or not, but if there is, the law prohibits interstate commerce in those crackers. The crackers themselves are not any worse than any other crackers made by a concern not in the trust; and yet it is conceded here, I think, that we have a right to prohibit interstate commerce upon such crackers. I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] admitted that in that case the law would hold good. Now, would not a law hold good, for instance, that forbade interstate commerce in stolen goods? Suppose some of the States had no criminal laws whatever affecting the sale of stolen goods. Would it not be incumbent upon Congress to prohibit interstate commerce in stolen goods? The goods would not be any worse because they were stolen. They might be articles of clothing; they might be foodstuffs, or things of that kind; and yet Congress could well regulate or suppress the sending of stolen goods from one State into another, notwithstanding that the articles in and of themselves were entirely innocent or, in fact, wholesome in their character or even might be necessities of life.

Take the smuggling of goods: Could we not pass a law prohibiting interstate commerce in smuggled goods?

Of course Senators can say that that power would rest upon and be necessarily incident to the power that we have to levy imposts and duties. That may be true; but why have we a right to forbid the shipment of these goods in interstate commerce, if we accept the arguments of the Senators, who say that we can not do indirectly what we can not do directly, and who say that if a thing is not bad in itself we have no right to forbid the shipment thereof from one State to another? Here, then, is another instance where the shipment of goods might be prohibited, even though the goods were no worse for having been smuggled. The bread does not turn to stone or poison even though smuggled. It is of the same quality that it was before, and yet we can prohibit its shipment into another State. The same is true of any other article that has been smuggled, and yet we could pass a law forbidding interstate commerce in stolen or smuggled goods. Would the Senator from Florida, for instance, say that it was a fraud just because we used the instrumentalities within our hands to forbid the interchange of such goods in order to promote the advancement of a sound public policy?

Take, for instance, the illustration of stolen goods. We have not any national laws against stealing as such. We have not national laws forbidding "fences" or punishing the receivers of stolen goods. It is not at all in the jurisdiction of Congress; and yet, at the same time, would anybody claim that we could not pass a law forbidding the sending of stolen goods from one State to another?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HUSTING. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to ask the Senator if he can not see a distinction between the power of Congress, for instance, to protect its commerce against smuggling and against theft and the exercise of that power in connection with an article that is unlawful and that is condemned as an article of commerce, and on the other hand the exercise of that power with reference to goods that have none of these features in connection with them at all?

Mr. HUSTING. I will say to the Senator from Florida that no two cases are alike. No two propositions can be alike unless they are identical. There is always some distinction; but I want to ask the Senator from Florida whether there is any distinction in principle between the forbidding of commerce in stolen goods, so far as the quality of those goods are concerned, and the point the Senator has made here that this had nothing to do with commerce, and Congress had no power to prohibit interstate commerce in certain things unless the thing of itself was inherently bad? The only point that I am trying to make is that it is not a necessary essential to a law regulating commerce that the thing itself shall be bad, but what goes before it can be considered. That which in our judgment violates good, sound public policy in the production of the thing or in the exchange of it is a factor to be considered, and not only gives us the constitutional power but makes it our duty to legislate in relation to its transportation.

I should like to say to the distinguished Senator from Florida that in the case of trust-made articles, before the trust laws were passed there was nothing inherently bad, so far as laws were concerned, about trust-made articles; and yet Congress passed a law forbidding trusts, and passed a law forbidding the transportation of trust-made articles in interstate commerce. How did it come about that that tainted it? Because Congress decided that it was contrary to sound public policy to have trusts, and that since it was contrary to sound public policy to have trusts, that every means within our command should be brought to bear to prevent such a trust from taking advantage of the arteries or instrumentalities of interstate commerce, and that we could follow their goods—goods made contrary to law, goods made contrary to sound public policy, business run contrary to sound public policy—and say, "You shall not cross the State line. You will not be permitted to do an interstate business in goods manufactured at the expense and interest of a sound public policy."

One of the Senators—I believe it was the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]—said that it was a fraud for the Government of the United States, pretending to want to regulate commerce, to go back of that and regulate, and in fact prohibit, child labor in certain States. The same argument could be made against the antitrust laws. If it is a fraud to do this here and now, then it was a fraud for Congress to pass laws prohibiting the shipment of trust-made articles between the States, for those laws were aimed, not at the commerce, not at the interchange alone, but were aimed right back at the trusts which manufactured the product. I can not see any distinction in principle between the two cases.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me that in one instance the Senator mentions, the article which is supposed to move in interstate commerce is an outlaw of commerce. That is a different case from a case dealing with articles that are in themselves pure and moral and otherwise untainted in any way and can not be stigmatized in any way. In the other case the Senator mentions, about preventing combinations and trusts, the act of Congress has reference to restraint of trade. It is the movement of those articles in trade that is prohibited; not that it has to do with the hours of labor, or other methods of manufacturing the article. The whole field that is covered there is one of trade and commerce.

Mr. HUSTING. I do not quite follow the Senator in his reasoning. I do not quite understand the point the Senator is trying to make, except that I want to ask this, in reply to the Senator's statement that the trust-made articles are outlawed: Why are they outlawed? They are outlawed because Congress passed a law outlawing them to the extent that they can not cross the line of another State. And why? Not because the goods are harmful in themselves, but only because they were manufactured by agencies—instrumentalities not permitted by law to be used in the manufacture of articles so as to permit them to be shipped between the States. In one case commodities manufactured by unlawful trusts, in the other by children not lawfully authorized to perform such work. Aside from that, trust-made articles are not outlawed in the State where manufactured. They can be sold within the State in both cases as before prohibitory laws were passed by Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had reference in that instance to the articles that were smuggled or stolen, which the Senator spoke of in the first reference he made.

Mr. HUSTING. I will point, first, to the trust-made proposition. Those articles are not outlawed. They are permitted to be sold within the State. They have the freedom of the marts of trade within the State. The goods are just as wholesome as any other. In fact, the trusts claim that they are better and more wholesome; and yet we have used the power of Congress to say: "You shall not cross the line and put those goods in another State." Why? "Because we think it is against sound public policy for you to engage in those practices in manufacturing what we think is contrary to public policy. If you dissolve yourselves, and manufacture the same goods with the same machinery and with the same laborers, this inhibition will be withdrawn, and your goods can be sold between the States, as they always have been."

In the case of the stolen goods, so far as any law of the United States goes, they are not outlawed. The goods themselves are not outlawed within the State. They can be sold within the State. Of course I presume every State has a law prohibiting people from engaging in the purchase of stolen goods, but suppose a State had not any such law and you had the same condition of affairs, could we not stop it by congressional action just the same?

Now, another word in reply to the charge that we are engaged in a hypocritical act in pretending to legislate to regulate commerce when in fact we are trying to stop child labor. In other words, we are engaged in a heinous conspiracy or a hypocritical conspiracy to do what? Why, to pass a law that the Members of Congress almost to a man admit would have a wholesome and beneficial influence on the country. We are held up to scorn before our own eyes because we want to do a good thing. The charge is made that we want to violate our oath of office; and the Senator from Florida claims that if we have any doubt of the constitutionality of an act—I think he went even further and said that even if we think that it possibly may not be constitutional—we have no right to pass this sort of a bill.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. What does the Senator from Wisconsin understand the object and purpose of this bill to be?

Mr. HUSTING. The object of this bill is to prevent the shipment of goods made contrary to what we consider a good, sound public policy.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator does not understand, then, that it is for the purpose of preventing child labor?

Mr. HUSTING. I think its effect would be that—at least, to reduce the evils of child labor.

Mr. WORKS. We may just as well be fair and sincere about this matter. Does not the Senator know that the primary object of the bill is to prevent child labor; that the other object is only incidental?

Mr. HUSTING. I will say that undoubtedly the friends of this bill are against child labor. They are against the shipment of goods made in States contrary to the provisions of this law from being shipped into any other State.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator understands that there would be no such legislation as this as against the transportation of goods that were not manufactured by child labor, does he not?

Mr. HUSTING. Why, no more than there ever would have been a law against the shipment of trust-made goods in interstate commerce if there had not been any trusts, and if we had made no laws prohibiting trusts—certainly not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HUSTING. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will allow me to do so, I should like to answer the Senator from Nevada. I read from the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, from the testimony of Prof. Parkinson, of Columbia University, who urged the passage of the bill before the committee. He says, on page 121:

The purpose of the bill is to withdraw the instrumentalities and facilities of interstate commerce from the employer or manufacturer who makes use of child labor in the manufacture of his products.

He says further:

The purpose is to prohibit the commerce in the interest of withdrawing Federal agencies from the continuance of a profitable market for the products of child labor, and I do not hesitate for a minute to assert that the underlying purpose of this legislation is to stamp out child labor.

He also says:

The means employed is the exercise by Congress of a power vested in it, which the Supreme Court of the United States has held was vested in it, to be exercised among other purposes for the general welfare of the country.

Mr. HUSTING. I will say to the Senator, speaking for myself alone, that the object of this bill reaches back to the evils of child labor. It would not be fair for me to say, nor would it be accurate for me to say, that it is for the purpose of preventing child labor in the States, because there is nothing in the bill that prevents or prohibits child labor in those States. It makes child labor unprofitable. It is going to minimize the evils of child labor. That is the object that I shall have, at least, in voting for the bill—to discourage as much as possible child labor in the country, because I believe it should be discouraged and minimized as much as possible if not entirely prevented.

Coming back to the constitutional proposition, I think there is far more danger of this body and of every State legislature of the United States not doing its full duty within the Constitution than there has ever been of its trying to do its duty beyond the authority of the Constitution. My experience in this body has been brief; but I have seen here, or at least in the legislature of my State, no matter of a remedial nature or of a constructive nature has been looked forward to but that the bugaboo of the Constitution was held menacingly over the head of any man that dared to talk in favor of it. Whenever an act of great merit comes up, and everybody is saying, "Why, it is a fine thing; it is a good thing; it is a wholesome thing; it should be passed," it is replied: "But you can not do it, because the Constitution will not let you." You can go back to the income tax, you can go back to every great thing that the Sixty-third Congress accomplished, and I think you will find very few of those measures but that were assailed as unconstitutional. The constitutional whip has been flourished over the head of almost everybody who has endeavored to do something which in his judgment would relieve certain serious conditions in this country.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator permit me to inquire whether he has any doubt about the constitutional power of the legislatures of the various States to deal with this subject? The Senator suggests that he is in favor of minimizing the evils of child labor. I do not think he will find anybody who is opposing him on that proposition; but will the Senator deny that the States are dealing with the situation and that they are capable of doing so under their constitutions?

Mr. HUSTING. I will say to the Senator that that brings another thought to my mind, and I am glad the Senator asked the question. It is true that some States have dealt with it and some have enforced the provisions in regard to child labor, while others have not. I know, however, that in my State and in my legislature when the child-labor proposition was approached, when the income tax was approached, or any other similar measure was approached, it was held up to us that we were going to ruin our own manufacturers by passing laws in Wisconsin which would render manufacturing less profitable, while in the State right next to it, where these things were not prohibited, they would enjoy increased profits by reason of not passing this legislation. So we are now confronted with that argument, and that is a stock argument used in every legislature in the country. I know it was used with effect in my own State: "You can not do this, because Illinois does not do it, or Indiana does not do it, or North Carolina does not do it, or Florida does not do it; and if you are going to make our manufacturers compete against these other men, who have the freedom of employing child labor in their mills, and make us sell our goods in competition with theirs, you are going to ruin us. You must not do it."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has not the State of Wisconsin a good child-labor law?

Mr. HUSTING. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is it not just as good in its provisions as this Federal law would be?

Mr. HUSTING. I will say that the law of Wisconsin is fairly satisfactory to Wisconsin.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And the State of Wisconsin, in spite of the opposition that was made to the passage of it on the grounds stated by the Senator, did in fact have the courage and the good sense to enact a proper child-labor law?

Mr. HUSTING. Yes, it did; but it did it notwithstanding the things that were put up in front of it. I say that it is wrong, in a sense, or, at least, unfortunate, to subject one State to certain things in manufacturing competition with other States who do not choose to adopt the same laws and the same remedies and thus place them in a disadvantageous position, and in many cases actually deter—if it does not altogether prevent—humanitarian and wise legislation of this kind from being enacted.

Take, for instance, two States. One of them possesses a humane labor law, an eight-hour-a-day law, or a child-labor or any other kind of a law of that kind, and the State next to it does not wish to follow it. Here is one State struggling to render its conditions humane, to render its workingmen efficient, and here they are pulling the ground right from under the feet of their own manufacturers, putting them at a disadvantage in competition with the surrounding States. Now, that may be answered by saying: "Well, you increase the efficiency of your own people, and you will soon be in a condition to compete with the next State," and there is much force in that. That would be true altogether if there were not always a new crop of children growing up to take the place of those who have been cast into the scrapheap with the discard. Children are not looked upon in some States as anything that is worth money. They can produce lots more to take their place, and one set of children can go through the mines and the mills with the resultant loss of efficiency, of health, of morals, and there will be another crowd of children ready to take their place to go through the same treadmill and meet the same fate. It does not harm the manufacturers that produce these results, because they can get new recruits at the same price and under the same conditions; but I will tell you what it does affect, Mr. President. It affects the country at large, which depends upon the efficiency, health, and the morals of the race; and in my judgment that makes it a national question—a question with which we not only have a right to deal, but with which it is our duty to deal, in order to produce a race of men and women in this country who will be able to compete with all the world, as we are doing and will more and more have to compete with all the world.

So we might well look this thing squarely in the face. I think more and more this country will have to take steps that are necessary and with relation to which the world is beginning to recognize as necessary and essential to the upbuilding of the country and its people. The laws of efficiency are being applied in every country. Countries that are looked upon as leaders of the world in efficiency long ago had adopted measures calculated to conserve the labor, the lives, and the health of the people. There was a time in the past when these laws were not only unnecessary but inadvisable, when a man would work under the eyes of his principal and came in personal contact with his chief. So whether it was in mine or field or factory the common, ordinary instincts of human feeling, of human generosity, of humanity itself were a sufficient safeguard for the right of the workman against his employer.

If the same condition obtained to-day which obtained 50 years ago, there would not be any need for changing that condition any more than there was 50 years ago. Everybody got along first-rate 50 years ago. There was not any demand for child-labor laws or labor laws of any kind. Why? Not because we were not just as enlightened then, but because there was no necessity for them then, and we wisely adopted the policy of not interfering with old practices until old conditions made such changes necessary. But to-day how many men know the man who owns the factory in which they work? How many employees know the men who own the mine? How many men ever see their employer, their boss, in the course of their career? Not many. I venture to say that some men work, for instance, in the mines and factories for men whom they never saw, do now know, nor are they known by their employer.

Now, what does the employer, the ordinary stockholder, personally do or care for his men who work for the corporation in which he holds stock? All he wants is the demand from officers of his company that they shall operate the plant at a profit, and in the effort to operate the plant at a profit laws of humanity, laws divine, and laws human, I may also say, must oftentimes give way to the demand for profit in the operation of these things. So in the course of time men found it necessary to band themselves together for their mutual protection, and so we have the general labor problems and the child-labor problem coming up before us to-day.

I have here the proposed amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I am going to vote against it, because I believe it is uncalled for, at least in part, and that there is no demand or reason for it, and for the reasons, largely, I have just stated, namely, that it relates to conditions as old as the country itself. I will read the proposed amendment, or a part of it, rather:

Or any article or commodity the product of any farm which is the material for the product of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment in the United States upon which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work or children between the ages of 14 and 16 years have been employed or permitted to work more than 11 hours a day.

Mr. President, I do not think we ought to interfere unnecessarily between father and child. That is not within the purview of this bill. I think that a father, especially one who works a farm, almost without exception—of course there are exceptions to all rules—will not work his children unduly nor overwork them. That is an entirely different proposition. As to the question of labor about a farm, whether it is sitting upon a hayrack or some other employment which the father thinks is fit for his son, the condition has not changed materially in the last 75 or 100 years. That is not the condition which is calling for a remedy here. The bill before the Senate is a bill to meet conditions which have radically changed in the last 50 or 75 years. The employer—generally speaking, the stockholder—no longer has any personal interest in his men. There is no personal contact between the employer and the employee. The factories have become complex. The use of machinery has changed conditions. Piecework and stop watches have come into vogue and a thousand other things that make it now necessary for the State or the Nation to step in and intervene and protect the employee from the natural and inevitable results of these changed conditions.

So I say I am favoring this bill because the time has come when this Government, in its own defense, for its own benefit, must demand that children shall be permitted to have their opportunities in life, to have their opportunity to mature, with their vigor and morality and efficiency unimpaired, that the children may have a chance to live and become men and women who will be a source of strength and not of weakness to their country.

I regret conditions have changed. There is no longer any personal contract between the employer and the employee at all, and the factories have become so complex, the use of the machinery has so changed the conditions that it is necessary for the State or the Nation to step in and intervene and protect the employees from the natural result of these changed conditions. So, I say, I am favoring the bill myself. The time has come when this Government in its own defense, for its own benefit and the children, will be permitted to have their chances in life so that it will insure a race of men and women hardy enough, virtuous enough, and industrious enough, and able enough to perpetuate this country.

The children growing up in this country of to-day are the men and women of to-morrow. The boys of 12 and 13 and 14 of to-day are the defenders of their country to-morrow. Anything which is calculated to weaken them, anything which is calculated to impair either their efficiency industrially or their efficiency morally becomes a matter of national concern. The position I take is that it will not do for any State to say: "This is no concern of the Nation; this is none of the Nation's business; this, I claim, that you shall permit us to attend to, and us alone, regardless of its effect upon the Nation."

There is no disguising the fact that things have been moving along more and more in the direction of the strengthening of the national bonds. Look over the statute books and behold the legislation of the last 10 or 15 years. No one can be blind to the fact that it is considered necessary; nay, absolutely essential to the perpetuation of this Nation, for the Nation to put itself in a position where it can defend itself, where it can make laws to protect itself as a whole, where it can perpetuate itself; and I think that that is being done and can be done without violating any principle or letter of the Constitution. There is no danger here, in my judgment, of the National Government overstepping its constitutional bounds.

There were some inquiries directed here the other day by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] which would seem to indicate that that Senator had an idea that, if the National Congress passes a law of this kind, it then can do anything it pleases in the way of legislation. I remember one question that was put was to this effect, whether if Congress passed a law forbidding the shipment of goods not manufactured by organized labor that that would be constitutional also. If I understand the question correctly, from the cases that have been cited and the arguments that have been made by distinguished and able Senators on this floor, I do not understand that anyone contends or argues that Congress can do anything it wishes. I think their arguments sustain this proposition, that whatever police power we have in connection with interstate commerce can go no further and can not be greater than that of the State itself.

The State police powers are undefined. No court has ever set out to define the police power of any State. One eminent judge defined the police power as "the power to do an unconstitutional thing."

If there is such a police power and such a right, the States have always exercised it notwithstanding but subject to the limitations and restrictions of the Constitution. Scarcely any police power has ever been exercised by the State but what its constitutionality has been questioned, and rightfully so, because it is a power which should be held strictly within constitutional limits. There must be bounds, for instance, beyond which the State can not exercise the police power. There must be back of it a public opinion which necessitates its exercise, because many great questions never could have been successfully legislated for or against in States if the public demand and public pressure had not been back of them. Many laws are passed in response to a public demand, and in a country like this the people rule themselves and insist on getting what they ask. Of course it should and must be a demand not founded on caprice or bias or prejudice of the moment, but upon a demand founded on justice and necessity. It must have its roots stuck deep into the soil of humanity and nurtured by wisdom and prudence and intelligence. And who will say that the nation-wide demand for this child-labor legislation is not such a demand as I have just adverted to.

There is no question that from time to time new matters come up that are considered proper subjects for police regulation; we all know that to be the fact. Have the people of the States been deprived of their rights because the State has exercised its police power? No. At every session of the legislature in some if not all of the States measures have passed which depend for their validity on the rightful exercise of the police power. So this legislation might take away, just the same as they claim the National Congress may take away, the individual liberties of the people through the exercise of the police power.

When anybody complains that there is no definition limiting the exercise of the police power on the part of the United States, I say, of course not; no more than there is over the exercise of the police power on the part of any State itself. Each has unlimited right to exercise its police power within the control and within the confines of constitutional authority. But it is not defined. Every case has to stand on its own feet; and when the people fear, think, or believe, or any citizen fears, thinks, or believes, that the police power is encroaching upon his personal rights or liberty, as police powers always do encroach upon the liberty or license of the individual, the only way to stop it and to draw a ring around it is through the constituted authority, namely, the Supreme Court.

So, if any Senator asks what are the bounds of police power in the Congress, I say exactly the same bounds as that of the States; surely no greater.

Now, can the State pass a law prohibiting the manufacture of any goods within the State of Wisconsin, we will say, or of some State which prohibits the sale of any goods made by any labor organization? Of course, it can not. Neither can the United States Congress pass a law to do the same thing, because the measure of its power is the measure of the power of the whole State to take care of its interests. Moreover, it can not exercise the power directly as the State can. It can only exercise in this instance through a law affecting interstate commerce which minimizes many and manyfold the real power of a State to legislate upon the subject of child labor. Here it is removed, at least one step, and we can not do it except through the exercise of the rights of power and control over the interstate commerce.

The United States has got control over interstate commerce. It has exercised such control in many and many an instance by the passage of laws claimed by opponents to be unconstitutional but now held good and wholesome and also constitutional. We have an Interstate Commerce Commission which protects shippers in their rights so that they can not be discriminated against as to rates. We have an Interstate Commerce Commission that compels common carriers to give service to the people. The people were jealous of the shippers' rights, and that is why the Interstate Commerce Commission was established, to see that shippers could ship their goods and not be robbed by common carriers, and that there should be a fair and equal system of exchange of commodities between the States upon terms nondiscriminatory. All these things have been done through the Interstate Commerce Commission, or at least we pretend that we are doing them, only if we are exercising this guardianship, as it were, this suzerainty or this protectorate over the shipper, have we not a right to tell him that the goods he desires to ship shall at least be produced and manufactured and exchanged in accordance with what the country believes to be sound public policy and not repugnant to the laws of the State and Nation.

Again, if this law should be passed it can only pass by a majority of both Houses, and I say again that hearing the discussion here upon the floor by the opponents of the bill I am satisfied in my own mind that every Senator here thinks and believes that children of the ages mentioned in the bill ought not to be permitted to go into quarries and mines, into workshops and factories at those tender years, and be stunted and deformed and degenerated before they reach mature age.

It seems to me it must be the opinion of every Senator and every Member of Congress that a child should be treated with the same consideration at least as that accorded the dumb beast. What farmer or driver puts a harness and a collar on a yearling colt and expects him to haul a load to market? What would Senators think of any employer or user of dumb animals who uses them in such a manner as to destroy their usefulness before they arrive at an age when they in fact only could naturally begin to become useful?

In applying that sort of mean consideration to the subject, that purely of expediency and of policy, how can Senators think for a moment a good result can follow from such a bad practice as this? I venture to say that if slavery had not been wiped out in this country—that if the practice still obtained and the children of 12 and 14 years cost money and had to be purchased like horses and cattle—I am not referring now to any sectional part of the country; I am talking now of anybody in the world who would have to buy human labor as he buys his horses and his mules—would he think of putting for a moment such a human instrument as that where it would be old and useless before maturity had set in? I do not believe that any man who had any business sense and business sagacity would buy labor if he had to pay cash for the labor and take care of it and support it after it became useless, would think of doing any of these things that this act forbids.

Now, let us see what this bill is about. It provides—

That no producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any article or commodity the product of any mine or quarry, situated in the United States, in which within 30 days prior to the time of the removal of such product therefrom children under the age of 16 years have been employed or permitted to work, or any article or commodity the product of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, situated in the United States, in which within 30 days prior to the removal of such product therefrom children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work—

Now, in a mine or quarry, what Senator on the floor will say that any boy under 16 years old ought to be sunk down into the bottomless pit of a mine or any quarry and labor there? To put a child just beginning to show the signs of manhood down at labor thousands of feet below the surface, to put him in a quarry to bend his back and strain his body in work of that kind, shocks the ordinary sense and feelings of mankind. Can it be that there is necessity for this in this country? Are we so hard up for material with which to do our labor that we must rob the cradle for the human commodity necessary to do our work? This bill seeks to discourage such a practice. That is all. That is the most severe thing this bill seeks to do.

All this bill first seeks to do is to try to prevent a boy under 16 years of age from being engaged in a mine or quarry. Do you think that if a law were passed that no yearling colt should be hitched to a wagon containing two tons of coal and be made to pull two tons of coal it would not be considered a pretty humane law? But it would not be necessary to pass it, because no man would want his animal to do that work under such conditions. He would rise up indignant at even such a suggestion and would denounce it as inhuman. Indeed, the humane societies would stop it if he tried to do it.

Yet when we say here that no miner or quarryman shall take anybody's boy under the age of 16 and put him to work and then ship his product into another State, then we are doing something wrong—then we are unreasonably interfering with the rights of the State and our own citizens. What are the rights of the State? Is it the right of a State to insist that the boys of 15 years of age shall go down into the mines if they want them to do so, or if somebody wants to hire them, and let them work themselves to death or let them work themselves into such a shape that when they arrive at the years of real usefulness, or rather at years which otherwise would have been years of real usefulness, their usefulness is ended, and they become a public charge and are thrown upon the community for their living and support?

The question was asked a little while ago, "What are you going to do with boys if they can not work in mines or quarries until they are 16 years of age?" I might answer that by asking another question, "What are you going to do with the boys who have worked in the mines and quarries and at an early age have been thrown upon the scrap heap of useless things, who have stunted themselves, who become deteriorated both in mind and body, and who become your criminals and your outcasts in society, and who are thrown upon the country for their support?"

But more than that, why should a boy of less than 16 years of age have to go down into a quarry or mine to make a living? Why can not he work somewhere else in a place more fitted for his ability, for his strength, for his whole moral and physical make-up? Mines and quarries are not the only places of employment. Will these boys have no chance when they are above the age of 14 to get any other work except to go into a mine or quarry? Is that an unreasonable restriction to say that he can not work in such occupation? Is the provision of the statute going to make every boy between the ages of 14 and 16 a loafer, an idler? Is there anything in this bill which does not permit any boy to go into any other employment except that?

I say I think it is rather idle to claim that because a boy can not go into the mines and into the quarries that thereby he becomes a public charge or a loafer and idler for the period of two years.

There are exceptions to all rules. It might be sometimes that a hardship would be placed upon a dependent mother whose husband had been killed in the mines not to let the boy temporarily take his father's place and earn something in support of his mother. But it does seem to me as though that boy could find employment elsewhere and support his mother in some other way than in the way that means his certain deterioration both physically and otherwise or something worse. What mother would want her boy to do this work? What country ought not to feel ashamed to permit conditions to exist that would compel a boy of 14 or 15 to work in a mine to keep his mother from starving? An enlightened self-interest should move the country to remedy such conditions rather than to lower and degrade its future men by such practices of employment. Now what further does the bill provide?

Or any article or commodity the product of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, situated in the United States, in which within 30 days prior to the removal of such product therefrom children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 years and 16 years have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day, or more than six days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock postmeridian, or before the hour of 6 o'clock antemeridian.

Mr. President, I want to submit that that is a reasonable restriction. Who would have children under 14 years of age to work in any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment? I pause for a reply. He is not fit to work in any such establishments as that.

Still, there are plenty of avenues open for a child who must work to help his mother. Those are not so comprehensive that they close every avenue of employment. On the contrary, all the other avenues are still open for such a boy in such a stress of circumstances to get employment if he wants it, and for which he is better fitted and better qualified.

But again I ask, under the present conditions who is going to take care of a boy of 14 years, or under that age, who because he is permitted to work in a mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, and thus to work himself out, becomes a charge upon a cruel and improvident country?

Mr. President, I do not think any country that expects to have a future, that expects to make a place for itself and to permanently keep it, has any right to have conditions obtain within its borders where it is necessary for any 14-year-old boy to support a dependent mother or where a 16-year-old boy has to go into a mine or a quarry. I say that any nation that holds up its hands and refuses to put the protection of the law about children of 16 years or less, any nation that fails to do its duty in protecting its seedlings that are to grow up into sturdy trees, is disgracing itself in hiding itself behind its own Constitution and in refusing to do something that humanity demands and that an enlightened self-interest demands.

It would seem to me superfluous to point out to a generous and humane people that the laws of humanity—the dictates of common, ordinary humanity—ought to be against such conditions and such a practice. We ought to be able to rest there when we point out that a man would not use his horse or his ox as harshly as we permit the children of this country to be used. As I said a moment ago, no wise man would put the collar on the neck of the yearling colt and make him drag a load intended for a full-grown horse. I say the mere fact alone that it is wrong to compel children of 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 years of age to sustain themselves ought to be sufficient to make us want to pass this bill.

We have laws for the protection of dumb beasts. We do not permit a man, in the exercise of personal liberty, to beat his horse or abuse his horse or put a load on him that he can not carry without injury to himself. In the exercise of the police power we stop him, do we not? We are sending millions and millions of dollars across the ocean in the name of humanity to alleviate the sufferings of people who are suffering not because of any fault of ours. This Nation, much maligned as it is and has been during this European trouble, at least, to my mind, has shown the highest spirit of disinterestedness, has played the good Samaritan across the ocean; has poured its millions and its plenty into the lap of want and misery over in Belgium, in Poland, and in other countries. We have been held up as a sordid, and avaricious, and a dollar-loving people; and yet in all the world no nation has set the example which this great Nation has set in the treasures spent in the old world. We have been generous to a fault; we are humane; we have never turned a deaf ear to the cry of distress from any corner of the globe. We have done it, too, without expecting any return; we have done it because we are a generous people; and yet here in our midst—oftentimes thoughtlessly, it must be, because it can not be explained in any other way—we close our eyes to the sufferings, the privations, and the hardships of our own, and we close our eyes and become deaf to the clamors and pleadings of humanity in the administration of our own affairs and even of our own people.

Shall we not listen to the voice of the children, purely because of our humanity, of our generosity? That ought to be enough; but if that is not enough, then we ought to take into consideration that in dollars and cents, because of the material good that will come to us, because of the profit that will come to us, we ought to make a law conserving that greatest national asset, that greatest national resource, that asset and resource which is not only an asset and resource, but which is the very end of the Government itself.

Why have we a Government; why have we banded together the United States? I do not know, unless it was for the purpose of advancing our material and mutual interests. I can not conceive of any other end of government than to promote the happiness and prosperity of its people and that of humanity. This Government has no excuse for living, it has no excuse for its existence, unless it makes this enterprise or leads or conducts this enterprise in the interest of all of the people who make up this country. When men grow into public service and get into places of responsibility and power, is it not a part of their business to look out for those who can not look out for themselves? Is it not a part of our business to protect the very root and tree of our national existence? Is it true that we have a Constitution that is so framed that it permits us only to do things that are bad, things that are not going to work out for the interest of everybody; that only permits us to legislate when it is for some form of special interests, but which raises an insurmountable obstruction to every generous and humane effort that would attempt to flow out of this Chamber and out of this Congress? Are things constitutional only when they are bad or indifferent and unconstitutional only when they are good? Or is the Constitution an instrument which, back of it all, underlying it, which is the very root of it, has for a purpose the advancement of the race, the advancement of the Nation, the promoting the happiness and prosperity of all the people? Is not that what a government is for? If that is what a government is for, how can you construe a Constitution to be a permanent obstruction to carrying out the very end which we are all seeking? How can a Constitution be so construed as to impede and to prevent this Nation from doing what is necessary and what ought to be done for its own permanent good?

We all say this proposed legislation is for the permanent good. I say, again, the Senators who have spoken upon this question all concede that it is a good thing, that it will do all its friends claim for it; that it will build up the children into good, strong men and women. I say how can you construe the Constitution, then, to be an obstruction to all those kinds of things which are calculated and which it is admitted will promote the public good by legislation regulating what we will have to legislate? Of course there will surely be other things coming up here every moment over which we have the constitutional right to legislate.

If this Government lives to be 10,000 years old—which God grant that it may—there will be new things every year about which to legislate. New Senators will come here when we are gone, new Members will come to the other House who will have to deal with different problems from those with which we have to deal. Solomon has said: "There is no new thing under the sun"; but, congressionally, everything is new under the sun. This is an infant Government in point of age as compared with the history of the world; this is a new Government, compared with the history of the world; but it has been growing up into a magnificent institution based upon the Constitution. If that Constitution was made, however, so that it would outlive its usefulness in 20 years, or, if it is like the ordinary mortal, and is limited to threescore years and ten, and then is to die because it can not grow and mature and expand, we would have been dead long ago as a nation. We could not live now, and we never can continue to live as a nation, unless the Constitution is construed to be an ever-expanding, an ever-growing instrument that can take within it all that is good and keep out, or at least discourage, all that is wrong, to the end that this country may be built up into a country which its founders intended it to be, a country of, by, and for the people.

So I say the time is coming when we are going to have some more problems. I hope the time will come when we shall not find millionaires and paupers living on the same block. I do not believe there is any excuse for a condition of affairs which will permit men to own millions and permit a woman and her children to suffer starvation and distress within such narrow distances that their cries of distress may penetrate into the palaces of those owning the millions. That is not fair; that is not American, in my judgment. I think we all ought to recognize it as an evil that at some time we must correct, in part at least, in a proper way.

I say if a Government has any purpose to promote happiness and prosperity of its people it ought not to keep all of its favors for the favored few and thus enabling them to make or to inherit money in amounts away beyond the needs and demands of avarice and largely because of governmental favors extended. No one begrudges the fortunes enjoyed by some if within the bounds of reason and when earned or made by efforts or services of those enjoying it or of their descendants. But men do complain, and complain justly when the fortunes have been the result of laws passed for the benefit of a few for the very purpose of enabling them to reap where they have not sowed, and in so doing deprive the sower and the tiller of his just share of the fruits of his own labor. A fair division of profits and earnings is a growing demand that will become louder and louder and more insistent until it will be heeded.

One of the things that this Government will have to do in the next half century, I believe, will be to see to it that the men who toil may receive a fair proportion of the fruits of their own labor and that in their short travel through and along and upon this earthly sphere they may at least be assured of the means of making a living and a living wage, and that they may have an opportunity to have a family and to live with it; that they may not be compelled to toil so that when they rise in the morning they must rise before their children and their wives at home have arisen, and must toil so that when they reach home at night their children are in bed, as I know to be the case with the employees of many a factory in this country. It would seem to me that in a land like this "flowing with milk and honey" every man who works and is willing to work should find time to live, and that conditions should not be such that men—good men—should be compelled, as they are, to divide their days into three parts, namely, to sleep, work, and eat, and that they can spare no time in enjoying one constitutionally guaranteed right, viz, the pursuit of happiness. I think that every man ought to have an opportunity to raise his family, to educate them, and that at least he should have a chance and an opportunity to make good men and women of them.

So I say that these things—not immediately or perhaps entirely pertinent to this discussion—show that we have many, many problems to deal with, and when we have gone those who come after us will have their problems to deal with; but I hope that whatever may be done by this Congress and any other succeeding Congress will be to make conditions of humanity in general and your own people in particular just a little bit better when the individual Member of Congress comes out of it than they were when he got into it. I hope that this may be the aim of every Member, and I say that so long as I remain in this body I hope, to the extent of my very humble ability, I may be permitted to help in legislation which will make conditions just a little bit better than they were when I came here. That is the business, I submit, of those intrusted with the responsibility of government, if I may be permitted to say so. We have this inheritance handed to us, and it is not only our privilege, but it is our business and our duty, to see that it is carried forward and perpetuated in the interest and for the good of all the people. It is their Government; they are running it. Those who appear here only too briefly, who come and go upon the stage of this theater, momentarily intrusted with power—is it not their bounden duty, I ask, under their solemn oath to take care of the interests of the people who sent them here, to recognize that theirs is the first, last, and sole consideration within legal and constitutional limits to enact legislation that will inure to their benefit and to the benefit of posterity? What would be thought of trustees who, invested with a solemn trust, dissipate that trust or waste it or favor a certain few with the corpus of it, with the result that the cestui que trust finds that it has been distributed without rhyme or reason amongst those who already had more than they knew what to do with and deprived those who were justly entitled to their share?

I say the mere fact that this question has never specifically come before the Supreme Court is no reason to hold the pending bill unconstitutional. We could not have anything new under the sun in the way of legislation if we had to show a precedent for it. Has it come to such a stage that when Congress undertakes to pass a law the burden is on them to show that the proposed law is constitutional, or are we going to adhere to the sound practice and principle that every act is presumed to be constitutional until it is held to the contrary?

As I understand the underlying principles of legislation and of the duties and responsibilities, rights, and powers of the coordinate branches of the Government, every act passed by Congress is held to be constitutional unless it is clearly shown to the contrary, and that is so ex necessitate. The Supreme Court has been vested with power to declare an act unconstitutional; but instead of being the rule of the court that an act is unconstitutional unless Congress proves it constitutional, the very wholesome, salutary, and sound doctrine has prevailed that every act of Congress is considered constitutional unless clearly shown to the contrary. That is the only principle that we ought to adhere to. If we do not do so, if before we legislate on any important question we have to put ourselves in the fear and trembling of passing an unconstitutional statute, then the Supreme Court has become the censor and overlord of Congress itself, it has become the dictator of legislation, and Congress has become a mere debating society, whose legislation and whose pronouncements are no more important than those of the famous "three tailors of Tooley Street" in London. I say that when an act of Congress is aimed at a salutary end and is designed for a good purpose, according to the dictates of an enlightened self-interest as affecting a question or a subject matter with which the Constitution has invested them with power to deal, we should not say to ourselves, "We can not do this because it may be unconstitutional," or, to put it in another way, we should not say that a great constitutional question has arisen just because somebody says so. If the constitutionality of any act of Congress is going to be made a controlling consideration because somebody has challenged it and has said that it is unconstitutional, we might as well adjourn and go home now without any further attempt to legislate.

As I interpret my oath of office, when I swore to uphold the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, I became invested, with others, with power to make laws in the light of judicial decisions, in the light of practices and principles laid down in the past, and I shall assume that an act is constitutional unless I am morally satisfied that it is not. I am not going to let myself be driven away from a meritorious purpose, as I conceive it to be, just because the cry of wolf or the cry of unconstitutionality is raised.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the decisions of the Supreme Court which have been cited in the debate and the principles laid down in those decisions uphold the constitutionality of this proposed child-labor law. While, of course, there is always some distinction between tweedledum and tweedledum, it is a distinction without a difference many times, and I have tried to show in this discussion that in this bill we are legislating no differently in principle than we have done in other similar acts whose constitutionality has been upheld or has not been challenged. I say that, in my judgment, the Supreme Court will hold that this bill, if enacted into law, is constitutional; that it is within our right to pass it; that it is our duty to legislate along the line indicated in the interest of the Nation itself; that it is a matter that concerns intimately not only the welfare but the very life of the Nation itself; and that in the exercise of wise legislative discretion, in the exercise of a judgment which tells us that sound public policy demands this kind of legislation, the Supreme Court will not challenge our discretion or challenge our judgment. I think that they will hold it is a matter entirely of policy and not of constitutionality, and, as appears from the debate here, they will not fail to see that, if it were only a question of policy, then this Chamber would have been practically unanimous in favor of this law. With such unanimity of opinion as to what ought to be done, if we can do it, I submit as my own judgment that this proposed bill is entirely within the bounds of our constitutional powers and should be enacted into law.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate by any extended discussion of the merits of this bill or the important constitutional question involved. Both sides of this question have been very ably discussed, and I suppose all of the authorities bearing upon the question have been already cited to the Senate. I want to go home, where I can be comfortable. I think the sooner this Congress adjourns, after it has performed its duty, the better for all concerned.

I believe myself that if this bill is enacted it will be unconstitutional, but I am going to vote for it for what may seem to be a very peculiar reason. I think it will furnish the best opportunity the Supreme Court of the United States has ever had to determine this question definitely and for all time; and the question is not going to be settled until it is finally settled in that way. So we may just as well give the Supreme Court the opportunity to determine it now as at any later time.

We are not dealing fairly with this question, Mr. President. We are pretending to enact a law for the protection of interstate commerce. We are not really intending to do any such thing. We are purposely and intentionally invading the rights of the States and attempting to prevent the doing of something within the State that is entirely and exclusively within the jurisdiction of the State.

We all believe in protecting the young children from being overworked. There is no difference of opinion between us upon that question. If it were only the question of the merits of any legislation that was intended for their protection, there would probably be no opposition at all coming from any of the States to a bill of that sort; in fact, almost all of the States have legislation now to prevent child labor. We have a law of that kind in my own State, which is perfectly satisfactory, and there is no reason why the United States Government should come into my State and undertake to regulate the condition of the children or to protect them in any way whatever, and that is true of most of the States.

I know something about the overworking of young boys by my own experience, and there are probably a great many other Members of this body who have had like experience. At the ages of 13 and 14, which would be within the prohibition of this bill, I was doing a man's work on the farm. I drove an ox team and hauled saw logs; I swung the cradle and the scythe in the harvest fields; I did every kind of work that was to be done upon a farm. I worked out at $43 a month; got up at 4 o'clock in the morning, had my team harnessed and ready to go out in the field by sunup, and worked until sundown. No one need tell me, Mr. President, that overhours of work like those are not injurious to a young boy, whether it is upon the farm or anywhere else. The memory of the little dark room in which I slept and the hardship, and almost the anguish, of being waked from the deep sleep of boyhood at 4 o'clock in the morning and being forced out to my work has been so stamped upon my mind that it will never be forgotten. Morning after morning, when I was forced out of my sleep at that time, my muscles were so sore and stiff that I could not walk without pain and suffering until I had, so to speak, exercised and warmed up the muscles.

Now, it may not have served other boys in that way; but I have every reason to believe that I have never, in the long life I have lived, entirely recovered from the effects of the work that I had to do in that way as a small boy.

But, Mr. President, these are things difficult to regulate by law. It is fair to assume that the States are just as much interested in the welfare and prosperity and protection of their children as is the National Government. They have shown, in almost every instance, evidence of the fact that they are trying to do that very thing, and do it in a proper and legitimate way. I do not believe the attempt of the Government to enter upon legislation of this kind and to attempt to control labor in the States is legitimate. I believe it is in violation of the Constitution. Ever since I came into the Senate, from time to time,

I have been protesting, as the Senators will bear witness, against the tendency of the States to surrender their rights to the National Government, and at the same time the tendency of the National Government, as represented here in Congress, to encroach upon the rights of the States. This tendency to surrender States' rights has come almost exclusively from the other side of the Chamber, strange to say, and from southern Senators. It has gone so far that I have come to think that the representatives of the South will surrender any of the sovereign rights of their States if they can get a sufficient price from the National Treasury. So I do not feel as sympathetic toward the South in this emergency as I might do otherwise.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was just going to suggest to the Senator that I should very much appreciate it if he would not make that indictment quite so sweeping. Not all of the southern Senators or southern Representatives in Congress are guilty of the conduct described by the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should not, because I know the junior Senator from Georgia has taken quite an opposite view of that subject, and has stood with me in the attempts I have made to protect the sovereign rights of the southern States. But, Mr. President, we are on the brink of a complete change in the policies of the Government. We are driving irresistibly, it seems to me, to centralized government; and if such a law as this can be enacted by Congress and be sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, either upon the ground that it is a proper attempt to protect interstate commerce or that it is within the police powers of the National Government, there is no limitation, there is no dividing line between the powers of the National Government and the sovereignty of the States, because if legislation of this kind can be maintained upon either of the grounds I have stated, there is no industry within any of the States of the Union that will not be subject to the control and domination of the National Government through just such legislation and regulation as is now proposed.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. Would the Senator, if it were possible for him to be placed in that position, in dealing with the question of the creation of a constitution, have considered it hostile to the best interests of the people, or hostile to the maintenance of States within a national government, if this power had been expressly granted by the States in the constitution itself?

Mr. WORKS. Why, Mr. President, anybody who believes in local government and the division of sovereignty and power as between the National Government and the States must conclude that that would have been an evil even at that time. I have no doubt about it myself. I believe in maintaining the integrity and the sovereignty of the States.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but what I wanted to get—and the Senator has very frankly met it—was whether, at the beginning of the Government, it would have been, from his viewpoint, considered essential to the best interests of the people and the maintenance of the States within a National Government to have granted this power expressly to the Federal Government. The Senator has been very frank in his answer.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, no one could tell what might have been the result of such a form of government as that. It would be a mere speculation or opinion on my part. But judging from our experiences under the form of government that we now have I should say it would have been a great misfortune if any such power as that had been given to the National Government at that time. It may be that I am looking at this phase of the subject too seriously. It may be that there is not the degree of danger involved in it that I think there is. It may be possible that the people of this country would be better served, and their rights better protected, if there were no division of power and it all belonged to the National Government as a centralized power. But I have not come to believe that. The centralization of power in the National Government, to my mind, means eventually a despotism, a dictatorship. It means the centralization of power not only in the General Government but in one man.

No step that has ever been taken in Congress leads so directly and so strongly to that outcome as the bill that is now before the Senate. It involves a great fundamental governmental question. There is not very much in it of itself. If the law should be enacted and go into force it would amount to very little, in my estimation. As I have said, the children of the country in almost all the States are amply protected now so far as legislation can protect them, and like a good many other cases the Congress of the United States is being forced into this kind of legislation by public sentiment. It is all right that public sentiment should be regarded and respected. That is a part of our duty here. We are representing public sentiment to a large extent, but it is well to inquire whether the sentiment that has been aroused in favor of legislation of this kind has taken into account the ultimate consequences of such legislation, and whether it is founded upon a necessity that should control public sentiment.

I know very well that Members of this body are being controlled by their sympathy for the dependent and often helpless children who are overworked. I hope I have as much sympathy for those conditions as other Members of this body have; but when I propose by action of mine to protect them from these evil conditions I do want to know that I am doing so in a legitimate and constitutional way, and that I am really going to benefit them by the action that may be taken.

It is a great question, Mr. President. It would be an important question if it merely involved the protection of the children of the country, because that is a great thing to be accomplished; but it is an infinitely greater question, because, in my judgment, it goes to the very foundation of the institutions of this country. We are not only tending toward centralized government; it is leading us off into something that may be even worse than that—bureaucratic government. We are not governed any more by Congress. We are governed, in the first instance, by the dictation of the executive department, and much of the legislation that should be conducted by Congress and for which it should be responsible is conducted now not by Congress but by bureaus and commissions. I hope before I leave the Senate to discuss some of the evils that I think are imperiling the existence of this country, but I am not going to stop to do it now. I desired only to say a very few words respecting the proposed legislation in order that my own position might not be misunderstood and in order that I might express my views with respect to the legitimacy or illegitimacy of this kind of legislation and its probable effect upon the future of the country. Having done that, I shall leave the question at the present time.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have already taken a good deal of the time of the Senate on this bill, and I would not take more time now were it not for the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. What time I do take will be very brief.

I share in the wish of the Senator from California to go home. I would be perfectly willing to waive the very interesting remarks that I am about to make if we should adjourn at once; but there is no probability of going home, and we shall be grinding on here for some time yet.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], I think has said about everything that could be said upon the opposition side of this question. Certainly everything has been said when that is supplemented with the argument of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. The Senator from Georgia has said it with a courage, a clearness, and an independence that commands the admiration of everyone. On the other side of this question everything has also been said. I could not add, I feel, very much, if I should attempt to do so, to the constitutional arguments that have been made. I do rejoice that this bill is about to pass. It ought not to pass without a word being said as to a gentleman now out of public life who is entitled, I believe, to the most credit for the fight that has been made for a child-labor bill. He stood on the floor of the Senate nearly 10 years ago and fought alone for something that now has come to be a bill in principle, at least, demanded by both of the great political parties and by the great consensus of opinion in this country. That was the distinguished former Senator from Indiana, Mr. Beveridge.

With a frankness that is refreshing, even in this weather, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has said that in his judgment the purpose of this bill was merely to secure Bull Moose votes. He did not indicate as to which party he thought was trying hardest to secure those votes, but I judge the exigencies of the situation are more with his party than with ours. What he says may be true. So far as I am concerned, I am glad even if that is the reason that this bill is being pushed; but perhaps it should have been pushed with a little more speed, because I notice that on Saturday one of the great leaders of the Bull Moose Party who had been a Democrat before he went into that party, and one of the brainiest men in that party, came out for the Republican candidate for President.

The Senator from Georgia states that this is not Democratic doctrine and not Republican doctrine; that it is Bull Moose doctrine. Mr. President, I believe that President Roosevelt, in the days when there was no question as to his being a Republican—as there is apparently none now—was very earnest in the advocacy of a national child-labor law.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, can the Senator cite any public utterance of President Roosevelt's to that effect?

Mr. KENYON. No; I can not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I cited it in my speech this morning—his message to Congress, in which he said that it ought to be done if it could be done under the Constitution.

Mr. HARDWICK. In the only public utterance that President Roosevelt made, he expressed himself as being in doubt as to the constitutionality of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I stated that this morning.

Mr. KENYON. Well, Mr. Roosevelt has written a great many articles for magazines and papers not of an official nature; and I am very certain, while I may not be exact as to the time, that ex-President Roosevelt has been an earnest advocate of a national child-labor law.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me once more; if so, it was in private and not in public.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no.

Mr. HARDWICK. In no public printed utterance of his that I have ever seen.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes; I think he has.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wish the Senator would put it in his remarks.

Mr. KENYON. I take issue with the Senator on that point.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator can not cite it.

Mr. KENYON. I will try to cite it later. I have nothing with me now on that subject. Senator Beveridge was also a Republican—a Progressive Republican. Now, this has been a Progressive Republican doctrine. It may not have been the doctrine of those who had most to do with shaping Republican platforms.

We have heard a good many arguments here and questions which have seemed to me utterly foolish. I do not refer in that to the argument of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] or the argument of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]; but in the questions that have been asked, and other questions and suggestions that go to the very heart of the difficulty, we have had many foolish questions suggested, such as these: If Congress can regulate the products of child labor, then Congress can declare that no goods made by parties who do not believe in woman suffrage can be carried in interstate transportation; that goods can not be carried in interstate commerce, if Congress so decrees it, where liquor has been used by the workmen who have been making the goods; that certain religious denominations, if they had the power and the influence, if such a law as this can be passed, could bring about a situation in this country where goods could not be transported in interstate commerce unless they were made by people belonging to certain religious organizations, or who did not belong to certain religious organizations. Those questions do seem to me so utterly silly that they must be attributed to the effect of the weather upon those who made them.

When the Hoke case was up for discussion I assume that the same kind of questions could have been asked, such as, If we can keep women out of interstate commerce and keep them from being transported for immoral purposes, then we can keep women out of interstate commerce unless they cut their hair in a certain way, or old maids unless they have had one or two proposals of marriage in their lifetime. There is not any proposition that can come up but that ridiculous and absurd queries can be made about it, as there have been in this case.

There is another line of questioning, however, that has gone to the very vitals of this subject—questions suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. I do not think that any candid man who thinks about these questions is willing to say that this question is free from doubt. If we had applied to the antilobby law the test which the Senator from Georgia believes should be applied, we never would have had it. I do not believe that many lawyers would have gone out at that time and proclaimed that there was no question about that law; and certainly when we came to the law in regard to the transportation of women in interstate commerce, that law never could have been passed under any such test, because there were very few lawyers at that time who believed that that law was constitutional; and I think that is the experience of most lawyers here who ever discussed that question with others.

Mr. President, I have just as much veneration for the Constitution as anybody, and just as much veneration for the constitutional lawyer. I do not believe the Constitution was ever intended to block forward, progressive legislation that was in the interest of the people. I think it was Dr. Samuel Johnson who once said that "patriotism was the last resort of scoundrels." I have sometimes felt that the constitutionality argument that is put in front of everything is the last resort of those inclined to block these progressive measures. We have seen it when the safety-appliance laws were before Congress. Gentlemen with reputations as constitutional lawyers arose and said they were in favor of all this, but "Ah, Mr. President, the Constitution." In the case of the employers' liability act, "We are in favor of all this; we wish it could be brought about; it is just and right; but ah, the Constitution." In the case of the pure food and drugs act exactly the same argument was made.

I have gone through, just as a matter of curiosity, the arguments that were filed in the Supreme Court in the White-Slave case. They are the same old questions that we are discussing here. It was going to change the form of government. It was taking from the States the power to regulate the morality of its own citizenship; and so we will always have these questions. While this objection has been rolled in front of all these great measures for the people of this country in the last 10 years, what one of them has the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional? The first employers' liability act, but for reasons which were very clear and very plain and which were remedied very easily by Congress.

No man can be absolutely certain in any of those cases, or in this case, that the act is constitutional. I confess very frankly that there are grave doubts in my mind about it; but I can not accept the theory that has been advanced here that if we have any doubt about it we should vote against the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President—

Mr. KENYON. Just a moment. If we had a fixed conviction, or, possibly, if the balance weighed the other way, then we should. Now, I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator dispute the soundness of the rule laid down by Judge Cooley, to which I referred on Friday last?

Mr. KENYON. I do not remember the rule.

Mr. HARDWICK. Judge Cooley's rule, or the principle stated by Judge Cooley, was this: That when legislators were passing on the constitutionality of proposed legislation it was their duty to resolve all doubts against the constitutionality of the bill if there were serious doubts in their minds, for the very reason that the courts were bound to uphold the constitutionality of the bill when it was enacted into law unless they were convinced beyond a doubt that the act was unconstitutional. Is not that sound?

Mr. KENYON. Perhaps it is. Of course, I think the question of "a serious doubt" is a very broad question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes; of course, that is always a question as to the mental attitude of every legislator as well as every judge.

Mr. KENYON. Exactly. It must depend upon his own mental condition—

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. KENYON. Which comes after his careful study.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think the Senator would take issue with that as a general proposition.

Mr. KENYON. No; I will not take issue with that as a general proposition, because it is saved, to my mind, by the question of the serious doubt. Just how serious that doubt must be is a question. Few bills are passed involving constitutional questions absolutely free from doubt.

Mr. HARDWICK. And yet I understood the Senator to say just now that he had serious doubts about the constitutionality of this bill.

Mr. KENYON. I have some doubts about it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, if they are serious, then the Senator is bound to vote against it.

Mr. KENYON. No; they are not serious enough to cause me to vote against it. I said grave doubt. If that argument should be applied, we never should have had, as I said, the white-slave decision, and we never should have had the lottery case. Each Senator must decide for himself as to the doubt questions warranting him in voting against a bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. And with all deference to the Senator, I think we would have been a great deal better off.

Mr. KENYON. I know the Senator does. One Senator said to-day that the lottery case had made all the trouble.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think so, too.

Mr. KENYON. It has made a good deal of trouble for some and it has done a lot of good, in my opinion.

Now, one Senator asks, where are we going to stop with this kind of legislation, and suggests that we are going to have more drastic laws. If this legislation is sustained, I have not a bit of question that the next step will be the attempt to pass through Congress an act to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of goods made in factories where women work more than eight hours per day. I believe if this is good, that will be perfectly good. So this kind of legislation is going on if the Supreme Court sustains this act. It is going on for the better care of the people of this country who are toilers.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I do not want to bother the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I am very glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, then, the next step after that will be, will it not, that we will also have the proposition advanced and seriously supported and the same humanitarian reasons given in support of it that goods or articles produced by labor that works over a certain number of hours a day—we will say eight hours, for the purpose of illustration—shall not be admitted into interstate commerce; and, in the Senator's opinion, could not every argument that has been made for this bill be made for that proposition, also?

Mr. KENYON. Of course, that goes to the question of the reasonableness of the regulation, and the time will probably come in this country when there will be a general consensus of opinion that eight hours a day is all that a man should work in the interest of himself and of the public at large.

Mr. HARDWICK. We are about there now, are we not?

Mr. KENYON. We are getting pretty rapidly to that.

Mr. HARDWICK. So, getting down squarely to the situation that has arisen, if this legislation is held to be constitutional, we face the proposition that goods produced by women shall not be admitted to the channels of interstate commerce, and next we will face the proposition that goods made by anybody working over eight hours a day shall not be admitted to the channels of interstate commerce and finally we will regulate everything from this Chamber and the other House of Congress, will we not?

Mr. KENYON. If the people can, under the Constitution, bring about conditions of that kind, and if the country is behind the proposition and there is constitutional authority.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has not based this proposition on the general welfare.

Mr. KENYON. Not at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator said if the general welfare demanded it.

Mr. KENYON. By a regulation that would be reasonable or unreasonable.

Mr. HARDWICK. The trouble about resting the proposition on general public sentiment under that theory is that power which will be constitutional to-day may be utterly unconstitutional to-morrow, and vice versa, and our Constitution will be nothing but shifting sand. It will depend on election returns if you depend on public sentiment, as it changes from day to day, and we will have no Constitution under that theory.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator claims that the passage of this bill is dependent upon the anticipated election returns.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think that has a good deal to do with it, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. KENYON. I think I agree with the Senator about that.

Objections, which seem to be foolish ones, have been raised; but some very legitimate ones have also been raised—that the bill does not deal with the article transported; that it prohibits transportation unless the article is made in accordance with congressional rules; that it is not really a regulation of commerce; that it is only detrimental because of the way in which it is made; that it attempts to regulate production.

I think those are difficult questions, Mr. President, but I believe, not without some serious doubt as to what the court may eventually say, the bill is constitutional. Judges on the bench in weighing propositions before them oftentimes have great difficulty in deciding as to how a case should be decided. They are oftentimes in doubt when an appeal is taken and the line is so close. I think we have here a line that is very close. I am simply going to reiterate in a moment, after reviewing the Thomas amendment, my reasons for thinking the bill is constitutional without going into the general argument as I have upon a previous occasion done.

I want to say a word about the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I shall vote against the amendment, and really my purpose in rising was to explain my reasons therefor. I believe the amendment is like other amendments which are offered to bills of this character which weaken the bill itself. I think there is a great distinction between the proposition embodied in the amendment of the Senator from Colorado and the proposition embodied in this bill. There is a difference between that class of labor which builds up and that class of labor which destroys because of the conditions surrounding it.

The Senator from California has referred to a boy working on the farm. We have all probably had the same experience. It is hard work, of course, but it is different from work in a factory. There may be individual instances where it does harm, of course. I know by experience just what the Senator was picturing here to-day. I have had the same experience, getting up at 4 or 4.30 in the morning and going out and waking up the cows and getting them up off the ground and milking the cows and then going out to the fields after breakfast.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

Mr. KENYON. You are going to claim the same thing?

Mr. CLAPP. No; I am going to ask the Senator a question. Does not the Senator also remember, and I think many a man in this Chamber does, that oftentimes when he woke up the cows he put his feet on the warm soil the cows warmed because the ground around him was frosty and his feet were unprotected?

Mr. KENYON. I think we have all had that experience.

Mr. WORKS. I do not want the Senator or the Senate to understand that I have any objection to a boy working on the farm. I do not myself. I think it is the very best possible experience for them. But there may be reasons for limiting the number of hours the boy is required to work, however beneficial the work on the farm may be.

Mr. KENYON. I was going to say that work in the field is not so very hard. They come in at noon. I can remember very well when we had rest at noon. That rest generally consisted in turning the grindstone for half an hour. Then we worked in the afternoon and milked the cows at night. But the farmer boy gets away. He gets to the swimming pool, he goes a-fishing, goes to the circus, to the schoolhouse once in a while and hears a political speech, and all those things add a little zest to life; the factory boy does not get these. I have a very distinct recollection that as a boy on a farm I had to pitch to the thrashing machine the bundles, I used to think that that was about the hardest work that could possibly be in the world. But when you remember the farmer's dinner—the fried chicken, and mashed potatoes, and gravy, and corn on the cob, and tomatoes, and the bread, and the butter that melted in your mouth, and the apple pie with a piece of cheese—and then you could go out and lie under a tree, it was not so bad. Farm life is quite different from that of people in factories.

Mr. President, it seems to me that those who believe in this legislation and believe in this bill ought to try and defeat the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

I want to refer now just to one or two things along the constitutional line. We have heard the argument made here that the article to be prohibited must be harmful. My colleague, I think, answered that in just a question the other day as to trust-made articles. The article in commerce as an article may be perfectly innocent, such as interstate trust-made goods. Take the commodity-clause cases, coal and hay. There is absolutely nothing in the hay or the coal that is injurious in itself any more than the articles made by child labor, but yet we have prohibited that under certain circumstances, because it is the part of a plan and scheme that may be injurious to the public welfare.

Take the case that was cited called the "Seven Cases" that refers to misbranded articles or diluted articles. Those articles in themselves are perfectly innocent as an article; they are just as innocent as an article made by child labor; there is nothing harmful in them or it is perfectly possible that there may be nothing harmful to them.

There may be a medicine that is diluted, there may not be a particle of anything harmful in it, but they are prohibited because they are a part of the general plan and scheme that is injurious to the public welfare. Take bars of metal bearing the stamp of the United States. What is the harm in those goods? Take cattle shipped from infected areas. Of course you may say there is danger in that kind of a shipment, but the cattle themselves are absolutely free from any disease, perfectly innocent articles in commerce. They are prohibited; and it can be sustained because it is a part of a general transaction that may be injurious to the public health.

Now, Mr. President, these propositions I believe are true. The power to regulate commerce under the Constitution is absolute. We have had that reiterated over and over again, there is one exception, and that is the fifth amendment. If it was not for the fifth amendment Congress could strike down everything in interstate commerce. It could prohibit the shipment of corn and wheat and rye and anything else absolutely pure, just as we have the power to-day to declare war. That is a question of power. The question of the discretion and reasonableness and the desirability of it is a distinct question from the question of power. We could declare war to-day against every nation on the face of the earth. Great powers must be lodged somewhere and they are lodged in Congress. So with the exception I have cited we could do all these things that are questioned.

The tenth amendment with relation to reserved power in the States does not apply, because there is no power reserved in the State to regulate interstate commerce. There is no limitation in favor of the State, the power is absolute in Congress. The only limitation is that this regulation of commerce must not violate that fifth amendment, it must not destroy life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and that due process of law is merely an exception on the fifth amendment and on the fourteenth amendment. That due process of law is merely a freedom from an arbitrary and unreasonable action. The fourteenth amendment is exactly like the fifth amendment, and the only distinction is that one is a limitation as to Governmental action and the other is a limitation as to State action. One is as to what the Government can not do and the other is as to what the State can not do. Take liberty of contract, that we talk so much about. There is no freedom of contract. The liberty of contract under the fifth amendment or under the fourteenth amendment is merely the absence of arbitrary restraint. It is immunity from any kind of reasonable regulation. If the law of the State is not a violation of the fourteenth amendment then a similar law by Congress is not a violation of the fifth amendment.

We have the case of Miller against Oregon and the California case in relation to the hours of service of women. It was held in those cases in opinions both of which I think were written by the next President of the United States, that the State law was not a violation of the fourteenth amendment; it was due process of law, it was a reasonable regulation; and that is exactly similar to the child-labor question. If that had been a construction of a child-labor law by analogy the result must have been the same. Then, if that law is not a violation of the fourteenth amendment a national child-labor law is not a violation of the fifth amendment.

Of course it must be followed out by the assertion that it is in fact a regulation of commerce. On the other hand, we have had the famous New York case, the Bakery case, where the regulation was held to be so arbitrary and unreasonable that it was violative of the fourteenth amendment.

So, Mr. President, the seriousness of the situation, I think, does not arise over the question of the violation of the fifth amendment. What seriousness there is about it arises over the fundamental question whether it is a regulation of commerce or whether it is a regulation of manufacture or a regulation of production. Now, it assumes to deal with commerce. It assumes to be a regulation of commerce. In the Hoke case it was stated by the Supreme Court that if the Congress had the power, if it was in fact a regulation of commerce, it made no difference what the effect might be upon the manufacture within the State. I wish to call attention for just a moment to that. On page 322 of the Hoke case (227 U. S. Rept.) the court said:

It may be that Congress could not prohibit the manufacture of the article in a State.

We all agree to that.

It may be that Congress could not prohibit in all of its conditions its sale within a State. But Congress may prohibit its transportation between the States, and by that means defeat the motive and evils of its manufacture.

This bill is not regulating the manufacturing interest of the State. They can go on and manufacture just as they please. They can use child labor. They can manufacture everything they want to, sell it in their State, and when they bring it to the channels of interstate commerce, when they attempt to enter into transportation as a part of the general plan and scheme of making goods by child labor and selling them in other States, Congress then steps in and says, "We withdraw this necessary instrumentality for you to carry out the general plan, which plan we say is against the public welfare."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When the court used that language it was speaking about the article, which it described as follows:

Let an article be debased by adulteration, let it be misrepresented by false branding, and Congress may exercise its prohibitive power.

Mr. KENYON. That is true, of course; but I do not see how that makes any difference with the proposition that if Congress has the power to pass the act, it makes no difference what its effect upon the manufactures of a State may be, and having that power, while Congress could not prevent the manufacture in the State of the adulterated article or the misbranded article, it can say that it shall not be transported in interstate commerce, and in that way to a certain extent regulate its manufacture.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It makes this difference, because that part which the Senator cites with approval, to wit, "But Congress may prohibit its transportation between States," is the very next sentence to the one where it talks about the misbranded or other deleterious article.

Mr. KENYON. Of course I did not intend to deceive anybody by the illustration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly the Senator did not, but my own judgment is that the force of the declaration of the court that Congress could prohibit is broken by the fact that it is confined to an adulterated or misbranded article.

Mr. KENYON. I was citing the case to sustain the proposition I was endeavoring to make, that Congress in a certain way could regulate the manufacture within a State as incidental to prohibiting transportation of the article manufactured in interstate commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; it could not.

Mr. KENYON. But it does.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; it does not say that Congress could regulate its manufacture by a State; but it says it could prohibit the transportation of such a misbranded or adulterated article between the States, and by that means defeat the grave evils of its manufacture.

Mr. KENYON. Well, that is true.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A misbranded or adulterated article.

Mr. KENYON. But the Senator, of course, supplies those words in reading the part of the decision which he does.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I only mean to say, Mr. President, that that is my construction of it. Of course the Senator may have another construction.

Mr. KENYON. Yet it gets down to this: The regulation that we are talking about does not have to be a regulation that is for the benefit of commerce; and it seems to me that we make a mistake in that we seem to assume that this must be something that is for the benefit of commerce; that that is the only power Congress has over the subject. This regulation of commerce can be for the benefit of the public health, of the public safety, of the public morals, or of the public welfare. It is ample and complete so long as it does not in any way violate the fifth amendment to the Constitution. We can do indirectly what possibly we could not do directly. Instances have been cited here of the taxation of the issues of State banks. We have also had the phosphorous-match tax to relieve what was known as the "phossy-jaw" situation. We have had the oleomargarine tax and the cotton-futures tax.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I suggest to my colleague that the tax which was levied on matches of a certain kind was not levied because they were dangerous after they were put into the hands of the users, but because the manufacture itself was a dangerous occupation?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the senior Senator from Iowa—I was at the time very much interested in the litigation to which he referred—does he not understand the doctrine to be that it was dangerous not as an occupation, but dangerous to those who were engaged in the occupation?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not discriminate between the two things. It was dangerous to those who were engaged in making the matches; but after they were made and sent out, there was no evidence to show that they would bring about the disease known as "phossy jaw."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the object of the tax, of course, was to stop the evils incident to the manufacture. It produced the condition which has been described among those who worked in the manufacture. Then the cotton-futures tax practically taxed that practice out of existence. Then there was the opium question and the water-power bill which we had here. That legislation was hung on the constitutional peg of our rights as to navigation. In fact, however, we were dealing with the water-power question—doing indirectly what we could not do directly.

Mr. President, Congress has the power to make any rule as to the regulation of commerce, subject to the one exception that it does not violate the fifth amendment. Congress itself is to be the judge, in the first instance, of whether the methods it adopts and the rule it lays down for the regulation of commerce is an arbitrary one or not. I base my opinion on those propositions as to the constitutionality of the bill.

A question has been suggested by the Senator from California which has troubled me, namely, that this is purely a State matter; that the article itself is innocent; that it comes to commerce a perfectly innocent article, so far as it itself is concerned. We have got to face that. When the article made by child labor is presented to commerce it is an innocent article, except in the way in which it is made and the way that the use of it bears upon the way it is made.

Can you prohibit an article in commerce that is innocent in itself but that is made in a way that is contrary to the standards of civilization? There is no case in the books in which that has been held. It has been held that where the article is to be used in a way that is injurious to the public health, then it can be prohibited. So you have the question of whether or not there is the same power with relation to the production and the incidents surrounding production that there is as to consumption and the incidents surrounding consumption.

I go further than the question of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], which put it very aptly, as to the relationship between the hours of service in a mill and interstate commerce. We are not regulating those hours of service; we have no right to do so. They can go ahead with any hours they please and employ all the child labor they want, but when they come to bring this article to commerce they say: "Now, we have employed child labor in making this article; this article is just as good and as innocent as any article that was made by adult labor. Have you power to keep it out of commerce?"

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And the article, not only innocent, but in all respects made in accordance with the provisions of the child-labor law of the State of origin.

Mr. KENYON. Well, I will assume that. Now, that is the question from the standpoint of the Senator from Connecticut and from the standpoint of the Senator from California. I do not myself accept that, but, even if that be so, I have been trying to find an answer to that in my own mind. Let us reason about it a little. Take The Seven Cases v. The United States (239 U. S.), that arose under the provisions of the food and drug act, section 3:

Third. If its package or label shall bear or contain any statement, design, or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article or any of the ingredients or substances contained therein which is false and fraudulent.

That article may be a perfectly innocent article; that is, it may not be a harmful article. It is to be used in what you may say is a swindling operation, and you may draw a distinction there. The transportation is a part of the general swindling scheme. The swindling scheme, in its last analysis, is to make money in some way that is contrary to public morals and this century's standard of civilization.

But the question remains—

The court says—

But the question remains as to what may be regarded as "illicit," and we find no ground for saying that Congress may not condemn the interstate transportation of swindling preparations designed to cheat credulous sufferers and make such preparations, accompanied by false and fraudulent statements, illicit with respect to interstate commerce, as well as, for example, lottery tickets.

Lottery tickets are exactly the same thing. They are a part of a swindling scheme. That scheme could go on in the States; Congress could not interfere with it; it would be a perfectly legitimate transaction within the State. When, however, you come to carry it beyond the State, when you go into interstate commerce with your ticket and sell your ticket in another State, that is not absolutely essential to the lottery, because it can be carried on in the State, but it is all a part of the same plan of a swindling operation.

Take a case which I have already cited along the same lines, namely, the case construing the commodities clause of the interstate commerce act, reported in Two hundred and thirty-first United States Reports, page 370. In that case it was said:

The commodities clause was not an unreasonable and arbitrary prohibition against a railroad company transporting its own useful property, but a constitutional exercise of a governmental power intended to cure or prevent the evils that might result if, in hauling goods in or out, the company occupied the dual and inconsistent position of public carrier and private shipper.

That article, absolutely innocent in itself, being a shipment of hay intended for use in the private business of mining, is prohibited by Congress in the channels of interstate commerce.

Why? It is just as innocent as the articles produced by child labor, but it is a part of a general scheme and plan that commences with its production, its transportation by the railroads, and then its use—it is a part of a general swindling transaction. Perhaps that word is a little too strong; but, at any rate, it is part of a general plan against the public welfare, whereby shippers could be discriminated against by the railroads.

Take the case of McDermott v. Wisconsin (228 U. S.), which has been relied upon very much in this discussion. That deals, of course, with illicit articles such as are injurious to the public health; but there was a general plan to be carried out which involved the shipment or transportation of these articles which would injure the public health. They could have been kept within the State, and Congress would have had nothing to say about it; but when in pursuance of the general scheme and plan it was sought to transport them in interstate commerce and sell them in other States, then the power of Congress could step in, because you have the chain with the link of transportation in it, and the chain is not complete without it. So, from the standpoint of the Senator from California, the child of the State is the child of the Nation. The Nation is just as much interested in the welfare of the children of the State as are the people of the State. These goods are made by child labor, thus dwarfing and injuring the children. Then the plan and the keeping on of making the goods by child labor necessitates a market for them, or the business will not go on. Hence you have the transportation in interstate commerce and the sales in other States; and you have the same philosophy in the scheme and plan that you have in the cases which I have cited. It is an attempt to make money in a way contrary to what Congress may decree to be according to the standards of our civilization, and hence it is against the public welfare, just as the lottery case is in its last analysis, and just as the commodities clause case and other cases that I might cite.

I know that that argument does not appeal to many minds. If we can get, as the Senator from California says, the transportation connected up with that production in the State, then it would probably be conclusive. But I say that the question, from my standpoint, is "Is it or is it not a regulation of commerce?" That is all there is to it. If it is a regulation of commerce and does not violate the fifth amendment of the Constitution, then that ends the controversy, in my mind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, would it annoy the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. KENYON. Not at all. I shall be very glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This is an exceedingly interesting question, of course, and the Senator is referring to questions that might be asked about it from this angle or from that angle, testing the application of the statements that are made in relation to it. The Senator has said that, in his mind, he has connected up the work of the child with the product attempted to be prohibited from interstate transportation so closely that jurisdiction attaches to Congress to prohibit the product of the labor of the child from entering interstate commerce. Would it make any difference to the Senator, in his opinion about it, if the consequences of that principle, if sustained, should be so far-reaching as to practically transfer to Congress the entire domestic regulation of the State?

Mr. KENYON. What is the question of the Senator?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is the question—would it make any difference, in the Senator's legal opinion, if the establishment of this principle and the vindication by the Supreme Court of the child-labor bill should have such far-reaching consequences as that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States could be used to regulate all the internal affairs of the State?

Mr. KENYON. Well, of course, I do not believe that Congress can regulate the internal affairs of the States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, let me put it in this way, then: For instance, if it be admitted, for the sake of the argument—but, of course, I am not convinced of it and therefore do not admit it—that we could pass this child-labor bill on the ground that it is a proper exercise of our authority to regulate interstate commerce—if we could prohibit the product of child labor from passing through interstate commerce, then the Senator would have to say, would he not, that if, in the judgment of Congress, it was for the public welfare that no women should work in factories, we could prohibit the transportation of any product in which female labor had entered, could we not?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; if that were considered a reasonable regulation. I would not consider it such myself. Limiting to certain hours the work of women would be a reasonable regulation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I mean, if we should become convinced of it, owing to a proper campaign, or if for any reason we should be sufficiently convinced of it to pass such legislation?

Mr. KENYON. I assume that the Senator, if he were on the Supreme Bench, would hold such legislation unconstitutional.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Do you not think it would be unconstitutional?

Mr. KENYON. No; I do not say that. I say the Senator, if he were on the Supreme Bench, undoubtedly would hold such legislation to be unconstitutional. My doubt on that, however—the mere working at all of women in factories, with no reference to hours of employment—would be so serious that I would not now be willing to vote for such a bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it would be, because I think the pending bill is unconstitutional; but I did not know whether the Senator would be willing to go that far now.

Mr. KENYON. I believe, of course, there is somewhere a line where the matter stops.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope so.

Mr. KENYON. And I think that is the line of reasonable discretion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope so.

Mr. KENYON. I believe that Congress now could pass an act along the lines of the pending bill prohibiting in interstate commerce goods made in factories where women work over eight hours per day. I say that on the strength of the Oregon and California cases, where the Supreme Court has held that those statutes do not violate the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, and that it would be a regulation of commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, would it not be equally true that Congress could provide that no goods shall be transported in interstate commerce which are made by men who have been worked over eight hours per day?

Mr. KENYON. I would not say that was an unreasonable regulation. It is in the region of doubt. I think the time may come, however, and is coming, when public opinion may be such, and when the general sentiment of the country may be such, that an eight-hour day is the only day that men should work; that that might be considered a reasonable regulation. I would not want to guess on what the Supreme Court would do. It may be that time has arrived.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what I mean. Of course, I will not consume time in multiplying instances; but I mean, if it is so that the principle contended for in this bill is a valid exercise of the power of Congress, as public opinion becomes educated or demands this, that, or the other prohibition unless certain conditions have been complied with in the State of manufacture, there is a whole field of such regulatory power unexplored.

Mr. KENYON. Undoubtedly. I do not know that the Senator believes as I do about it; but I believe the Constitution has been marching on; that it has not stood still; that the fathers who formed this instrument had no idea of what was coming, of the new conditions and the changes which would ensue, and the Constitution has been construed in a way to meet most of them. I think the Constitution will keep marching on.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I entirely agree with the Senator that, of course, the construction of the commerce clause has had a wonderful development, and the constitutional power of Congress in that respect has been greatly increased by judicial determination.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will my colleague allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Connecticut believe that the Legislature of Connecticut could constitutionally pass a law limiting the hours of labor for men to eight hours?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. That it would not be a violation of the fourteenth amendment to pass such a law?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think they have that law now. I am not sure. I think they could, unquestionably. I do not, however, see the relevancy of the inquiry to the subject under discussion.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator asked that question himself, as to whether Congress could pass that kind of a law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the senior Senator from Iowa asked me if the State legislature could pass an eight-hour law.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am going to stop now, because others are to follow me who will cover this question more thoroughly than I can, and I did not expect to say more than a word or two about it. My theory has always been that in the last analysis it is going to be simply a question of whether the regulation of commerce is a reasonable or an unreasonable regulation. If it is in fact a regulation of commerce and reasonable, it is constitutional; and if it is unreasonable, it is unconstitutional.

I want to put in the RECORD an article on this subject from the paper owned by the Secretary of the Navy—I do not know whether he is the editor of the paper or not—the Hon. Josephus Daniels, on the subject "Trying to push back the ocean." It is very interesting reading, but I shall not take the time now to ask to have it read. I also have here two telegrams addressed to Hon. JOHN W. KERN, which I ask to have inserted without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TRYING TO PUSH BACK THE OCEAN.

There was once a king—his name was Canute, we think—who thought that he could stand on the shore and sweep back the oncoming tides of the ocean. He used his broom vigorously, and at the first stroke, as the tide receded, thought that he had power over the ocean.

Yesterday in the State senate some very elegant gentlemen, who lacked the vision to see that the world will no longer tolerate child labor, essayed the task of King Canute, and with vigorous speeches succeeded temporarily in compelling a recession of the tide that is moving steadily everywhere else for the emancipation of the children who work in the mills. Behind these gentlemen was a committee composed of owners of cotton mills in the State.

The men who have built the cotton mills in North Carolina are among the State's best captains of industry, and nobody can give them too high praise for the work they have done in developing the State and giving it industrial supremacy. Most of them have also been liberal and kind and generous to those in their employ. If there were no organization of the cotton-mill men and each owner of a mill spoke his sentiments, many of them would have favored the bill which was defeated in the senate yesterday, and some of them do favor it; but, speaking as an organization, they have exerted their great power—and the cotton-mill men now exercise a greater power over such legislation than any other body of men in the State—against it. Their influence is paramount in many counties, and it has made itself felt in the State senate.

This organization is farsighted; it looks ahead to the senate, and for 10 years has been able to prevent any legislation that would secure real inspection of even the moderate child-labor laws which have been put upon the statute books. They consented some years ago to a law which was impotent to reach the need, but would not consent to proper and adequate inspection. Yesterday they were able to convince most of the senators that such inspection was not necessary or desirable, and senators killed all legislation looking to strengthening the labor law, even in the smallest detail. It is to be regretted that men who have done so much for North Carolina should be so shortsighted. It is more to be regretted that senators who legislate for all the people should have lacked the wisdom to put North Carolina abreast with the spirit of the times.

The victory yesterday against child labor is one that will be short-lived. No State in this day can stand for child labor any more than it could stand for slavery, for the duel, or for hazing. The hour has struck for the emancipation of the children in the factories. The sentiment of this country is overwhelmingly and irresistibly against using up the seed corn. These cotton-mill owners have persuaded themselves that their industry is dependent upon this utilization of the seed corn. They are grievously mistaken. No industry of this magnitude and character in the long run is dependent upon child labor. Whenever the mill-men stop long enough to consider the question as it has been considered in every industrial community in the world except our own, they will find a way to adjust their industry without compelling women to toil long hours and children to be denied their God-given right to play and live in the sunshine.

"Do you hear the children weeping, O my brothers,

Ere the sorrow comes with years?

They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,

And that can not stop their tears.

The young lambs are bleating in the meadows;

The young birds are chirping in the nest;

The young fawns are playing with the shadows;

The young flowers are blowing toward the west;

But the young, young children, O my brothers,

They are weeping bitterly;

They are weeping in the playtime of the others,

In the country of the free."

A few days ago the House of Representatives, in Washington, by a vote of more than six to one, passed the Palmer bill. This bill would prevent any factory selling its product in any other State if this product was produced by child labor. Only one vote was cast against this measure by a Member of Congress north of Mason and Dixon's line. If the bill could get before the Senate at this session, it would become a law. It is as certain to become a law in the near future as that Congress of the United States is responsive to the most enlightened public sentiment of America. Even if the North Carolina Senate should for some years to come be responsive to the demands of the cotton-mill owners that children should continue to work in factories, the reform will come through the passage of the Palmer bill or one like it.

This paper covets the honor of North Carolina, leading in the chivalrous spirit of not permitting the long hours of work for women or the working of children at all in cotton mills. The only question now to be considered in the near future is whether North Carolina, through its own legislature, will pass the enlightened laws which have been enacted by every other civilized nation in the world and nearly every State in the Union, or whether it will wait and be compelled to stop the working of children in factories by a Federal law. It is a matter of deep regret that the Senate yesterday thought it could stop the hands of the clock or sweep back the irresistible tide for the emancipation of children. North Carolina should lead, and it is to be hoped that two years hence the record made yesterday will be reversed, so that the State will of its own motion emancipate the children in the mills and not be compelled to do so by Federal laws.

Senator JOHN W. KERN,
Washington, D. C.:

We earnestly hope the Senate will heed President Wilson's request for prompt passage of the House bill for the regulation of child labor.

HIGH C. MOORE,
Editor Biblical Recorder, Organ Baptist State Convention.

CLARENCE POE,
Editor the Progressive Farmer.

E. E. BRITTON,
Editor News and Observer.

W. F. MARSHALL,
Editor North Carolina Education.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 24, 1916.

Senator JOHN W. KERN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

I voice the sentiment of the greater part of the press of North Carolina when I say that the southern people as a whole desire the passage of the pending child-labor bill.

JAMES H. CAINE, Editor Citizen.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I shall take only a few minutes of the time of the Senate. This bill has been discussed so ably on both sides that there is very little to be said which has not already been covered by the discussion.

I recognize that there are very serious questions involved in this bill. I will not concede that there is much doubt about the policy of regulating child labor. The serious question comes up when we consider the power that is conferred upon Congress.

If I were convinced of the unconstitutionality of this law, or had really serious doubts about it, I would not vote for it. I feel that there is some doubt, but in the light of the decisions that have been fully discussed during the past few days I believe that the constitutionality of the law will be sustained.

Mr. President, the preamble to the Constitution provides that this Constitution was established for the general welfare, among other things, of ourselves and our posterity. The Constitution gives to Congress the right to regulate commerce among the States, and my thought is that when we attempt to determine the full scope of the power which has been given to the Congress or to any other branch of the Government we construe it in the light of the purpose which was to be accomplished. And now, concretely, the question presents itself thus:

The Congress is given the right to regulate commerce for the purpose, among other things, of providing for the general welfare to ourselves and our posterity; so that when the court comes to pass upon the question as to whether or not we have gone beyond the scope of congressional power it will not alone look to the paragraph which confers upon the Congress the right to regulate commerce but it will also look to the preamble to see whether the regulations which we are contemplating will redound to the general welfare of ourselves and our posterity.

Mr. President, one of our judges, and perhaps more, has said that the power to regulate was without limitation. I think that is true, generally speaking. I have in mind, of course, the fifth amendment. But the difficulty with us has been to be able to see and determine what these limitations are, and we can only determine them in the light of experience and in the light of adjudications.

In my judgment, much legislation is held constitutional now which a century ago would have been held unconstitutional, and I predict that the courts in the future will hold legislation constitutional which they would not hold constitutional today; and that all addresses itself to the reasonableness, in large part, of the provisions of the bill itself.

The Seven Cases against The United States has been referred to, and I want to call attention to the first paragraph of the syllabus:

Congress is not to be denied the exercise of its constitutional authority over interstate commerce and of its power to adopt means necessary and convenient to such exercise merely because those means have the quality of police regulations.

I take it that if we were discussing the police powers of the States, and had before us a grant of the police power, it would not necessarily be held unconstitutional because it may perhaps have indirectly affected interstate commerce; and on the other hand because we have here a bill regulating interstate commerce it is not going to be held unconstitutional because indirectly it may affect the police power of the State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the mere declaration in a law passed by Congress that it prohibits the transportation from one State to another as a penalty for the violation of the law can clothe Congress with jurisdiction to act upon the matter and make it a regulation of commerce simply because it is a prohibition of transportation, then we can clothe ourselves with jurisdiction and say that anything is a regulation of commerce which prohibits.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the Senator understood that I was speaking generally. The question which he puts, of course, is the one which is being seriously considered both by himself and by myself, and here we get into what may be called, perhaps, the twilight zone.

In discussing this case, Mr. Justice Hughes, on page 514 of the Two hundred and thirty-ninth volume of the Supreme Court Reports, uses this language:

So far as it is objected that this measure, though relating to articles transported in interstate commerce, is an encroachment upon the reserved powers of the States, the objection is not to be distinguished in substance from that which was overruled in sustaining the white-slave act, chapter 395, June 25, 1910. (36 Stat., 825; Hoke v. U. S., 227 U. S., 308.) There, after stating that "if the facility of interstate transportation" can be denied in the case of lotteries, obscene literature, diseased cattle and persons, and impure food and drugs, the like facility could be taken away from "the systematic enticement of and the enslavement in prostitution and debauchery of women," the court concluded that the reassertion of the simple principle that Congress is not to be denied the exercise of its constitutional authority over interstate commerce, and its power to adopt not only means necessary but convenient to its exercise, because these means may have the quality of police regulation—

Citing Two hundred and twenty-seventh United States, page 322.

Mr. President, bearing in mind what I said with reference to the phrase in the preamble to the Constitution, we are now, by this legislation, attempting to regulate the transportation of articles of commerce between the States; and the question is: Is it within the power of Congress, in providing for the general welfare, to regulate goods which may be the product of child labor? Other Senators here have discussed the effect of child labor upon the community and upon the Nation at large, and it is not necessary for me to take the time of the Senate to go into the details of that branch of the discussion. In my own State, for instance, we have what may be called drastic legislation upon this subject. I am in entire sympathy with it. When our legislature adopted these laws I know that there was an intense fight made against them from some sources, but I dare say that if the question were to come up anew in the State of Ohio again, those who opposed the legislation before would not permit its being repealed.

Having adopted this legislation, believing that the general welfare of the children of the State of Ohio would be served by limiting the age at which children should go into the mines or into the factories or into other places of employment, we are now confronted with this situation, speaking not only as citizens of the State of Ohio but as citizens of the United States: Other States see fit to permit the employment of children at a very immature age—12 or 13 years, perhaps. Does it not concern the general welfare of the children of the country to say that the products of the children of tender years, 12 and 13, shall not cross the State lines into other Commonwealths where, in harmony with the public sentiment of the country, we have seen fit to refuse employment to children in some industries under 14 years, and in other industries under 16 years, and limiting the hours of employment?

Mr. President, the distinguished junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] some days ago printed as an appendix to his speech a comparative statement of the legislation bearing upon this subject. I have not taken the time to compare his abstract of the laws of Ohio with the original statutes, but I want to call attention to just a paragraph or two:

States.	Employments prohibited.	Hours of labor.
Ohio..... Laws, 1913, 1914.	Under 14: In any acrobatic, mendicant, etc., occupations. Under 15: In any business whatever during public-school hours. Males under 15 and females under 16: In any mill, factory, workshop, mercantile or mechanical establishment, tenement house, manufactory or workshops, store, office, office building, restaurant, boarding house, bakery, barber shop, hotel, apartment house, boot-black establishment, public stable, garage, laundry, place of amusement, club, or as driver, in any brick or lumber yard, construction or repair of buildings, distribution, transmission, or sale of merchandise.	Boys under 16 and girls under 18: Not more than 6 days a week, nor more than 48 hours a week, nor more than 8 hours a day, nor between 6 p. m. and 7 a. m. Boys under 18 and girls under 21: Not more than 6 days a week, nor more than 54 hours a week, or between 10 p. m. and 6 a. m. Boys under 18 as messenger: Not between 9 p. m. and 6 a. m.

Mr. President, we had pretty full hearings upon this subject before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. We heard much from southern employers and others, and I am here willing to concede that that testimony showed that the conditions of child labor in the Southern States have materially improved within the last few years. Their objections seemed to be that if we were to place an inhibition against child labor as provided for in this bill it would serve to disorganize their forces in the mills.

Mr. President, I am not going to take the time to refer in detail to that testimony, but suffice it to say that there was a comparatively small number of these children under the inhibited ages employed in the mills of some of those who testified, and with all due respect to their statements upon the subject, I do not believe if this bill is passed it is going to interfere with the operations of those mills so as to do them serious injury. I am willing to depend upon the ingenuity of our manufacturers and their superintendents to reduce to a minimum, if we consider it only from the standpoint of dollars and cents, the injury which they will receive if this bill is to become a law. More than that, the injury, if any, which it may do to these companies—if we grant that it will do an injury to some of them—will be more than compensated for by the vast benefits to the children and to the community at large.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that I recognize the fact that there is some doubt about the constitutionality of this legislation, and as one of the friends of that measure, I should like to reduce to a minimum any danger there may be in that behalf.

I want to call the attention of Senators, and particularly those who are present, who as members of the Interstate Commerce Committee have this bill under advisement. Senators will remember that the first section of the bill as it passed the House provided that no producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in interstate commerce products of any mine or quarry or mill which has been produced in whole or part by the labor of children under the prohibitive ages or which is produced within the prohibited hours. In other words, the House bill prohibited the transportation of products into which entered the labor of children within the prohibited age. This section was redrafted. The Senate committee provision, in substance, reads as follows:

No producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any article or commodity or the product of any mine or quarry or manufactory which is produced in any mine or quarry or any manufacturing plant where prohibited labor is employed.

In other words, under the provisions of the bill as passed by the House there must be child labor of the prohibited kind in the article which is the subject of transportation. Under the Senate committee bill, if it is to become the law, goods which are transported and which may not have any child labor of the prohibited character involved in that product can not be transported if any prohibited labor is employed within the mine, the quarry, or the mill. When we conceive that we are somewhat in the twilight zone with this legislation—I want to beg all Senators to consider this very seriously—will we not be better serving the purposes which we all have in mind if we should adopt the House bill in this behalf rather than the Senate committee amendment?

Mr. President, let me see if I can make my point a little clearer. Let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that in a cotton mill in North Carolina child labor should be employed, and employed in entire conformity with the State law. Let us suppose, further, that the child labor is employed in that mill upon products which are only to be transported in intrastate commerce, and that other articles are being manufactured there which are manufactured by labor in entire conformity with the Senate committee bill, so that the manufacturer could be shipping goods in interstate commerce which were manufactured by children in entire harmony with the Senate committee bill, and, on the other hand, they could have children employed in the manufacture of articles to be used in intrastate commerce in entire conformity with the public sentiment and the public law of the Commonwealth of North Carolina—and it is not impossible that such a situation could arise. I confess that it gives me graver doubt about the validity of the Senate committee bill than I would have about the bill as passed by the House if this were to become the law.

I think from what I remember of the discussions of this matter in the committee, one of the purposes of the Senate committee bill was to liberalize the administrative features of the bill. I recognize the fact that if it were to come to a prosecution of a defendant and the Government was required to prove that child labor within prohibited ages was employed in the mill where it was produced the task of the Government would be much simpler than it would be if they were compelled to prove under the House bill that there was prohibited labor in the article being transported. But—

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a moment. Under the provisions of this bill the agents of the Government will have the right to visit these mills at any and all reasonable times, as I remember the provisions of the bill, and that being so—

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill omits the word "reasonable."

Mr. POMERENE. Possibly that is true. At any rate they are permitted to visit the shops and factories so that they may determine with reasonable certainty whether there was any of the prohibited labor involved. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. A little later in the consideration of the bill I intend to submit my views relative to the constitutionality of the House bill as compared with the constitutionality of the proposed Senate bill, but I may not think then to make the suggestion which I now desire to make to the Senator from Ohio. He has supposed an instance in which a child in harmony with the State law but contrary to the Federal law is engaged in the manufacture of commodities used only in the State of production. It is not likely that many such instances would occur, but it is possible that they may.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will agree with me that it is worthy of consideration when we are to determine the question of the constitutionality.

Mr. CUMMINS. My answer to the suggestion is this: The people of the United States are just as much interested in the children of a Commonwealth making goods for the people of that Commonwealth only as though the children were making goods for transportation throughout the country. The purpose of this bill is to prohibit the employment of these children under the ages specified or over the time specified.

Now, we want to prohibit the employment of these children, no matter what they are engaged in producing. I agree with the Senator from Ohio, that if the change in the form of the bill made by the Senate committee opens it to attack on its constitutionality widely or becomes more vulnerable to an attack on that account, then we ought very seriously and carefully to consider whether the substitution proposed should be made. I submit it with all deference. I know it is a subject upon which students of the matter may differ, but personally I think the substitute is more likely to be sustained in the Supreme Court than the House bill; and I will point out when we come to consider the matter the reasons which have led me to this conclusion.

Mr. POMERENE. The thought which the Senator has so well expressed had occurred to me as one that could be urged with considerable force in favor of the constitutionality of the Senate committee bill, and also the further thought, if I may be permitted to suggest it, that when it comes to legislation upon a subject of this kind the thought that is uppermost in the mind of Congress is to pass a law which is in harmony with the public sentiment of the country.

More than that, I think that a court in considering the question of the constitutionality of a law of that kind would give to Congress certain latitude in declaring the law in such a form that it would be less liable to be evaded.

I regret to say that I feel called upon to be away from the city to-morrow and perhaps the day following, and I wanted to give expression to my views to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me a moment. If I can be present when the vote is taken, I think I would prefer the House section to the Senate section; but if the Senate did not agree with me in that thought, I would rather see the Senate committee bill enacted than have it fail.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is this further advantage in adopting the substitute proposed by the Senate committee, the differences between the House bill and the Senate bill will then be in conference and they can be very carefully and maturely considered by the conference committee.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that very fully; but I think we ought to fully consider them on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is quite right about that.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that is all I care to say.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I rather agree with the Senator from Ohio who has just taken his seat that the House provision is preferable to the Senate committee amendment, and I expect to vote for that when the vote shall be taken; but whether that is adopted or the amendment of the Senate committee is agreed to, I expect to support the bill.

Mr. President, I think the most acceptable service to God is service to man. The highest end of government is the development and improvement of man, and if the man be improved the government will share his improvement and the moral sentiment will write the laws of the land. In the light of those self-evident truths a representative of the people truly desirous of promoting the welfare of the people should experience no difficulty in finding the path of duty which leads to the final settlement of the question before the Senate.

Mr. President, the importance of the subject matter treated in the bill before the Senate is far above matters of ordinary legislation. Its moral aspect challenges my interest and compels my support. This bill deals with immortal stuff. Its effect upon the affairs of to-day are of inconsequential concern when we consider the larger issues of the future. The salvation of the child is the hope of the race—the source of strength and life of the Republic—the highest function of a great Government. The temporary moral welfare of society depends upon it, the permanent material welfare of the State depends upon it, the glory of our civilization draws life and inspiration from it, and the attainment by the individual of the infinite consummation in the realm of eternity is impossible without it. The great Carlyle once said in speaking of the child: "Good Christian people, here lies for you an inestimable loan; take all heed thereof; in all carefulness employ it; with high recompense or else with heavy penalty will it one day be required back." The wisdom of that warning will not be lost upon thoughtful conscientious minds. It is particularly pertinent to the consideration of the measure before the Senate. In this age of material expediency, when the gold dollar has become the first god and commerce the religion with so many of our people, we are too prone to minimize the importance of the man, the individual man, and his relations to society, to government, and his obligations to the God of our fathers, and to magnify the achievements of mankind in the mass. It is becoming more apparent each day that "the individual withers and the world is more and more." As the great river gathers its volume from the many springs that send their rippling rivulets down the hillside to join the great current which rolls on majestically to the sea, so are the material wealth and moral qualities of a great nation contributed to by the efforts of individual men and women who in aggregate compose the citizenship of the Nation. If the condition of our country is not what it ought to be, if the blessings and burdens of government rest not alike upon the rich and the poor, the weak and the strong, vouchsafing to every man, woman, and child an equal chance in the race of life, in so far as laws may, the cause or reason can be found in the delinquencies of the individual citizen. It is therefore of vital concern that we should make sure and certain that the individual child is given a chance to develop the latent qualities implanted by God Almighty in his soul and to bring out the physical forces that belong to every well-ordered human body. We may well understand that the child is "the fragile beginning of a mighty end." I have listened with unabated interest to everything that has been said pertinent to this question since the discussion began, and I have been reminded often of the epigrammatic utterances of the great President of the ill-fated Confederacy, who out of the anguish of a heart rendered desperate by the misfortunes that encompassed him about, like Laocöon in the cruel contortions of the serpent, of adversity exclaimed, "We must not grind the seed corn of the Confederacy." He realized that if the youth of his country were sacrificed to the god of war, no temporary success, however brilliant, would avail anything if that was the price we had to pay for it.

There may be differences of opinion founded on logic and bottomed on the highest order of patriotism regarding the tariff; we may differ on the money question, the forms of religious worship, the procedure in our courts of law—I repeat we may differ about all of these measures, but there can be no difference of opinion regarding the vital, pressing necessity, the essential importance of taking care of the child of the race. Now, I am not going to trespass upon the attention of the Senate by entering upon an extended discussion of the constitutionality of this bill. That phase of the subject has received exhaustive consideration at the hands of the great lawyers of this body. Indeed, everything has been said on the subject that could be said both for and against the measure. I think probably the last word has been said on the subject. I have been impressed, however, with the fact that the Constitution is usually the refuge of the statesman whose interests or preconceived notions are to be subserved or supported by the invocation of the terms of that instrument. It is rather a convenient document in that regard. But there is one thing, Mr. President, that I have observed, and that is that the Constitution of the United States has never stood in the way very long of the enactment of any measure which public sentiment demanded should be enacted for the good of mankind. And that is as it should be—for the reason that governments are made for men rather than men for governments. I do not desire to be understood as holding that the provisions of the Constitution should be lightly considered.

On the contrary, I believe with Thomas Jefferson that our only security is in a written constitution and the strict observance of its provisions. I have often felt that it would have been better if the people of the United States had changed the Constitution at least once in a generation, as Jefferson advised us to do, in order that its provisions might be made more adaptable without too much construing to meet the demands of our complex civilization. But that has not been done, and the original document, therefore, has been made to suit conditions which were probably never dreamed of by its framers.

Now, as to the policies embodied in this bill, I am very sure that at one time in the history of our Government the majority of Democratic statesmen entertained views which would have relegated the question of regulating child labor to the States. I am quite satisfied also that the framers of the Constitution intended that questions of this character should be treated by the authorities of the States. Of course the framers of the Constitution, in the widest stretch of fancy, did not dream of the conditions which exist in this country to-day. And the provisions of the National Constitution as they framed it and understood it, strictly construed, were ample to take care of any issues that might arise out of the civilization which existed contemporary with the adoption of the Constitution. But, Mr. President—

New conditions teach new duties,
Time makes ancient good uncouth,
They must upward still and onward
Who would be abreast of truth.

The things that were, were so different from the things that are, that old principles and policies must be readjusted in order to make them meet the demands of the ever-changing pregnant present.

The complexity of our system, the multiform material interests to be subserved, the mad rush for gold, the cruel, heartless greed for gain, and the ingenuity and cupidity of the modern manipulator of business affairs renders it absolutely necessary that the powers of government provided for in the Constitution of the United States must be employed for the good of the people of all the States. Not in derogation of the sovereign rights of the States, but rather in harmonious cooperation with the States for the good of humanity. Congress has the right to regulate interstate commerce. There is no question about that. When that power was given to Congress by the framers of the Constitution, I do not believe that they contemplated that it would be used even indirectly for the regulation or the remote control of the internal affairs of a State. I do not think our Constitution builders had the instant case or anything like it in mind at all. But nevertheless and notwithstanding they gave to the Congress the right to regulate interstate commerce. And since Congress has that right it becomes the duty which enlightened statesmen will recognize as a benign use of a great power—it becomes the duty of Congress to use that power for the good of the people of the United States. The weak must be protected against the inhumanity of the strong, and the individual few from the unjust exactions of the many. If child labor, as it is tolerated in some of the States, tends to lower the standard of manhood, to weaken the virility, sap the moral force, and impoverish the mentality of the constituent elements of the body politic, then it is a wise use of this great governmental function to interfere so as to prevent that pernicious consummation. We all realize that the child in the cotton mills and in the factory who breathes the dust-laden, lint-poisoned, mephitic atmosphere of the damp, poorly ventilated room of the factory becomes a stunted specimen of humanity unable and unfit to appreciate and enjoy the privileges of citizenship in this free country. I have seen them with their little pinched faces, hollow chests, starved bodies, and poisoned souls go out of this industrial prison after being confined for 10 or 12 hours, not with the elastic step of childhood, the flush of health in the face, and the bounding spirit of the normal boy, but rather like old men worn and wasted, with the horizon of life fringed with a cloud of hopeless pessimism. The picture was indelibly impressed upon my memory.

Down all the stretch of hell to its last gulf
There is no shape more terrible than this,
More tongued with censure of the world's blind greed,
More filled with signs and portents for the soul,
More fraught with menace to the universe.

And I said to myself, no government can prosper and long survive that would permit such a wrong to be done to even one of its most insignificant and unimportant citizens.

No State will be strong very long whose men and women come from that unfortunate class. Like begets like in the physical world, and the rose will not grow from the seed of the thistle. Therefore the wrong is not only to the generation living, but it is a crime—a capital crime, against those yet unborn. What reason can be given, what statement, that rises to the dignity of an argument, can be made in favor of such a system? None can be made.

Ah! How unjust to Nature and himself
Is thoughtless, thankless, inconsistent man!

It is contended that the States are doing the things needful to protect their children. Very well, if that be true there is nothing in this bill that will interfere with the enforcement of the perfect State law or prevent the perfection of the State laws that need amending. There is one thing, however, which this law does, and that is, it puts all the States, so far as child labor is concerned, on an equal footing. Mr. President, I am going to vote for this bill. I am going to resolve the doubt of its constitutionality, if there be any, which seems to be pestering the minds of certain distinguished Senators—I am going to resolve that doubt in favor of the bill, because I recognize that the United States Government, acting with the States, is the only power beneath the stars that can save the children of America from the exactions of the conscienceless greed of the gold-worshipping capitalists of this country. The measure is full of good for the present generation, and it promises greater blessings for the generations of the future. I read an interesting story some days ago which gave an account of an Indian chieftain who went to New York City, and was shown the wonders of that great metropolis. He saw the cathedrals, and heard the soul-soothing music that came from the throat of the great organ, whose enchanting notes floated out upon the circumambient air like the melodies from a celestial choir. He was astonished by the skyscrapers, the hospitals, and the tenement houses, the imperial mansions, the crowded circus, and the airy span of Brooklyn Bridge—all filled his untutored mind with wonderment. "What is the most surprising thing you have seen?" asked a number of well-dressed, well-fed, luxuriously circumstanced Christian gentlemen of this benighted pagan who sees "God in clouds and hears Him in the wind." The savage lifted his red blanket and answered in three slow words, "Little children working." Edward Markham, commenting upon this, said:

It has remained for civilization to give the world an abominable custom which shocks the social ethics of the savage, for the Indian father does not ask his children to work but leaves them free to age and mature when they are ushered with solemn rites into the obligations of their fathers. Some of us are wondering why our savage friends do not send their medicine men as missionaries to shed upon our Christian darkness the light of barbarism.

I agree with Markham. I never see a little body-broken, soul-quenched specimen of humanity—the legitimate product of illegitimate conditions—the distorted things that grow out of "the social wants that sin against the strength of youth and the social lies that warp us from the living truth" that my heart is not filled with forebodings of ill for the State which tolerates such a thing. The day of settlement is inevitable. Nations, like individuals, in the end will be judged by the deeds done on the body. Then—

How will it be with kingdoms and with kings—
With those who shaped him to the thing he is—
When this dumb Terror shall reply to God,
After the silence of centuries?

But I should be surprised if Markham's suggestion does not provoke a supercilious sneer upon the lips of the Christian philanthropist, who weaves the bodies and souls of the little children working in his factory into fabrics and sells them and reaps the enormous profit of child-labor manufactured goods, with which he may fill his ungodly coffers. Child labor seems to be one of the peculiar fruits of what is called in our day and generation higher civilization. In the better days of Greece and Rome the children of both slave and master fared alike in the common nursery. In those glorious days the patriot and philosopher taught that the proper study of mankind was man.

The influences, shortcomings, and handicaps of heredity were resisted in a common effort to develop the child to become a masterful man. Even among the people from whom America gets her religion, by the commands of the Talmud, "children must not be taken from the schools even to rebuild the Temple." The wisdom of protecting the child is the first fruit of the finest and earliest civilization. All thoughtful men and women recognize the fact that—

'Tis education forms the common mind;
Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined.

Self-preservation should be the first law of nations as well as individuals. Excessive work in childhood universally results in mental and physical paralysis—it stunts the physique—empties the heart of passion and drives poetry from the brain. It results in general deterioration, which, in the course of time, will bring its victim on the dead level with the stolid ox. To prevent this, I repeat, it is the proper use of the function of government which is necessary not only for the child of to-day but the child of to-morrow and the child of all the years to come. Every student understands the potentiality of prenatal environment—the handicap of hereditary delinquencies—influences when once put into motion go on through time into endless eternity. It is "the dreaded sweep of down-streaming seas" whose end the mind can not measure. Unfortunately, Mr. President, every question of far-reaching and national concern touches the peculiar issue in which we of the South are most vitally interested. It has been said that possibly if the Federal Government assumed the right even to indirectly regulate the hours of child labor in the mills that it may invade the cotton fields of Mississippi and undertake to proscribe the planter in the control of his negro labor. Of course that is only a bugaboo. There is no more danger of the Federal Government interfering with the management of the southern farm with its negro tenants than there is of the Federal Government interfering with the western and northern farmer in the management of his wheat fields. And, of course, we all know there is no possibility of the Federal Government interfering with the western and northern farmer in the management of his wheat field. The fact is, it will never become necessary to legislate for the regulation of child labor on the farm in any section of this Republic. Usually the child on the farm is under the care and tutelage of its parents. The labor is moderate, the hours reasonable; life in the open air and well-ventilated homes insure health and happiness. The farm is the breeding place of the statesman, the business man, and the philanthropist—men who dominate the business affairs of the Nation, blaze the way in State and national policies, who lead at the bar, in the forum, and in the field of science, as a general rule, either are the sons of farmers, reared upon the farm, or the first generation, who have gone from the farm to the city. The fact is, but for the great army of recruits that go into the cities from the rural districts every year the population in the urban districts would decay with the third generation. But I have wandered far afield from the question at issue. Let us come back to the main question. I have given a great deal of thought to the race problem of the South, because I regard it as the most difficult problem with which the white people of this or any other country were ever called upon to deal. I do not believe that God Almighty in His infinite wisdom ever intended that the negro and white man should live together in the same country on terms of political and social equality. I know it can not be done and preserve the integrity of the white race and the splendor of our civilization, and for that reason I and other southern men are very sensitive to any suggestion of pernicious outside interference with that peculiar problem. We know the danger of ignorant outside intermeddling. And yet at the same time we realize that nothing definite looking to the solution of the race problem can be effected without national aid. Because it is a national question. As national in all of its elements as ever emanated from the pregnant womb of time. It is a problem which the Nation made, and the Nation alone can solve it. But that question does not enter here and is not even remotely related to the question of child labor. The negro is not a laborer in the factory. Time has demonstrated his utter unfitness for any position that requires prudence, providence, foresight, and an alert sense of self-preservation and self-control. He has been tried in the factory and found wanting. The only place for a negro as a successful laborer is that of a servant about the home or in the cotton fields of the Temperate Zone.

If the negroes had been successful in the cultivation of cereals profitable to the farmers of the North, probably the war would not have been fought and slavery would have remained in this country for a century longer. No; the negro does not enter into the question of regulating child labor. It is the white man's problem and one the white man must solve. I do not believe this bill is violative of the Constitution. I do not believe it is a misuse of the power incidental to the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, but, on the contrary, it is my deliberate judgment that it is a proper employment of a power which the Federal Government alone possesses. It is the declaration of a policy which places the man above the dollar. It is the highest form of conservation which recognizes that all the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, and that the government shall be good and wise and beneficent in the proportion that the individual man and woman is wise, prudent, and provident. It means the curbing of the greed for gain which brutalizes the beneficiaries and destroys the victims. It is a wise, beneficent use of a great governmental function, an augury of better things yet to be. If this Government is to live and fulfill the hopes and realize the dreams of the great men and women who gave it being, it must be through the enactment into law the higher and nobler purposes which animate the patriotic heart.

You may talk of reformations, of the economic plan,

That shall stem the social evil in its course;

But the ancient sin of nations must be got at in the man—
If you want to cleanse a river, seek the source.

This bill strikes at the source—deals with the source—and from the enactment of this measure I look for large, beneficent, humanitarian returns.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk, and ask the Secretary to read in my time, a communication from the secretary of the State board of education of my State, and also the paper to which he refers in his letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CONNECTICUT STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION,
Hartford, April 11, 1916.

To the Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the State board of education, held April 5, 1916, the following vote was passed:

Voted: That the Keating-Owen child-labor bill is a violation of the right of a State to promote education and industry in the way best suited to its agricultural, industrial, and educational interests.

The reasons for this action are on the inclosed sheet.

Yours, truly,

STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION,
By CHARLES I. HINE, Secretary.

CHILD LABOR—KEATING-OWEN BILL.

First, The State board of education issues all certificates permitting employment in mechanical, mercantile, and manufacturing establishments. This employment law has been administered primarily as an education measure by which prohibition of labor has automatically operated to detain children in school until the age of 16, and has resulted in a distinct extension of education as well as a restriction of employment.

The physical condition of children has been an equal factor with education in determining whether they shall be employed in a particular occupation.

Second, The restriction of hours of labor to eight interferes with part time and continuation courses, which should be encouraged. Children can be effectively protected against so-called "blind-alley" or dead-end employment by ample opportunity for consecutive vocational training in connection with regular occupations.

Third, The penalty is so severe that it will lead to blackmail and evasion and the employment of officers whose business is spying and espionage, which interfere with personal liberty and harass business.

Fourth, Fifty-seven per cent, or 800,000 inhabitants, of the State are engaged in manufacturing and mechanical industry. The State provides nearly 200 days' schooling for each child and enforces its attendance and employment laws with success, so that practically all the children 7 to 14 years of age are regular attendants upon school. The child who completes the common-school course has had expended upon his education more than $600. Having made this liberal and effective provision for schooling, the State has also entered upon a system of specific training in trades, including agriculture, adapted to the several localities and interests, which will be seriously jeopardized by the proposed legislation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I also ask the Secretary to read the substitute reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That no producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any article or commodity the product of any mine or quarry, situated in the United States, in which within 30 days prior to the time of the removal of such product therefrom children under the age of 16 years have been employed or permitted to work, or any article or commodity the product of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, situated in the United States, in which within 30 days prior to the removal of such product therefrom children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 years and 16 years have been employed or permitted to work more than 8 hours in any day, or more than 6 days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., or before the hour of 6 o'clock a. m.; Provided, That a prosecution and conviction of a defendant for the shipment or delivery for shipment of any article or commodity under the conditions herein prohibited shall be a bar to any further prosecution against the same defendant for shipments or deliveries for shipment of any such article or commodity before the beginning of said prosecution.

SEC. 2. That the Attorney General, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor shall constitute a board to make and publish from time to time uniform rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of securing proper enforcement of this act the Secretary of Labor, or any person duly authorized by him, shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time mines, quarries, mills, canneries, workshops, factories, manufacturing establishments, and other places in which goods are produced or held for interstate commerce; and the Secretary of Labor shall have authority to employ such assistance for the purposes of this act as may from time to time be authorized by appropriation or other law.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of each district attorney to whom the Secretary of Labor shall report any violation of this act, or to whom any State factory or mining or quarry inspector, commissioner of labor, State medical inspector, or school-attendance officer, or any other person shall present satisfactory evidence of any such violation to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States without delay for the enforcement of the penalties in such cases herein provided: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to bona fide boys' and girls' canning clubs recognized by the Agricultural Department of the several States and of the United States.

SEC. 5. That any person who violates any of the provisions of section 1 of this act, or who refuses or obstructs entry or inspection authorized by section 3 of this act, shall for each offense prior to the first conviction of such person under the provisions of this act, be punished by a fine of not more than $200, and shall for each offense subsequent to such conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, nor less than $100, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That no dealer shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this act for a shipment, delivery for shipment, or transportation who establishes a guaranty issued by the person by whom the goods shipped or delivered for shipment or transportation were manufactured or produced, resident in the United States, to the effect that such goods were produced or manufactured in a mine or quarry in which within 30 days prior to their removal therefrom no children under the age of 16 years were employed or permitted to work, or in a mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which within 30 days prior to the removal of such goods therefrom no children under the age of 14 years were employed or permitted to work, nor children between the ages of 14 years and 16 years employed or permitted to work more than 8 hours in any day or more than 6 days in any week or after the hour of 7 o'clock p. m. or before the hour of 6 o'clock a. m.; and in such event, if the guaranty contains any false statement of a material fact, the guarantor shall be amenable to prosecution and to the fine or imprisonment provided by this section for violation of the provisions of this act. Said guaranty, to afford the protection above provided, shall contain the name and address of the person giving the same: And provided further, That no producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall be prosecuted under this act for the shipment, delivery for shipment, or transportation of a product of any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, if the only employment therein, within 30 days prior to the removal of such product therefrom, of a child under the age of 16 years has been that of a child as to whom the producer or manufacturer has in good faith procured, at the time of employing such child, and has since in good faith relied upon and kept on file a certificate, issued in such form, under such conditions, and by such persons as may be prescribed by the board, showing the child to be of such an age that the shipment, delivery for shipment, or transportation was not prohibited by this act. Any person who knowingly makes a false statement or presents false evidence in or in relation to any such certificate or application therefor shall be amenable to prosecution and to the fine or imprisonment provided by this section for violations of this act. In any State designated by the board, an employment certificate or other similar paper as to the age of the child, issued under the laws of that State and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall have the same force and effect as a certificate herein provided for.

SEC. 6. That the word "person" as used in this act shall be construed to include any individual or corporation or the members of any partnership or other unincorporated association. The term "ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce" as used in this act means to transport or to ship or deliver for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to or through any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia or to any foreign country; and in the case of a dealer means only to transport or to ship or deliver for shipment from the State, Territory, or District of manufacture or production.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect from and after one year from the date of its passage.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course I know, as I assume every other Senator knows, that this bill is going to pass by a large majority; and those of us who are satisfied that it is an unconstitutional exercise of the power of Congress have, I am sure, no hope of defeating it, or even of delaying its passage. I certainly would not want to contribute to any delay. It is in behalf of a cause which I would be very happy to aid if I could do so. There may be a fair difference of opinion, I think, as to whether the cause will be aided by the passage of this bill. When I speak of the cause, I mean the proper regulation of the hours for which children may work at the occupations specified in the bill.

I think all the States in my section of the country have what everybody admits to be proper child-labor laws. They are enforced. There is no complaint there about their operation. The people are intelligent, and the children are well cared for. The mills and factories are sanitary and are under State inspection. That is true, I assume, of by far the largest part of the country. There may be here and there, in a few of the States, mills and mines and other places where children work which are not properly inspected, and several States which do not have sufficiently strict child-labor laws; but it must be remembered that even in those places the question is one of opinion and degree, and the circumstances differ, of course, in different parts of the country.

I am a member of the committee that heard the testimony upon this bill, and, of course, there was in the testimony evidence that in certain places conditions should be better than they are. I assume that that same statement could be made of the conditions of labor in general of men, women, and children. There are certain harsh employers, and many who are lost to any proper sense of being interested in the welfare of their employees; and there are certain sections where the State laws are ill enforced, not only as to child labor, but as to other kinds of labor.

I consider that those who have called in question the constitutional power of Congress to pass this legislation have performed a service to the country; and I think that even the strongest advocates of the bill would not want this kind of a bill to be allowed to slip right through the Congress of the United States without any discussion, and have it go to the Supreme Court, and possibly be declared to be unconstitutional, without a word having been said about that feature of the bill upon the floor. I also rather suspect that there are those who, in the ardor of their advocacy of the measure, thoroughly believing that it will be an improvement over State regulation of the subject, are carried away by their advocacy into a more positive belief in its constitutionality than in their calmer moments, perhaps, they would be willing to admit. For instance, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], who has made three most excellent arguments upon his side of the question during the session, and has reviewed and most carefully analyzed all the legal authorities upon the subject, declares here this afternoon that he has the gravest doubts about the constitutionality of the measure.

I do not misquote him when I use that expression; and I think quite a number of other Senators who are going to vote for the bill have the gravest doubts of its constitutionality. I think every lawyer, whether or not he can to his satisfaction squeeze this case in under the authority of the so-called White Slave case or any previous decision, must feel innately and intuitively that in certain respects, which it may be somewhat difficult to define, this does present a somewhat different principle from that involved in any of the previous cases. I feel so myself, and I feel also that the question is such a subtle one that it is not at all easy for me to state exactly, especially so that a layman would follow me, the exact point in which I think this bill proceeds upon a principle which is not involved in any of the previous decisions. I made a more or less unsuccessful attempt the other day to try to convey some of my feelings about this matter; and I am going very briefly this afternoon for a few moments to emphasize that, if I can.

In the Lottery case, One hundred and eighty-eighth United States—and I am reading from page 355—the court, in citing McCulloch against Maryland, state as a part of the opinion:

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

We all agree to that.

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution—

Of course, the end aimed at in the enactment of this legislation, as admitted by everybody, is the prohibition of child labor, the stopping of work by children who do not qualify under the terms and conditions of the act which we are proposing to pass—

Let it be within the scope of the Constitution.

Now, is the suppression of child labor in the several States within the scope of the Constitution? The advocates of the bill say that the power to regulate commerce, which, of course, is given to Congress, includes the power to prohibit commerce among the States, and therefore we have a right to prohibit transportation in products into which the labor of children has entered.

Of course nobody questions that the regulation of commerce among the States is within the authority of the Constitution, but why does that bring within the scope of the legislative power of Congress the right to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor? The Senator from Iowa, in answering that, says that the commodity clause of the railroad-rate bill was sustained in relation to coal and hay and several other products which were perfectly innocent, honest, and legitimate articles of commerce. But, Mr. President, that, of course, was in the exercise of an unquestioned power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution. The railroad bill, whatever it was called, was passed for the purpose of preventing discriminations and rebates; and when it was found that preferences, discriminations, and so forth, were granted or acquired by the carriers themselves, carrying their own products and preferring themselves in the furnishing of the instrumentalities of commerce, so that they could more readily compete with outsiders, that brought the question of goods owned by carriers right within the rule. It was a part of the system of attempting to prevent discriminations, and it was a clear case of the exercise of power to regulate commerce among the States. As to the statement of the Senator regarding prohibiting counterfeiting tools, and such articles as that, which are made for a criminal purpose, and where Congress has passed statutes prohibiting counterfeiting and making it a crime, of course those, being the tools of crime, fall directly within the admitted decisions of the Supreme Court as to articles that are noxious and designed for immoral purposes.

On the same theory the white-slave act was sustained, the court distinctly putting it on the ground that the transportation of a woman with a shipper at one end and a receiver at the other end for a distinctly immoral purpose, of course, was an immoral transaction, although the woman might have been perfectly pure and innocent, as the Senator from Idaho claims. The whole transaction was immoral in its inception and consummation, just as in the Lottery case, bringing it clearly within the purview of that case.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. On that question of prohibiting commerce the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] raised the point to-day that Congress had exercised that power with reference to levying prohibitive tariff duties.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Any kind.

Mr. FLETCHER. And I omitted to say at that time—I mention it now in order to see whether the Senator agrees with me or not—that there is a distinction between foreign commerce and interstate commerce within the meaning of our Constitution; that whereas the Constitution makers provided, as to foreign commerce, that situations might be taken care of which would result in protecting our people against foreign interference of any sort, as to interstate commerce the purpose was to facilitate and promote and make more free the commerce between the States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator, I have not looked at that particular feature in thinking about the particular point involved in this bill, but my impression is that the power of Congress as to both interstate and foreign commerce is absolute and plenary, and I do not personally think there is any difference in the power of Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. My impression is that the authorities on that subject make a distinction between foreign commerce and interstate commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know it has been so claimed in the past, and it may have been so decided in some litigation, but not having thought that was particularly necessary to the decision of the point in this case I had not considered it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I asked the question because the Democratic Party has for a hundred years been claiming that tariff laws were unconstitutional, and I hoped the Senator from Florida would look at the subject from that point of view. I assumed that he was opposing this law for the same reason, practically, that his party has been opposing tariff laws through these many generations. However, I rose to ask the Senator from Connecticut to point out in the Constitution the authority of Congress to suppress immorality.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think any such power is given, Mr. President; but I noticed, of course, as the Senator has, that every decision of the court sustaining a case of misbranding or fraudulent transaction in relation to interstate commerce does put it upon that ground.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Connecticut was reading from the opinion in the Lottery cases, I think.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. And he was quoting the decision of the Supreme Court in McCullough against Maryland.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The quotation read something like this:

If the end is legitimate—

Is that the word?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will repeat it if the Senator wants me to do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator repeat it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "Let the end be legitimate; let it be within the scope of the Constitution."

Mr. CUMMINS. The end must be legitimate and be within the scope of the Constitution. The lottery law was passed to suppress lotteries. The white-slave act was passed to suppress certain forms of immorality. There is nothing in the Constitution with regard to either of those, but upon the reasoning that is being adopted by the Senator from Connecticut neither of them would be within the scope of the Constitution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The courts have, of course, held in the late decisions that the power to prohibit, being conferred under the power to regulate, could be used to prohibit from interstate commerce fraudulent, misbranded, and adulterated articles. That is all I mean to say about that. It seems to me that there is a distinction between the power to prohibit fraudulent, adulterated, dangerous, noxious, diseased articles from being transported in commerce for the purpose of preserving the safety of the transportation lines and the safety of the commerce with which they commingle and saying because that is true you have the power to prohibit transporting in interstate commerce perfectly sweet, innocent, legitimate necessary articles because they were not manufactured in the State according to the conditions of some more elevated sentiment.

Mr. CUMMINS. In what possible way would a bottle of patent medicine that did not contain upon its label the ingredients of which it was composed tend to pollute or to contaminate or to infect a carload of merchandise or anything of that kind?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course it would not.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is that simply intended to secure the general welfare of the people?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator uses the term "pollute." I said "to endanger." One element of it is the physical pollution and danger. I agree also that the Lottery case proceeded upon the theory that it was not physical pollution but was moral pollution. It is the same with the misbranded article. There is no danger from the bottle of consumption cure that is advertised to cure, when it is nothing but water, but there is a fraud connected with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The end sought to be secured connected with the article is to protect the people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is designed to protect the people from having these articles sent out from the State in which they were made into interstate commerce. Every one of these cases has proceeded upon the theory that Congress having exclusive jurisdiction over the control of commerce among the States, no matter what a State did under its own laws, if Congress thought what it did was to corrupt the rest of the country it could say, "Although we can not go into your State and say that you shall not manufacture this thing—that is your own business—still if you do manufacture it in a way that we think will corrupt the rest of the country, we will put a prohibition against bringing it into the rest of the country." That is what I think has been decided in those cases.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator think we could prevent the transportation of stolen property?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it would be doubtful, I will say to the Senator. The crime of theft is a crime under the local State law. The fact that the goods were stolen I do not think would physically endanger the rest of the commerce of the country nor would it aid in crime. The crime has been committed, and I do not think that the object would be reasonable if Congress had it in mind that it could stop a man from stealing by prohibiting somebody else from transporting the goods.

Of course there is another objection to this bill. There are quite a number, but there is one in principle that occurs to me, even if the bill should be sustained as to its constitutionality, against the producer and mill owner. It makes it an equal crime for a dealer who has bought the article from the producer to send it into interstate commerce. I think even if the other proposition is sustained—if the bill is sustained as to the original producer—I do not believe it can be sustained after those goods have become a part of the lawful intrastate commerce and property of that State, that Congress could prohibit somebody else who now has the title of it from shipping it into another State and selling it after he has bought it, because the man from whom he bought it did not make it under conditions prescribed in the act of Congress. I may be wrong about that, as about everything else I have said.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. THOMPSON. To carry the question of the Senator from Iowa to a final conclusion, would not the prohibition of stolen property from entering into interstate commerce prevent a fraud upon the public; that is, by the stolen property getting into the hands of an innocent purchaser and he losing the property, if it should finally be determined to be stolen?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know what the effect would be in practice. Of course, when property is stolen in a State the thief always wants to dispose of the stolen property and convert it into money. I suppose he could do it in the State. We could not prevent that; and it may be that if its interstate transportation was prohibited to stolen property it would restrict the market for the resale of it, and possibly it would tend to stop thievery in that way.

It may be that we would have a right to prohibit stolen property in interstate transactions, but I do not see how that tends to help this situation one way or another. It would be one of these things that if sustained I think it would be sustained by the Supreme Court on the ground that the whole transaction was immoral and universally admitted to be so, and hence Congress could, under its right to regulate commerce among the States, withdraw the instrumentalities of interstate commerce from this universally admitted immoral and fraudulent conspiracy to hurt people physically or morally.

We must remember that this subject is not one which is universally considered to be one of morals, for instance. It is a question—and a grave question—exactly as to the age a boy or girl should be allowed to go to work. States that have child-labor laws have to adopt arbitrary ages, based upon experience no doubt, and the State laws are based upon the experience of their own people, with their own factories, and their own children. We here have prepared a bill which makes no distinction whatever for latitude, longitude, climate, the age at which children develop, which in the extreme southern part of our country is perhaps a year or two earlier than the extreme northern part; and we here are attempting to prescribe hard and fast conditions which will apply all over this broad land, both in interstate and foreign commerce, the result of which legislation, even if held to be constitutional, no man is wise enough to foresee. It might utterly tear apart and rend the commercial business interests of this country. Of course, the answer to that would be all everybody has to do all over the country is to submit, and then there will not be any tearing apart. That may be true, Mr. President. Of course, people who think their own labor law is better adapted to their own situation will not submit, and, of course, we have to have the decision of the court upon it.

Mr. President, I think the principle upon which this bill is founded and proceeds is of such tremendous importance, if sustained by the court, that really I tremble for the consequences.

I have been reading the brief of the Columbia law professor, Mr. Parkinson, which appears in the hearings before the committee. He advocated the bill before the committee, and he claims, and I think perhaps generally the friends of the bill claim, that whatever Congress may think to be for the general welfare we can, by the exercise of the commerce clause of the Constitution, put into practice and require of the several States under a penalty of an embargo against their exporting their products into other States.

Personally I would be glad if an agreement could be made to pass this bill and stop there along this line. I would not hesitate for a minute if I thought there was not going to be a dangerous sequence of consequences following the passage of this bill if sustained. Because, Mr. President, no matter what Senators or others may think as to whether this can possibly be sustained by the Supreme Court under the logic of the white-slave decision, all admit there is no difference in principle between the requirement we are making here of the different States as to the conditions upon which the labor of children shall be performed in their mills and a thousand other conditions as to other things that we can all imagine easily. The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has thought some of the suggestions along those lines were foolish and silly. But, Mr. President, I think they will all be met. I think the proponents of almost every propaganda that will arise in this country in the future will be sustained by the same arguments that are made here, to wit—

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator not think that the passage of this bill will furnish an opportunity to stop this thing at this point?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It will give the opportunity, certainly, and I hope it will be availed of. I know that is the only reason why the Senator from California is thinking of voting for the bill. I am not quarreling with anybody who wants to vote for it or with his reasons for doing it, but I am perfectly satisfied that this question will come up over and over again. These people are enthusiastic about this matter; they think they are doing the Lord's work, and that everybody who does not agree with them is an ally of the devil. Being inspired with the zeal of a crusader, and having a well-filled ammunition chest and plenty of enthusiastic employees, they will be here probably until some decision is made upon some bill that will settle this question one way or the other. I am not at all inclined to oppose the passage of this bill. I am trying simply to let the Supreme Court know that there was somebody here who would give them a little moral support, if you can call it that, and they need not feel that the whole Congress of the United States was demanding of them to pass the measure and that we had a clear right to do it.

What I am about to read I do not read in any spirit of criticism, but to show you why these people are able to keep this agitation up and why they will keep it up. The chairman of the committee asked Mr. McKelway what organizations he represented and how they were formed. Mr. McKelway says:

I am one of the secretaries—the southern secretary—of the National Child Labor Committee. It is an organization of people interested in the child-labor question, organized about 12 years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. How large a committee is that?
Mr. McKELWAY. It has a board of trustees of some 15 members, whose general offices are in New York City. We have some eight or nine thousand contributing members scattered throughout the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the basis of their contribution?
Mr. McKELWAY. They contribute about $60,000 a year—most of them from $2 to $25 a year.

They are a perfectly self-sustaining organization, and McKelway will sustain himself as long as they will permit him to keep his contract with the Treasury. So this agitation will go on, Mr. President. All I can say is that I hope and I know that when this bill is passed, either in the House or the Senate form, and is brought before the Supreme Court, that court will know that they are at the parting of the ways between a Federal Government of sovereign States with a central Government exercising only the powers that were delegated to it and necessarily implied from those delegated, and a centralized Government here in Washington, which, under the guise of controlling commerce among the States can say to any individual State in the land, whether it is the wheat-growing State of Minnesota, or the Dakotas, or the cotton-growing State of Texas, or the manufacturing State of New York, or the mining and mineral State of Pennsylvania, "Gentlemen, in our opinion, so-and-so is for the public benefit, and until you meet our views upon that question, change all your conditions and customs and laws according to the standard that the representatives of other States meet here in this centralized Government and set up, you have an embargo placed around you; you have a circle of fire around your State that you can not go through."

I know that the Supreme Court will understand that they are up against a change in the form of our Government. It is not simply the passage of this bill, but if it is sustained by the court we shall have changed our form of government. The Senate and the House of Representatives are sitting here almost like the British Parliament, not with the direct authority to do these things in any State, but saying, under the strained construction given to these opinions of our highest court—which is the law, and we can not question it—that we can exercise every power specifically granted by the Constitution to demand conditions and arrangements in your State, and nobody can question it. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who, I think, is too good a lawyer to stick to the opinion that he delivered here this afternoon, intimates that because the preamble of the Constitution says that, in order to form a Union and to promote the general welfare these specific powers are delegated to Congress, and all other powers are reserved to the donors, that anything that we think is for the general welfare—I have heard of "the general" before—can be done. If we only think it is for the general welfare we can do it under any clause; we can need not hunt out the commerce clause of the Constitution, because every grant of power from the States or from the people of the States to the central Government was to be exercised for the general welfare, of course. Under that theory, we can tax them all to death, because we think it is for their welfare to tax them—and I do not know but what we have started upon that course also, Mr. President—but I do not see why other Senators can not see that they are opening an entirely new door in this country; and I can not see why they do not see that it is an undesirable door to open.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] the other day said that we were lifting the lid of Pandora's box of evils, and so we are. The worst of it is that we are doing it thinking that we are acting in a holy cause. But, Mr. President, it means the beginning of the downfall of the kind of Government that we and our fathers and everybody who has lived between them and us had thought had been established in this country.

I do not think Senators would feel about this thing if they were back home the way they feel about it here; at least I judge the way they feel by the way they are going to vote. I know if I were a member of my State legislature or the governor of my State and I saw that this proposition was pending in Congress—that Congress was assuming authority to control all the men, women, and children in my State, to fix the hours of labor and the wages at which people might earn a living, and the power to cast out into starvation and to make tramps of a lot of able-bodied boys who would not go to school, but wanted to work—that such a bill was pending here and my Senators or Representatives were going to vote for it I would take the first train down here and tell them what the people at home thought about that sort of thing.

You are transferring to the General Government your local home rule and your local home government and the control of your own personal affairs, which, of course, the Government is interested in, because the whole is interested in the welfare of all its parts; but this Government is founded upon the principle that everything shall be done by the people within their own States at home, especially about their own conditions of work and labor, and that nothing shall be done down here to interfere with that except what is expressly delegated to this Government to do.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. I would ask the able Senator's legal opinion on that which I was a moment ago about to ask the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] when he took his seat. I ask the Senator now, he having addressed himself to a subject which I think is cognate, this question: The Supreme Court of the United States in several rulings has lately held that the interstate commerce law vesting in the Federal Government the regulation of commerce on railroads, practically superseded the laws of the several States. The Senator is aware of those decisions. I ask the Senator if, in his opinion, at the moment we pass the pending bill embracing this new field of Federal legislation, and being full in its terms to the extent defined, it would not then supersede the law of the State of Connecticut and the law of the State of Illinois and the law of the State of Iowa and the laws of other States on the same subject, bringing, therefore, all regulation by the States at an end, for that it had been superseded by national legislation?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that when the States delegated the power to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States, they gave the whole power to regulate interstate commerce to Congress; the States could not regulate it themselves; the States can regulate their intrastate commerce; but under recent rulings and the decision of the Supreme Court, of course, intrastate commerce in certain sections has become so mixed with interstate commerce that the Interstate Commerce Commission have taken jurisdiction of intrastate rates, I believe, to a certain extent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] will remember that this proposed law does not supersede any State law; it does not abrogate any State rights. It is not a regulation of the hours of labor or conditions of labor by children, but it is a regulation of commerce, which prevents certain commodities from being transported into other States, and I give it as my opinion that it will have no effect whatever on the law of any State, save indirectly it will have this effect upon the manufacturer or the producer, that if he employs children under the forbidden conditions he will have to confine his commerce to his State territory. If he employs children under the conditions permitted, then he can ship his goods beyond the State; but I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], who has turned all at once into so uncompromising an advocate of State rights, whether he had anything to do with the plank in the Republican platform adopted recently at Chicago, which proposes to amend the Constitution and to transfer to the central Government all the power of regulating commerce, not only interstate but intrastate as well?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The questions are coming thick and fast, Mr. President, and I will endeavor to shed a few of them. My belief in State rights is no modern acquisition, no sudden one. I have always believed in exactly what I now believe in. I believe that Congress has plenary power over everything that has been granted to it and everything that must be implied as necessary to carry out the grants, and that the States have the rest. I do not see how anybody who can read the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution can doubt that.

I am very glad I was not on the committee on resolutions at Chicago, because I could not then answer the question of the Senator from Iowa without betraying the confidence of the committee. I do not know how the plank to which the Senator refers got into the Republican platform, but I will say that if it ever gets into the Constitution, or if we pass legislation upon that subject, it will be done by a valid constitutional amendment, which will become to all intents and purposes a part of the Constitution.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], as well as to the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], that this is in my mind: Favoring, as we do, the spirit of this proposed enactment, if it is true, as the courts have decided, that where Congress has assumed the jurisdiction of a subject and covered it, with the object of reaching a result, then the State legislation upon the same subject is superseded, as it did hold in two cases in regard to interstate commerce, touching the regulation by a State and the influence of a State commission upon the railroads, may I ask the able Senators, might we not anticipate that, if this bill is being passed upon the theory that it is a regulation of interstate commerce, as I take it from the argument of the junior Senator from Iowa it is conceded that is the theory upon which the Federal Government is assuming to act, why will it not be contended, may I ask the able Senators, when it is passed that the laws of the States upon the same subjects have been superseded, for that the whole subject has already been covered by the Federal Government?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This is not upon the same subject, Mr. President. The Senator confuses, I think, the situation. Everybody admits we would not have the right to say what the hours of labor or the ages of children who labor in the States shall be. We can not make State statutes. This bill does not impose requirements as to age or hours of labor upon a single child in any State.

Mr. LEWIS. But will not the Senator admit that is the object of the measure—to prohibit goods from being shipped in interstate commerce in order to prevent children from being employed?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly; the object of the bill is to do indirectly what the Congress can not do directly. Of course everybody admits that. Everybody admits that Congress can not directly impose these limits upon the hours of labor or ages of children in industry in the several States. Therefore Congress proposes to say that any employer in any of the States who has children working for him who does not conform to the requirements as to hours and ages that Congress lays down shall have his goods proscribed from interstate commerce. Congress will boycott goods made in Illinois which come out of any factory or mine or quarry or cannery where a man employs a single child contrary to the provisions of this bill in any department of his establishment. He may have a hundred departments—and in a great many of the industrial establishments of this country, especially in the factories, a thousand different articles may be made, and perhaps a tremendous mail-order business and other kinds of business are carried on—but if there is employed in a particular room in one of those factories one child under the age prescribed by this bill the entire product of that mill is prevented from going into interstate commerce.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the goods which are shipped may have been manufactured entirely by adult labor, and the work of the children may have been devoted entirely to other things. Therefore the connection is not made between the manufacture by children of the article shipped and the actual transportation of it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; the Senator is perfectly right about that. As I say, and as he says, there may be a great steel works with blast furnaces going, and if there is employed one child under 16 years of age or under 14, or whatever the limit may be for that kind of an industry, in a particular part of that establishment, who has anything to do with producing any of the goods that are made there, although the child may be employed in a capacity that has nothing at all to do with the actual manufacture of the articles sought to be shipped, the entire product of the mill, which is made by men and women of lawful ages, is boycotted from interstate commerce.

But, Mr. President, I do not care so much about the details of the bill, although I think they are defective in several respects and would result in a great deal of complication, ultimately, however, their meaning would be ascertained by the court, and the desirability of such a bill would be proved in practice. I am voting against the bill because I think it is an unconstitutional exercise of power by Congress, and therefore, I can not honestly vote for it. Although I have not felt it necessary to harp upon the subject that I was not a cruel person and that I did not want to grind all the young children into gold for the greed of multimillionaires and the advancement of privilege and pelf and such alliterative lingo as that, Mr. President, I think I would treat a child as kindly as anybody else. My State has a very good child-labor law, and I would vote for any amendment to make it better, and, if I thought a National child-labor law would produce better results and would be constitutional, I would vote for that, but I will not vote for it because a lot of people delude a lot of other people into making a howl for it, and I will not vote for it under threats, nor can I change my views as to a question of law on account of prudential considerations concerning the number of ballots that may suddenly get into a box.

Mr. President, everybody agrees that the question of whether this is a constitutional exercise of power is an exceedingly doubtful one. Why do they not bring forward a constitutional amendment? Why do they not come forward, as the women suffragists have done, and say, "We want a constitutional amendment now, so that Congress can regulate the hours of labor of children in the 48 States of the Union?" Why do they not do that? Because they know that there is not a State that would ratify such a proposed constitutional amendment. There is not a State that would turn over its authority over its own children and its police powers to the Federal Government in that respect. Perhaps it would be inconsistent for them to ask for a constitutional amendment to the effect that "The Congress shall have power to regulate child labor." Then, let them come forward and ask for an amendment providing that Congress shall have the exclusive power to regulate the hours and ages at which men, women, and children shall work, and the States shall have nothing to do about it, because the States have fallen to such a low estate that they do not know enough to act wisely, or else they can not be trusted. How many votes do you think a constitutional amendment would get providing that Congress should regulate the internal affairs of the people of the several States? It would not get any. There is not a Senator here who would vote for such an amendment, and if he would not, why should he vote for the pending bill without any such amendment?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator speaks of a constitutional amendment. Suppose that Congress should adopt a constitutional amendment providing that the Congress shall have power to regulate child labor in interstate commerce, what would be the effect of that kind of an amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the effect would be that it would be unintelligible, because I do not know what child labor in interstate commerce would mean.

Mr. CHILTON. If in the regulation of interstate commerce Congress finds it necessary to regulate child labor, would that not be all right? Would not that necessity give the Congress the power?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think we have undoubtedly the right to regulate the hours of labor and the ages of labor in the instrumentalities of interstate commerce now, and I think we have done so repeatedly, as in the case of prescribing the number of hours that telegraphers and trainmen shall work.

Mr. CHILTON. When the Senator concedes that, does he not concede the entire case?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not concede the case I have been talking about; I do not know what case the Senator refers to.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator has been talking very interestingly about the case that is before the Senate; and I do not think he does his speech justice by intimating that he has not been confining himself to the immediate matter the Senate is considering. The Senator, however, made the point that in order to meet the question directly there should be an amendment to the Constitution. If we pursue that a little further, it might throw some light upon the question. Some of us contend that, under the power to regulate interstate commerce, Congress can regulate it as it pleases; and that the present grant of power is all sufficient for this bill. Now, as proof that that is true, let us see where we would be if we were to pass a constitutional amendment granting directly that power as suggested by the Senator. Certainly if the Constitution were so amended as to grant us the right to regulate labor in interstate commerce, that would be all-sufficient to embrace child labor and every other kind of labor. The present grant of power is to regulate commerce between the States; if we should add to that grant the words "including labor engaged in producing articles which are subject to such commerce," the question is, Would that enlarge the present grant? It seems to me that in answering the question that I asked, as he did, the Senator practically concedes that the power is in Congress now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No, Mr. President. Of course the Senator must remember, if he has read this bill, that it does not purport to control the ages or the hours of laborers in interstate commerce at all.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It has nothing to do with laborers in interstate commerce. It prevents any mill or productive agency from shipping out of the State where it is located anything made by it if there was concerned in its manufacture any child under a certain age.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They were not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. CHILTON. Now, if this be a regulation of interstate commerce there can be no doubt of the constitutional power.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If what be a regulation of interstate commerce?

Mr. CHILTON. The bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, of course not.

Mr. CHILTON. Construed as the Senator says, if it be a regulation of interstate commerce, there is nothing to argue here as to constitutionality.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is not.

Mr. CHILTON. There is not. Therefore a constitutional amendment making that perfectly clear could be in the language which I suggest. Those of us who think that the amendment suggested would add nothing to the grant may be excused for differing from the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They would have nothing to say against the constitutionality of it; but they never would vote for it, because no Senator would have the nerve to deliberately stand here and delegate now to the National Government the right to invade his State and fix the hours of labor and the ages of labor.

Mr. CHILTON. That is the Senator's opinion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is, in my judgment. I would not dare vote for it. The Senator from West Virginia is a courageous man, and he might do it. So I say I simply instance that, not because I expect anybody to introduce any such amendment, because they know it could not pass, and they want to worm this thing through between the hiatuses of these recent decisions of the Supreme Court, backed up by an intimidating sentiment. They think they can scare Senators into voting for this thing or defeat them for reelection, when they know that it is only by the most violent stretch of the Constitution that they can successfully make the Supreme Court sustain it. But they think that if they can bulldoze the whole Congress, both branches, the Supreme Court will lie down, and this vista will open wider and wider until every proposition that can not be gotten through Congress in any other way will be based upon the commerce clause of the Constitution, and all the commerce of all the States will be put under the ban unless they agree to it.

Even the Supreme Court, if it takes this fatal step, will be compelled to be led on from one step to another; and there is no end to it, Senators. There is no end to it. Now, to the Senator who says he does not want an end to it, I have nothing to say. The Senator who thinks that the Senate and the House of Representatives can govern all the people of this country, not as to their foreign relations and their legitimate interstate-commerce operations and as to the things that have been specifically delegated to us, but that it can govern all the people in every home town and village in this whole country better than those people can govern themselves in their local affairs, knows exactly what kind of a government he is trying to make of this.

Now, however righteous the cause may be, however anybody may dislike to be called reactionary and not responsive to the finer impulses and affections, and so forth, we have sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, and to maintain it against all foes, foreign and domestic; and some of the worst of them are right here—domestic.

Mr. President, I do not object to a Senator or anybody else voting for this bill if he is convinced, or 90 per cent convinced, that it is a constitutional exercise of power; but to the Senators who say they have the gravest kinds of doubts about it, I say that I think a man with the gravest kind of doubts about a matter of this kind, which is a novelty and an experiment, had a great deal better give the Constitution of his country the benefit of the doubt; and I think that as a coordinate branch of this Government the Senate at least ought to try to sustain the Supreme Court in maintaining and defending the Constitution of our country, and not assist in twisting and making it into something entirely different from what any of us thought it was.

Of course, I realize that the Constitution must expand and develop and grow with the growth of the country; but I have no sympathy with men who, when the highest tribunal of the country has to give the gravest consideration to the interpretation of the Constitution, will stand up here and say that "every time anybody tries to do anything that is for the benefit of the people somebody raises the old bogey of the Constitution." I do not think that is a proper spirit at all. Of course, if the Constitution is simply something that is impeding the welfare of the people, they had better tear it up and get rid of it at once. Repeal it; be orderly about it, but repeal it, or pass an amendment that it is no longer in force and that Congress shall have power—just one article will do it—to promote the general welfare. Then you will not hear any more about "the old bogey of the Constitution."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Ordinarily the Senator from Connecticut is very clear and perfectly easy to understand, but I do not know what he means by saying that we ought to give the Constitution the benefit of the doubt. When a question comes up for consideration, and a Senator is doubtful or balancing, if you please, with regard to its constitutionality, is it giving the Constitution the benefit of the doubt to decide it in favor of the law or against the law?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I said, Mr. President, I have no difference of opinion at all with the Senator who feels himself equally balanced; but I said when a Senator is of the opinion, or about 90 per cent of the opinion—to express it in that way—that a law is unconstitutional, then, I say, give the Constitution the benefit of the doubt and vote against the thing.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know anything about these percentages of doubt.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I see why the Senator failed to understand me.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have heard the expression used here a good many times that a man has 25 per cent conviction, or 50 per cent conviction, or that a law is 75 per cent good. All that is very mysterious to me. I do not begin to understand it. To me, if there is a question which involves a doubt under the Constitution, I give the Constitution the benefit of the doubt when I decide that it is constitutional. That is my interpretation of the Constitution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It depends, perhaps, on how badly the Senator wants to get the legislation through.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it is perfectly fair, as the Senator states, if a Senator is fairly balanced, and he can not make up his mind, to give the legislation the benefit of the doubt, if he thinks that it is good and he would like to have it that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let me explain to the Senator from Connecticut I think I fairly represent a type here of minds that have been considering this bill. A man has very little doubt after he has studied a question and reached a conclusion; that is, he has little doubt as to the manner in which he would decide the question if he were the judge. Now, I put my own case as an instance. I have given a good deal of study to this question. I know how I would decide it if I were a judge. If I were a member of the Supreme Court and the question came before me, I know certainly and absolutely how I would decide it; but when I am asked, "What will the Supreme Court decide when the law reaches that tribunal for decision?" the doubt arises. I do not know. I can only conjecture, drawing my conclusions or my conjectures from the opinions already rendered. Now, is that the sort of doubt which the Senator from Connecticut has in mind?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. I think, if I understand the Senator at all, if he thinks that if he were a judge of the Supreme Court he would decide this bill to be constitutional, and he would like to see this legislation in effect, he ought to vote for it, by all means.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have never had any doubt about my duty in the matter, but I have wondered, in the discussion about doubt, whether it really was a doubt in the mind of the person who was considering the matter here, or whether it was a doubt with respect to the ultimate decision of the question by the court. I think it is the latter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know; but I did not use the word "doubt" in that way at all. I am talking about the doubts in the Senators' minds as to the constitutionality of the legislation, their construction of the Constitution. My construction of it is that this bill is unconstitutional. The Senator, I assume from what he says, is going to vote for the bill, and if he were a judge I think he would decide that it was constitutional. At any rate, he says he knows exactly how he would decide, and he is not in any doubt as to how he would decide it if he were a member of the court.

Mr. CUMMINS. None whatever.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Neither am I. I think, therefore, the Senator is entitled to have his own judgment about whether a proposed bill for a public act meets with the requirements of the Constitution under the decisions of the Supreme Court, which are the tools with which he has to work. I think it is his business to make up his own mind on that question, form his own construction of the Constitution, and vote it. Now, if the Supreme Court takes a different view, that is not his fault; but thenceforth it is his duty to construe the Constitution as the court has done, although he may think they really erred.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I agree perfectly with the Senator from Connecticut about that proposition. The real doubt, the legitimate doubt, I have had with regard to this legislation is respecting its desirability—the policy of the legislation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a grave doubt about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That gave me a good deal of concern in the beginning, knowing that the greater number of the States had very fair, and some of them very efficient, child-labor legislation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I had intended to speak 5 or 10 minutes, but I have been engaged in colloquies longer than I expected to be. I think that this would not only be considered to be an unconstitutional exercise of power, on the ground that child labor and the practice of children working at certain ages has no such relation to commerce among the States as that it gave Congress any authority to legislate about it, but I think the legislation would be in violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. I think that to say to all these productive agencies of the country that their goods, which may be lawfully made and sold within the borders of their States, can not, unless their child labor conforms to the standards set up by us, circulate in interstate commerce, which we were given authority to regulate and control largely for the purpose of keeping the channels of communication open, but not exclusively so, is to take their property in contemplation of law without compensation, and I think on that ground it would be set aside by the Supreme Court.

As I say, I have no intention of trying to delay a vote upon this bill; and all I can say is that, as at present advised and unless converted to the other view, I shall be constrained to cast my vote against it when it comes up for final action.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that not later than 6.30 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, and that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the pending bill will be temporarily laid aside.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had heretofore been signed by the Speaker of the House:

S. 3069. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved March 4, 1915; and

H. R. 12197. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to the appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

And the VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. GALLINGER conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by E. T. Taylor, jr., one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 4654. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5914. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 6181. An act for the relief of Letitia W. Garrison;

H. R. 7883. An act for the relief of Charlotte M. Johnston;

H. R. 11240. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 12194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 13620. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 14576. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 16380. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Highland Township, Pennington County, Minn., to construct a bridge across Red Lake River;

H. R. 16534. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboisstown, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16604. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Montgomery, Lycoming County, Pa., to Muncy Creek Township, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16764. An act to authorize the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties, in Pennsylvania, their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Watsonstown, Northumberland County, Pa., to White Deer Township, Union County, Pa.;

H. R. 16875. An act granting the consent of Congress to Crisp County, Ga., to construct a bridge across Flint River, Ga., between Crisp and Sumter Counties; and

H. R. 16891. An act granting the consent of Congress to Traill County, N. Dak., and to Polk County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TAGGART. I present a communication in the nature of a petition from the South Bend Woolen Co., of Indiana, and also a communication from the president of the University of Notre Dame, Indiana, with reference to a bill which I had the honor of introducing, being S. 6721, authorizing the formation and organization of volunteer motor car reserve companies. I ask that the communications be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTH BEND WOOLEN CO.,
South Bend, Ind.

Mr. E. A. STOLL,
263 Farmers' Trust Building, City.

MY DEAR MR. STOLL: I am in receipt of your general circular letter of July 17 with reference to your proposition to form a volunteer organization to assist the United States Government in case of war, and we are in hearty sympathy with the idea.

We believe it is a splendid movement and should receive the support of all loyal Americans who have the means to be of service through the motive which you have devised.

If this becomes a successful movement, we believe you, whom we understand to be the originator of this idea, can be proud of performing a great service to our country, and while we have no automobiles which we could place in military service, nevertheless we might be able to assist in some other way, and you can count on our hearty cooperation as well as membership, and we will be pleased to sign the charter application when presented to us.

Yours, very truly,

SOUTH BEND WOOLEN CO.,
By E. L. BURCH, Manager.

UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME,
Notre Dame, Ind., August 4, 1916.

Mr. E. A. STOLL, South Bend, Ind.

MY DEAR ED: Thanks for your letter and for the invitation to become a charter member of the new organization. You have my permission to enter me as such.

I am returning the newspaper clipping according to your request.

Cordially, yours,

JOHN CAVANAUGH, President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present telegrams in the nature of memorials from Fred Garretson, mayor; Richard F. White, postmaster; Ira R. Crouse, alderman at large; William Hilker, alderman; John W. Kelly, alderman; H. E. Pickerspiel, police recorder; Andrew S. Wight, city attorney; John K. Sheehy, president board of education; Samuel J. Mason, city engineer; and J. Logan Clevenger, editor of the Evening News, all of Perth Amboy, in the State of New Jersey, and from H. Calder, of Glenridge, N. J., remonstrating against the proposed tax on munitions of war and copper. I ask that the telegrams may be received and properly referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of the Board of Supervisors of Siskiyou County, Cal., remonstrating against the proposed inheritance tax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARDWICK:

A bill (S. 6800) to authorize suits against the United States to test the constitutionality of the cotton tax paid between the years 1861 to 1868, inclusive; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 6801) granting an increase of pension to William A. Byus (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6802) granting an increase of pension to Carrie L. Barnes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota:

A bill (S. 6803) granting an increase of pension to John W. Thomas (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 6804) to authorize the advancement of funds to survey, construct, and maintain roads, trails, and bridges within Indian reservations; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 6805) granting a pension to Francis M. Wright (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CULBERSON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162) proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on Finance.

VOLUNTEER MOTOR-CAR RESERVE COMPANIES.

Mr. TAGGART. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 6721) authorizing the formation and organization of volunteer motor-car reserve companies, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 1, line 5, amend by striking out the word "responsibility" and inserting the word "accountability";

On page 1, line 13, after the words "granted the," insert the word "following";

On page 1, line 13, strike out the words "whose names are subscribed hereto" and insert "to wit, Rome C. Stephenson, Rev. John Cavanaugh, C. S. C., Gabriel R. Summers, F. A. Miller, C. B. Stephenson, Samuel Leeper, Edgar A. Stoll, F. A. Bryan, Fred. L. Dennis, E. Louis Kuhns, John J. McErlain, J. C. Ellsworth, Robert Robertson, Clyde M. Valentine, Dr. Charles E. Varier, P. K. Goetz, Samuel M. Adler, H. W. Eldredge, George A. Robertson, Samuel Spiro, Julius Seeberger, Thomas H. Brandon, Fred W. Keller, E. H. Miller, Richard Elbel, Charles Coonley, W. G. Crabill, Samuel Parker, Dr. Stanley A. Clark, D. B. J. Schafer, R. B. McNerny, Abe Livingston, Walter A. Funk, George M. Sherman, Dr. F. R. Carson, C. N. Chubb, Dudley M. Shively, E. L. Burch, Arthur M. Russell, Dr. Frank D. Hager, Herman A. Tobulka, Abe Frank, William K. Lampert, George L. Hager, W. R. Baker, O. A. Clark, Frank B. O'Brien, Fred. J. O'Brien, Charles L. Zigler";

On page 2, line 19, strike out the word "the" and insert the words "a valuable";

On page 2, line 20, strike out the word "of," the first word in the line, and insert the word "for";

On page 2, line 21, strike out the word "is"; and

On page 2, line 22, after the word "hereby," insert the word "is."

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 526).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon if this is a complete report?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is a complete report on the Army bill. I desire to have it printed and lie on the table. I shall probably ask to have it taken up for consideration some time to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will lie on the table and be printed.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 42, 43, 52, 54, 57, 58, 60, 72, 75, 77, 88, 96, 101, 104, 130, 131, 135, and 140.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 8, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 27, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 39, 40, 44, 45, 47, 49, 53, 55, 62, 63, 65, 68, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 85, 86, 87, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 97, 98, 103, 105, 107, 110, 111, 114, 117, 118, 126, 127, 128, 129, and 136, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Contingencies of the Army: For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff; for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, including the employment of translators and exclusive of all other personal services in the War Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., or in the Army at large, but impossible to be anticipated or classified; to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, including the payment of a per diem allowance not to exceed $4, in lieu of subsistence, to employees of the War Department traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts, $50,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$14,281,766"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7 of the bill, line 10, after the word "section," insert the following: "Provided further, That of the sum last above mentioned $900,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, will be available for paying and otherwise providing for such officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps and such enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps as may be called into active service"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and in lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept for the United States from any citizen of the United States a donation of a tract or tracts of land suitable and desirable in his judgment for the purposes of an aviation field and remount station, the terms of the donation also to authorize the use of the property donated for any other service of the United States which may hereafter appear desirable."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is directed to investigate the suitability of the various military reservations for aviation purposes, and should any of the reservations be found not suitable and not available for aviation he is authorized, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, for the United States of America, such land as may be necessary for aviation purposes, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for said purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$10,000,000: Provided, That in applying section 25 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, the President shall assign to officers of the Army such constructive dates of original commission, from which lengths of commissioned service shall be computed, as will preserve their rights to promotion in accordance with their relative order on the lineal lists of their arms and continue in effect losses of files occasioned by sentences of courts-martial or failures to pass required examinations for promotions, said constructive dates of original commission to be subject to change whenever a change thereof may be necessary in order to carry into effect losses of files hereafter incurred by any officer through a sentence of court-martial or a failure to pass a required examination for promotion: Provided further, That in determining the arm from which a detail is to be made to a vacancy in the detached officers' list, as provided in the third proviso of section 25 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, the officer of any grade who is the senior in that grade according to the constructive dates of original commission provided for in the preceding proviso shall be considered the senior in length of commissioned service of all officers of that grade: Provided further, That in determining the rights of officers in the last proviso of section 24 of said national defense act, officers retired before the separation of the Field Artillery from the Coast Artillery shall be regarded as having belonged to the Field Artillery: Provided further, That when by reason of increase in the arm, corps, or branch of the service in which an officer is commissioned his loss of files in lineal rank due to suspension from promotion on account of failure to pass the required examination therefor exceeds the loss he would have sustained if no such increase had occurred, he shall, if promoted upon reexamination, be advanced to the position he would have occupied in the grade to which promoted had no increase occurred: And provided further, That the general officers of the line who were appointed as such pursuant to the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 1191), shall take rank in their present grades over all officers hereafter appointed to like grades"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$2,225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$9,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$18,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act or previous acts of Congress shall be construed to prohibit the paying of men enlisted by State authorities of any State for militia organization for the purpose of bringing said organization up to the minimum necessary to permit of the muster in of said organization, from the date of such enlistments to the date of muster in or from date of enlistment to date of rejection, after physical examination."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$700,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$300,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$2,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$800,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$1,500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 9 of the printed amendments, line 1, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$675,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$700,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$375,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: ", which limitations shall include the grades of brigadier general, major general, and lieutenant general"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment strike out the following: "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint to the grade of major general on the retired list of the Army any brigadier general now borne on said list who served with credit in the Army throughout both the Civil War and the War with Spain, as well as during the interval between said wars, and who, being a general officer, exercised with efficiency and gallantry the command of a brigade or of a higher unit in action or in actual operations against an enemy, and who in consideration of services so rendered was recommended to be a major general, United States Volunteers, by the commanding general of the Army, as shown by the records of the War Department: Provided, That any brigadier general on the retired list who as senior colonel commanded with credit a brigade or higher unit in the Civil War, though not so recommended, may be advanced in grade as authorized by this paragraph if he fulfills the other requirements thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$712,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For three months' additional pay to enlisted men reenlisting within the period of three months from date of discharge from first enlistment"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For temporary employment, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of additional clerks in the field on account of the induction of additional forces into the service of the United States, $50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted in said amendment; on page 20, line 13, of the bill, strike out the comma, and on the same page of the bill, line 5, after the word "Army," insert the following: "$20,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted in said amendment insert the following: "$11,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That $250,000 of the appropriation provided for in this paragraph shall be expended in the purchase of material and the construction of tent floors, framing for screens, and screens, to be added to the equipment of the tents now being used by the Army of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted in said amendment insert the following: "$2,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert the matter inserted by said amendment on page 26 of the bill, line 3, after the word "discharge," where it occurs the first time in said line; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$23,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and the preparation of camp sites, including the procurement of water, installation of water and sewer systems, construction of roads, and the construction of temporary kitchens, mess shelters, latrines, bathhouses, and storehouses for the storage and safekeeping of supplies at mobilization camps in the several States for the forces called or drafted into the service of the United States, and to be available from June 18, 1916, $4,000,000"; and on page 29 of the bill, line 18, strike out the word "and" and insert a semicolon after the word "employees" in the same line and on the same page of the bill, instead of the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$20,280,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That hereafter the accounting for Army supplies or property and the fixing of responsibility therefor shall be according to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in line 2 of said amendment insert "$3,146,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$860,534: Provided, That $6,000 of this sum may be used for repairing the military road in front of the east side of Arlington Cemetery; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$4,500,000, of which sum $500,000 may be used under the direction of the Secretary of War in the erection or rental of temporary hospitals for the care and shelter of the sick and injured: Provided, That so much of the act of June 3, 1916, as relates to the age limit for eligibility to appointment of first lieutenants in the Medical Department of the Army, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided further, That after January 1, 1918, the maximum age limit for eligibility to appointment of first lieutenant in the Medical Department of the Army shall be 32 years"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the purchase of material to be used in the construction of a trade school building at the Engineer School, to remain available until expended, $9,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That authority is granted for the purchase, maintenance, and repair and operation from this appropriation of not to exceed 38 motorcycles, including those on hand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$475,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$10,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That not more than $5,000,000 of this appropriation may be used in the purchase of ammunition"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$3,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That not more than $1,500,000 of this appropriation may be used for the purchase of articles not manufactured by the Government and necessary for small-arms target practice"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for use in target practice, targets, target materials, and other necessary accessories, to rifle clubs organized under the rules of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and to schools having a uniformed corps of cadets and carrying on military training, in sufficient number for the proper conduct of target practice."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$9,500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$6,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "$6,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$10,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$5,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$10,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$5,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the period in line 8 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, except as follows:

On page 49 of the bill, line 2, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$50,000."

On page 49 of the bill, line 6, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$25,000."

On page 49 of the bill, line 16, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$25,000."

On page 52 of the bill, line 7, strike out the words "Territory of Hawaii" and insert "Territories."

On page 52 of the bill, line 20, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

On page 53 of the bill, line 8, after the word "laborers," insert the following: "at $660 each per annum."

On page 53 of the bill, line 14, strike out "$35,000" and insert "$17,500."

On page 53 of the bill, line 17, strike out "$15,000" and insert "$7,500."

On page 53 of the bill, line 19, strike out "$60,000" and insert "$30,000."

On page 53 of the bill, line 23, strike out "$60,000" and insert "$30,000."

On page 54 of the bill, line 2, strike out "$4,000" and insert "$2,000."

On page 54 of the bill, line 6, strike out "$175,000" and insert "$75,000."

On page 54 of the bill, line 9, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000."

On page 54 of the bill, line 12, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$12,500."

On page 54 of the bill, lines 20 and 21, strike out the word "Territory" and insert the word "Territories."

On page 55 of the bill, line 3, strike out the word "Territory" and insert the word "Territories."

On page 55 of the bill, strike out line 20.

On page 55 of the bill, strike out all on line 21, down to and including line 25, on page 56 of the bill, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Supplying and exchanging Infantry equipment, National Guard: For the purpose of manufacturing, procuring, exchanging, and issuing model of 1910 equipment to the Infantry and other dismounted organizations of the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia: Provided, That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of War a sufficient number of Infantry equipment, model of 1910, shall have been procured and shall be available for the purpose the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue on the requisition of the governors of the several States and Territories, or the commanding general of the District of Columbia National Guard, such numbers thereof as are required for equipping the National Guard in said States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, without charging the cost or value thereof or any expenses connected therewith against any allotments to said States, Territories, or the District of Columbia: Provided, That the equipment thus issued shall be receipted for and shall remain the property of the United States and be annually accounted for by the governors of the several States, Territories, and the commanding general of the District of Columbia National Guard as now required by law, and that each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia shall, upon receipt of new equipment, turn in to the Ordnance Department of the United States Army, without receiving any money credit therefor and without expense for transportation of Infantry equipment now in its possession, the property of the United States, and replaced by articles of the model of 1910 equipment, $400,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; to provide standard military arms and ammunition, indoor gallery rifles and ammunition; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of instructors; for clerical services; for prizes, trophies, badges, and other insignia; for the transportation of employees, instructors, and civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services, and for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and to remain available until expended, $300,000: Provided, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to appoint, as director of civilian marksmanship, under the direction of the Secretary of War, an officer of the Army or of the Marine Corps."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the support of, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, or so much of said amount as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and not more than such enlisted man has been contributing monthly to the support of his family at the time of his being called or drafted into the service of the United States or during his enlistment period in the Regular Army at the time of such call or draft of the Organized Militia or National Guard, the family of each enlisted man of the Organized Militia or National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge from such service, and the family of each enlisted man of the Regular Army until his discharge from active service therein or until the discharge of the Organized Militia or National Guard from such service if such enlisted man is at that time in active service in the Regular Army, which family during the term of service of such enlisted man has no other income, except the pay of such enlisted man, adequate for the support of said family: Provided, That the action of the Secretary of War in all cases provided for in this paragraph shall be final, and no right to prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States against the Government of the United States shall accrue to such enlisted man, or to any member of the family of any such enlisted man, by virtue of the passage of this act: And provided further, That this paragraph shall not apply to any such enlisted man who shall marry after the 15th day of July, 1916; and the word 'family' shall include only wife, children, and dependent mothers."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 138, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 2. That a Council of National Defense is hereby established for the coordination of industries and resources for the national security and welfare, to consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor."

"That the Council of National Defense shall nominate to the President, and the President shall appoint, an advisory commission, consisting of not more than seven persons, each of whom shall have special knowledge of some industry, public utility, or the development of some natural resource, or be otherwise specially qualified, in the opinion of the council, for the performance of the duties hereinafter provided. The members of the advisory commission shall serve without compensation, but shall be allowed actual expenses of travel and subsistence when attending meetings of the commission or engaged in investigations pertaining to its activities. The advisory commission shall hold such meetings as shall be called by the council or be provided by the rules and regulations adopted by the council for the conduct of its work.

"That it shall be the duty of the Council of National Defense to supervise and direct investigations and make recommendations to the President and the heads of executive departments as to the location of railroads with reference to the frontier of the United States so as to render possible expeditious concentration of troops and supplies to points of defense; the coordination of military, industrial, and commercial purposes in the location of extensive highways and branch lines of railroad; the utilization of waterways; the mobilization of military and naval resources for defense; the increase of domestic production of articles and materials essential to the support of armies and of the people during the interruption of foreign commerce; the development of seagoing transportation; data as to amounts, location, method and means of production, and availability of military supplies; the giving of information to producers and manufacturers as to the class of supplies needed by the military and other services of the Government, the requirements relating thereto, and the creation of relations which will render possible in time of need the immediate concentration and utilization of the resources of the Nation."

"That the Council of National Defense shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its work, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President, and shall provide for the work of the advisory commission to the end that the special knowledge of such commission may be developed by suitable investigation, research, and inquiry and made available in conference and report for the use of the council; and the council may organize subordinate bodies for its assistance in special investigations, either by the employment of experts or by the creation of committees of specially qualified persons to serve without compensation, but to direct the investigations of experts so employed."

"That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for experimental work and investigations undertaken by the council, by the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies, for the employment of a director, expert and clerical expenses and supplies, and for the necessary expenses of members of the advisory commission or subordinate bodies going to and attending meetings of the commission or subordinate bodies. Reports shall be submitted by all subordinate bodies and by the advisory commission to the council, and from time to time the council shall report to the President or to the heads of executive departments upon special inquiries or subjects appropriate thereto, and an annual report to the Congress shall be submitted through the President, including as full a statement of the activities of the council and the agencies subordinate to it as is consistent with the public interest, including an itemized account of the expenditures made by the council or authorized by it, in as full detail as the public interest will permit: Provided, however, That when deemed proper the President may authorize, in amounts stipulated by him, unvouchered expenditures and report the gross sums so authorized not itemized."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 3. That section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 1342. The articles included in this section shall be known as the Articles of War, and shall at all times and in all places govern the armies of the United States.

"I. PRELIMINARY PROVISIONS.

"ARTICLE 1. Definitions: The following words when used in these articles shall be construed in the sense indicated in this article unless the context shows that a different sense is intended, namely:

"(a) The word 'officer' shall be construed to refer to a commissioned officer;

"(b) The word 'soldier' shall be construed as including a noncommissioned officer, a private, or any other enlisted man;

"(c) The word 'company' shall be understood as including a troop or battery; and

"(d) The word 'battalion' shall be understood as including a squadron.

"ART. 2. Persons subject to military law: The following persons are subject to these articles and shall be understood as included in the term 'any person subject to military law,' or 'persons subject to military law,' whenever used in these articles: Provided, That nothing contained in this act, except as specifically provided in article 2, subparagraph (c), shall be construed to apply to any person under the United States naval jurisdiction, unless otherwise specifically provided by law.

"(a) All officers and soldiers in the active military service of the United States, or in the Regular Army Reserve, including volunteers from the dates of their muster or acceptance into said service; and all other persons lawfully called, drafted, or ordered into, or to duty or for training in, said service, from the date of notice of such call, draft, or order;

"(b) Cadets;

"(c) Officers and soldiers of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the armies of the United States by order of the President: Provided, That an officer or soldier of the Marine Corps when so detached may be tried by military court-martial for an offense committed against the 'laws for the government of the naval service' prior to his detachment, and for an offense committed against these articles he may be tried by a naval court-martial after such detachment ceases;

"(d) All retainers to the camp and all persons accompanying or serving with the armies of the United States without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, and in time of war all such retainers and persons accompanying or serving with the armies of the United States in the field, both within and without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, though not otherwise subject to these articles;

"(e) All persons under sentence adjudged by courts-martial;

"(f) All persons admitted into the 'Regular Army' Soldiers' Home 'at Washington, D. C.'

"II. COURTS-MARTIAL.

"ART. 3. Courts-martial classified: Courts-martial shall be of three kinds, namely:

"First, general courts-martial;

"Second, special courts-martial; and

"Third, summary courts-martial.

"A. COMPOSITION.

"ART. 4. Who may serve on courts-martial: 'All officers in the military service of the United States,' and 'officers' of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the Army by order of the President, shall be competent to serve on courts-martial for the trial of any persons who may lawfully be brought before such courts for trial.

"ART. 5. General courts-martial: General courts-martial may consist of any number of officers from '5' to 13, inclusive; 'but they shall not consist of less than 13 when that number can be convened without manifest injury to the service.'

"ART. 6. Special courts-martial: Special courts-martial may consist of any number of officers from three to five, inclusive.

"ART. 7. Summary courts-martial: A summary court-martial shall consist of one officer.

"B. BY WHOM APPOINTED.

"ART. 8. General courts-martial: The President of the United States, the commanding officer of a territorial division or department, the Superintendent of the Military Academy, the commanding officer of an army, an army corps, a division, or a separate brigade, and, when empowered by the President, the commanding officer of any district or of any force or body of troops may appoint general courts-martial; but when any such commander is the accuser or the prosecutor of the person or persons to be tried, the court shall be appointed by superior competent authority, and no officer shall be eligible to sit as a member of such court when he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution.

"ART. 9. Special courts-martial: The commanding officer of a district, garrison, fort, camp, or other place where troops are on duty, and the commanding officer of a brigade, regiment, detached battalion, or other detached command may appoint special courts-martial; but when any such commanding officer is the accuser or the prosecutor of the person or persons to be tried, the court shall be appointed by superior authority, and may in any case be appointed by superior authority when by the latter deemed desirable; and no officer shall be eligible to sit as a member of such court when he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution.

"ART. 10. Summary courts-martial: The commanding officer of a garrison, fort, camp, or other place where troops are on duty, and the commanding officer of a regiment, detached battalion, detached company, or other detachment may appoint summary courts-martial; but such summary courts-martial may in any case be appointed by superior authority when by the latter deemed desirable: Provided, That when but one officer is present with a command he shall be the summary court-martial of that command and shall hear and determine cases brought before him.

"ART. 11. Appointment of judge advocates: For each general or special court-martial the authority appointing the court shall appoint a judge advocate, and for each general court-martial one or more assistant judge advocates when necessary.

"C. JURISDICTION.

"ART. 12. General courts-martial: General courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law for any crime or offense made punishable by these articles and any other person who by the law of war is subject to trial by military tribunals: Provided, That no officer shall be brought to trial before a general court-martial appointed by the Superintendent of the Military Academy.

"ART. 13. Special courts-martial: Special courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law, except an officer, for any crime or offense not capital made punishable by these articles: Provided, That the President may, by regulations, which he may modify from time to time, except from the jurisdiction of special courts-martial any class or classes of persons subject to military law.

"Special courts-martial shall not have power to adjudge dishonorable discharge, no confinement in excess of six months, nor to adjudge forfeiture of more than six months' pay.

"ART. 14. Summary courts-martial: Summary courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law, except an officer, a cadet, or a soldier holding the privileges of a certificate of eligibility to promotion, for any crime or offense not capital made punishable by these articles: Provided, That noncommissioned officers shall not, if they object thereto, be brought to trial before a summary court-martial without the authority of the officer competent to bring them to trial before a general court-martial: Provided further, That the President may, by regulations, which he may modify from time to time, except from the jurisdiction of summary courts-martial any class or classes of persons subject to military law.

"Summary courts-martial shall not have power to adjudge confinement in excess of three months, nor to adjudge the forfeiture of more than three months' pay: Provided, That when the summary court officer is also the commanding officer no sentence of such summary court-martial, adjudging confinement at hard labor or forfeiture of pay, or both, for a period in excess of one month shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by superior authority.

"ART. 15. Not exclusive: The provisions of these articles conferring jurisdiction upon courts-martial shall not be construed as depriving military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals of concurrent jurisdiction in respect to offenders or offenses that by the law of war may be 'lawfully' triable by such military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals.

"ART. 16. Officers; how triable: Officers shall be triable only by general courts-martial, and in no case shall an officer, when it can be avoided, be tried by officers inferior to him in rank.

"D. PROCEDURE.

"ART. 17. Judge advocate to prosecute: The judge advocate of a general or special court-martial shall prosecute in the name of the United States, and shall, under the direction of the court, prepare the record of its proceedings. The accused shall 'have' the right to 'be represented before the court by' counsel 'of his own selection' for his defense, 'if such counsel be reasonably available,' but should he, for any reason, be unrepresented by counsel, the judge advocate shall from time to time throughout the proceedings advise the accused of his legal rights.

"ART. 18. Challenges: Members of a general or special court-martial may be challenged by the accused, but only for cause stated to the court. The court shall determine the relevancy and validity thereof, and shall not receive a challenge to more than one member at a time.

"ART. 19. Oaths: The judge advocate of a general or special court-martial shall administer to the members of the court, before they proceed upon any trial, the following oath or affirmation: 'You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will well and truly try and determine, according to the evidence, the matter now before you, between the United States of America and the person to be tried, and that you will duly administer justice, without partiality, favor, or affection, according to the provisions of the rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States, and if any doubt should arise, not explained by said articles, then according to your conscience, the best of your understanding, and the custom of war in like cases; and you do further swear (or affirm) that you will not divulge the findings or sentence of the court until they shall be published by the proper authority, except to the judge advocate; neither will you disclose or discover the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court-martial unless required to give evidence thereof as a witness by a court of justice in due course of law. So help you God.'

"When the oath or affirmation has been administered to the members of a general or special court-martial, the president of the court shall administer to the judge advocate an oath or affirmation in the following form: 'You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will not divulge the findings or sentence of the court to any but the proper authority until they shall be duly disclosed by the same. So help you God.'

"All persons who give evidence before a court-martial shall be examined on oath or affirmation in the following form: 'You swear (or affirm) that the evidence you shall give in the case now in hearing shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God.'

"Every reporter of the proceedings of a court-martial shall, before entering upon his duties, make oath or affirmation in the following form: 'You swear (or affirm) that you will faithfully perform the duties of reporter to this court. So help you God.'

"Every interpreter in the trial of any case before a court-martial shall, before entering upon his duties, make oath or affirmation in the following form: 'You swear (or affirm) that you will truly interpret in the case now in hearing. So help you God.'

"In case of affirmation the closing sentence of adjuration will be omitted.

"ART. 20. Continuances: A court-martial may, for reasonable cause, grant a continuance to either party for such time and as often as may appear to be just.

"ART. 21. Refusal to plead: When the accused, arraigned before a court-martial, from obstinacy and deliberate design stands mute or answers foreign to the purpose, the court may proceed to trial and judgment as if he had pleaded not guilty.

"ART. 22. Process to obtain witnesses: Every judge advocate of a general or special court-martial and every summary court-martial shall have power to issue the like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify which courts of the United States, having criminal jurisdiction, may lawfully issue; but such process shall run to any part of the United States, its Territories, and possessions.

"ART. 23. Refusal to appear or testify: Every person not subject to military law who, being duly subpoenaed to appear as a witness before any military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, or before any officer, military or civil, designated to take a deposition to be read in evidence before such court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness, or to testify, or produce documentary evidence which such person may have been legally subpoenaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which such person shall be punished on information in the district court of the United States or in a court of original criminal jurisdiction in any of the Territorial possessions of the United States, jurisdiction being hereby conferred upon such courts for such purpose; and it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney or the officer prosecuting for the Government in any such court of original criminal jurisdiction, on the certification of the facts to him by the military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, to file an information against and prosecute the person so offending, and the punishment of such person, on conviction, shall be a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That the fees of such witness and his mileage, at the rates allowed to witnesses attending the courts of the United States, shall be duly paid or tendered said witness, such amounts to be paid out of the appropriation for the compensation of witnesses.

"ART. 24. Compulsory self-incrimination prohibited: No witness before a military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, or before any officer, military or civil, designated to take a deposition to be read in evidence before a military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, shall be compelled to incriminate himself or to answer any questions which may tend to incriminate or degrade him.

"ART. 25. Depositions—When admissible: A duly authenticated deposition taken upon reasonable notice to the opposite party may be read in evidence before any military court or commission in any case not capital, or in any proceeding before a court of inquiry or a military board, if such deposition be taken when the witness resides, is found, or is about to go beyond the State, Territory, or District in which the court, commission, or board is ordered to sit, or beyond the distance of 100 miles from the place of trial or hearing, or when it appears to the satisfaction of the court, commission, board, or appointing authority that the witness, by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, imprisonment, or other reasonable cause, is unable to appear and testify in person at the place of trial or hearing: Provided, That testimony by deposition may be adduced for the defense in capital cases.

"ART. 26. Depositions—Before whom taken: Depositions to be read in evidence before military courts, commissions, courts of inquiry, or military boards, or for other use in military administration, may be taken before and authenticated by any officer, military or civil, authorized by the laws of the United States or by the laws of the place where the deposition is taken to administer oaths.

"ART. 27. Courts of inquiry—Records of, when admissible: The record of the proceedings of a court of inquiry may be read in evidence before any court-martial or military commission in any case not capital nor extending to the dismissal of an officer, and may also be read in evidence in any proceeding before a court of inquiry or a military board: Provided, That such evidence may be adduced by the defense in capital cases or cases extending to the dismissal of an officer.

"ART. 28. Resignation without acceptance does not release officer: Any officer who, having tendered his resignation and prior to due notice of the acceptance of the same, quits his post or proper duties without leave and with intent to absent himself permanently therefrom shall be deemed a deserter.

"ART. 29. Enlistment without discharge: Any soldier who, without having first received a regular discharge, again enlists in the Army, or in the militia when in the service of the United States, or in the Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, or in any foreign army, shall be deemed to have deserted the service of the United States; and, where the enlistment is in one of the forces of the United States mentioned above, to have fraudulently enlisted therein.

"ART. 30. Closed sessions: Whenever a general or special court-martial shall sit in closed session, the judge advocate and the assistant judge advocate, if any, shall withdraw; and when their legal advice or their assistance in referring to the recorded evidence is required, it shall be obtained in open court, and in the presence of the accused and of his counsel if there be any.

"ART. 31. Order of voting: Members of a general or special court-martial, in giving their votes, shall begin with the junior in rank.

"ART. 32. Contempts: A court-martial may punish at discretion, subject to the limitations contained in Article XIV, any person who uses any menacing words, signs, or gestures in its presence, or who disturbs its proceedings by any riot or disorder.

"ART. 33. Records—General courts-martial: Each general court-martial shall keep a separate record of its proceedings in the trial of each case brought before it, and such record shall be authenticated by the signature of the president and the judge advocate; but in case the record can not be authenticated by the judge advocate, by reason of his death, disability, or absence, it shall be signed by the president and an assistant judge advocate, if any; and if there be no assistant judge advocate, or in case of his death, disability, or absence, then by the president and one other member of the court.

"ART. 34. Records—Special and summary courts-martial: Each special court-martial and each summary court-martial shall keep a record of its proceedings, separate for each case, which record shall contain such matter and be authenticated in such manner as may be required by regulations which the president may from time to time prescribe.

"ART. 35. Disposition of records—General courts-martial: The judge advocate of each general court-martial shall, with such expedition as circumstances may permit, forward to the appointing authority or to his successor in command the original record of the proceedings of such court in the trial of each case. All records of such proceedings shall, after having been finally acted upon, be transmitted to the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

"ART. 36. Disposition of records—Special and summary courts-martial: After having been acted upon by the officer appointing the court, or by the officer commanding for the time being, the record of each trial by special court-martial and a report of each trial by summary court-martial shall be transmitted to such general headquarters as the President may designate in regulations, there to be filed in the office of the judge advocate. When no longer of use, records of special and summary courts-martial may be destroyed.

"ART. 37. Irregularities—Effect of: The proceedings of a court-martial shall not be held invalid, nor the findings or sentence disapproved, in any case on the ground of improper admission or rejection of evidence or for any error as to any matter of pleading or procedure unless in the opinion of the reviewing or confirming authority, after an examination of the entire proceedings, it shall appear that the error complained of has injuriously affected the substantial rights of an accused: Provided, That the act or omission upon which the accused has been tried constitutes an offense denounced and made punishable by one or more of these articles; Provided further, That the omission of the words 'hard labor' in any sentence of a court-martial adjudging imprisonment or confinement shall not be construed as depriving the authorities executing such sentence of imprisonment or confinement of the power to require hard labor as a part of the punishment in any case where it is authorized by the Executive order prescribing maximum punishments.

"ART. 38. President may prescribe rules: The President may by regulations, which he may modify from time to time, prescribe the procedure, including modes of proof, in cases before courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and other military tribunals: Provided, That nothing contrary to or inconsistent with these articles shall be so prescribed: Provided further, That all rules made in pursuance of this article shall be laid before the Congress annually.

"E. LIMITATIONS UPON PROSECUTIONS.

"ART. 39. As to time: Except for desertion committed in time of war, or for 'mutiny' or murder, no person subject to military law shall be liable to be tried or punished by a court-martial for any crime or offense committed more than two years before the arraignment of such person: Provided, That for desertion in time of peace or for any crime or offense punishable under articles 93 and 94 of this code the period of limitations upon trial and punishment by court-martial shall be three years: Provided further, That the period of any absence of the accused from the jurisdiction of the United States, and also any period during which by reason of some manifest impediment the accused shall not have been amenable to military justice, shall be excluded in computing the aforesaid periods of limitation: And provided further, That this article shall not have the effect to authorize the trial or punishment for any crime or offense barred by the provisions of existing law.

"ART. 40. As to number: No person shall be tried a second time for the same offense.

"F. PUNISHMENTS.

"ART. 41. Certain kinds prohibited: Punishment by flogging, or by branding, marking, or tattooing on the body is prohibited.

"ART. 42. Places of confinement—When lawful: Except for desertion in time of war, repeated desertion in time of peace, and mutiny, no person shall under the sentence of a court-martial be punished by confinement in a penitentiary unless an act or omission of which he is convicted constitutes an offense of a civil nature under some statute of the United States or at the common law as the same exists in 'the' District 'of Columbia,' or by way of commutation of a death sentence, 'and' unless, 'also,' the period of confinement authorized and adjudged by such court-martial is one year or more: Provided, That when a sentence of confinement is adjudged by a court-martial upon conviction of two or more acts or omissions any one of which is punishable under these articles by confinement in a penitentiary, the entire sentence of confinement may be executed in a penitentiary: Provided further, That penitentiary confinement hereby authorized may be served in any penitentiary directly or indirectly under the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided further, That persons sentenced to dishonorable discharge and to confinement not in a penitentiary, shall be confined in the United States Disciplinary Barracks or elsewhere as the Secretary of War or the reviewing authority may direct, but not in a penitentiary.

"ART. 43. Death sentence—When lawful: No person shall, by general court-martial, be convicted of an offense for which the death penalty is made mandatory by law, nor sentenced to suffer death, except by the concurrence of two-thirds of the members 'of said court-martial' and for an offense in these articles expressly made punishable by death. All other convictions and sentences, whether by general or special court-martial, may be determined by a majority of the members present.

"ART. 44. Cowardice—Fraud—Accessory penalty: When an officer is dismissed from the service for cowardice or fraud, the crime, punishment, name, and place of abode of the delinquent shall be published in the newspapers in and about the camp and in the State from which the offender came or where he usually resides; and after such publication it shall be scandalous for an officer to associate with him.

"ART. 45. Maximum limits: Whenever the punishment for a crime or offense made punishable by these articles is left to the discretion of the court-martial, the punishment shall not, in time of peace, exceed such limit or limits as the President may from time to time prescribe.

"G. ACTION BY APPOINTING OR SUPERIOR AUTHORITY.

"ART. 46. Approval and execution of sentence: No sentence of a court-martial shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by the officer appointing the court or by the officer commanding for the time being.

"ART. 47. Powers incident to power to approve: The power to approve the sentence of a court-martial shall be held to include, inter alia:

"(a) The power to approve or disapprove a finding and to approve only so much of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when, in the opinion of the authority having power to approve, the evidence of record requires a finding of only the lesser degree of guilt; and

"(b) The power to approve or disapprove the whole or any part of the sentence.

"ART. 48. Confirmation—When required: In addition to the approval required by article 46, confirmation by the President is required in the following cases before the sentence of a court-martial is carried into execution, namely:

"(a) Any sentence respecting a general officer;

"(b) Any sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer, except that in time of war a sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer below the grade of brigadier general may be carried into execution upon confirmation by the commanding general of the Army in the field or by the commanding general of the Territorial department or division;

"(c) Any sentence extending to the suspension or dismissal of a cadet; and

"(d) Any sentence of death, except in the cases of persons convicted in time of war of murder, rape, mutiny, desertion, or as spies; and in such excepted cases a sentence of death may be carried into execution upon confirmation by the commanding general of the Army in the field or by the commanding general of the Territorial department or division.

"When the authority competent to confirm the sentence has already acted as the approving authority no additional confirmation by him is necessary.

"ART. 49. Powers incident to power to confirm: The power to confirm the sentence of a court-martial shall be held to include:

"(a) The power to confirm or disapprove a finding, and to confirm so much only of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when, in the opinion of the authority having power to confirm, the evidence of record requires a finding of only the lesser degree of guilt; and

"(b) The power to confirm or disapprove the whole or any part of the sentence.

"ART. 50. Mitigation or remission of sentences: The power to order the execution of the sentence adjudged by a court-martial shall be held to include, inter alia, the power to mitigate or remit the whole or any part of the sentence, but no sentence of dismissal of an officer and no sentence of death shall be mitigated or remitted by any authority inferior to the President.

"Any unexecuted portion of a sentence adjudged by a court-martial may be mitigated or remitted by the military authority competent to appoint, for the command, exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks, in which the person under sentence is held a court of the kind that imposed the sentence, and the same power may be exercised by superior military authority; but no sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer or loss of files, no sentence of death, and no sentence approved or confirmed by the President shall be remitted or mitigated by any other authority.

"The power of remission and mitigation shall extend to all uncollected forfeitures adjudged by sentence of a court-martial.

"ART. 51. Suspension of sentences of dismissal or death: The authority competent to order the execution of a sentence of dismissal of an officer or a sentence of death may suspend such sentence until the pleasure of the President be known, and in case of such suspension a copy of the order of suspension, together with a copy of the record of trial, shall immediately be transmitted to the President.

"ART. 52. Suspension of sentence of dishonorable discharge: The authority competent to order the execution of a sentence, including dishonorable discharge, may suspend the execution of the dishonorable discharge until the soldier's release from confinement; but the order of suspension may be vacated at any time and the execution of the dishonorable discharge directed by the officer having general court-martial jurisdiction over the command, exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks, in which the soldier is held or by the Secretary of War.

"ART. 53. Suspension of sentences of forfeiture or confinement: The authority competent to order the execution of a sentence adjudged by a court-martial may, if the sentence involve neither dismissal nor dishonorable discharge, suspend the execution of the sentence in so far as it relates to the forfeiture of pay or to confinement, or to both; and the person under sentence may be restored to duty during the suspension of confinement. At any time within one year after the date of the order of suspension such order may, for sufficient cause, be vacated and the execution of the sentence directed by the 'military' authority competent to order the execution of like sentences in the command, 'exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks,' to which the person under sentence belongs or in which he may be found; but if the order of suspension be not vacated within one year after the date thereof the suspended sentence shall be held to have been remitted.

"III. PUNITIVE ARTICLES.

"A. ENLISTMENT; MUSTER; RETURNS.

"ART. 54. Fraudulent enlistment: Any person who shall procure himself to be enlisted in the military service of the United States by means of willful misrepresentation or concealment as to his qualifications for enlistment, and shall receive pay or allowances under such enlistment, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 55. Officer making unlawful enlistment: Any officer who knowingly enlists or musters into the military service any person whose enlistment or muster in is prohibited by law, regulations, or orders shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 56. 'Muster rolls'—False muster: 'At every muster of a regiment, troop, battery, or company the commanding officer thereof shall give to the mustering officer certificates, signed by himself, stating how long absent officers have been absent and the reasons of their absence. And the commanding officer of every troop, battery, or company shall give like certificates, stating how long absent noncommissioned officers and private soldiers have been absent and the reasons of their absence. Such reasons and time of absence shall be inserted in the muster rolls opposite the names of the respective absent officers and soldiers, and the certificates, together with the muster rolls, shall be transmitted by the mustering officer to the Department of War as speedily as the distance of the place and muster will admit.' Any officer who knowingly makes a false muster of man or animal, or who signs or directs or allows the signing of any muster roll knowing the same to contain a false muster or false statement as to the absence or pay of an officer or soldier, or who wrongfully takes money or other consideration on mustering in a regiment, company, or other organization, or on signing muster rolls, or who knowingly musters as an officer or soldier a person who is not such officer or soldier, shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 57. False returns—Omission to render returns: Every officer commanding a regiment, an independent troop, battery, or company, or a garrison, shall, in the beginning of every month, transmit through the proper channels, to the Department of War, an exact return of the same, specifying the names of the officers then absent from their posts, with the reasons for and the time of their absence. Every officer whose duty it is to render to the War Department or other superior authority a return of the state of the troops under his command, or of the arms, ammunition, clothing, funds, or other property thereunto belonging, who knowingly makes a false return thereof shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct. And any officer who, through neglect or design, omits to render such return shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"B. DESERTION—ABSENCE WITHOUT LEAVE.

"ART. 58. Desertion: Any persons subject to military law who deserts or attempts to desert the service of the United States shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct, and, if the offense be committed at any other time, any punishment, excepting death, that a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 59. Advising or aiding another to desert: Any person subject to military law who advises or persuades or knowingly assists another to desert the service of the United States shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct, and, if the offense be committed at any other time, any punishment, excepting death, that a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 60. Entertaining a deserter: Any officer who, after having discovered that a soldier in his command is a deserter from the military or naval service or from the Marine Corps, retains such deserter in his command without informing superior authority or the commander of the organization to which the deserter belongs, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 61. Absence without leave: Any person subject to military law who fails to repair at the fixed time to the properly appointed place of duty, or goes from the same without proper leave, or absents himself from his command, guard, quarters, station, or camp without proper leave, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"C. DISRESPECT—INSUBORDINATION—MUTINY.

"ART. 62. Disrespect toward the President, Vice President, Congress, Secretary of War, governors, legislatures: Any officer who uses contemptuous or disrespectful words against the President, Vice President, the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of War, or the governor or legislature of any State, Territory, or other possession of the United States in which he is quartered shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct. Any other person subject to military law who so offends shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 63. Disrespect toward superior officer: Any person subject to military law who behaves himself with disrespect toward his superior officer shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 64. Assaulting or willfully disobeying superior officer: Any person subject to military law who, on any pretense whatsoever, strikes his superior officer or draws or lifts up any weapon or offers any violence against him, being in the execution of his office, or willfully disobeys any lawful command of his superior officer, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 65. Insubordinate conduct toward noncommissioned officer: Any soldier who strikes or assaults, or who attempts or threatens to strike or assault, or willfully disobeys the lawful order of a noncommissioned officer while in the execution of his office, or uses threatening or insulting language, or behaves in an insubordinate or disrespectful manner toward a noncommissioned officer while in the execution of his office, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 66. Mutiny or sedition: Any person subject to military law who attempts to create or who begins, excites, causes, or joins in any mutiny or sedition in any company, party, post, camp, detachment, guard, or other command shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 67. Failure to suppress mutiny or sedition: Any officer or soldier who, being present at any mutiny or sedition, does not use his utmost endeavor to suppress the same, or knowing or having reason to believe that a mutiny or sedition is to take place, does not without delay give information thereof to his commanding officer shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 68. Quarrels; frays; disorders: All officers and noncommissioned officers have power to part and quell all quarrels, frays, and disorders among persons subject to military law and to order officers who take part in the same into arrest, and other persons subject to military law who take part in the same into arrest or confinement, as circumstances may require, until their proper superior officer is acquainted therewith. And whosoever, being so ordered, refuses to obey such officer or noncommissioned officer or draws a weapon upon or otherwise threatens or does violence to him shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"D. ARREST; CONFINEMENT.

"ART. 69. Arrest or confinement of accused persons: An officer charged with crime or with a serious offense under these articles shall be placed in arrest by the commanding officer, and in exceptional cases an officer so charged may be placed in confinement by the same authority. A soldier charged with crime or with a serious offense under these articles shall be placed in confinement, and when charged with a minor offense he may be placed in arrest. Any other person subject to military law charged with crime or with a serious offense under these articles shall be placed in confinement or in arrest, as circumstances may require; and when charged with a minor offense such person may be placed in arrest. Any person placed in arrest under the provisions of this article shall thereby be restricted to his barracks, quarters, or tent, unless such limits shall be enlarged by proper authority. Any officer who breaks his arrest or who escapes from confinement before he is set at liberty by proper authority shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and any other person subject to military law who escapes from confinement or who breaks his arrest before he is set at liberty by proper authority shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 70. Investigation of and action upon charges: No person put in arrest shall be continued in confinement more than eight days, or until such time as a court-martial can be assembled. When any person is put in arrest for the purpose of trial, except at remote military posts or stations, the officer by whose order he is arrested shall see that a copy of the charges on which he is to be tried is served upon him within eight days after his arrest, and that he is brought to trial within 10 days thereafter, unless the necessities of the service prevent such trial; and then he shall be brought to trial within 30 days after the expiration of said 10 days. If a copy of the charges be not served, or the arrested person be not brought to trial, as herein required, the arrest shall cease. But persons released from arrest, under the provisions of this article, may be tried, whenever the exigencies of the service shall permit, within 12 months after such release from arrest: Provided, That in time of peace no person shall, against his objection, be brought to trial before a general court-martial within a period of five days subsequent to the service of charges upon him.

"ART. 71. Refusal to receive and keep prisoners: No provost marshal or commander of a guard shall refuse to receive or keep any prisoner committed to his charge by an officer belonging to the forces of the United States, provided the officer committing shall, at the time, deliver an account in writing, signed by himself, of the crime or offense charged against the prisoner. Any officer or soldier so refusing shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 72. Report of prisoners received: Every commander of a guard to whose charge a prisoner is committed shall, within 24 hours after such confinement, or as soon as he is relieved from his guard, report in writing to the commanding officer the name of such prisoner, the offense charged against him, and the name of the officer committing him; and if he fails to make such report he shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 73. Releasing prisoner without proper authority: Any person subject to military law who, without proper authority, releases any prisoner duly committed to his charge, or who through neglect or design suffers any prisoner so committed to escape, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 74. Delivery of offenders to civil authorities: When any person subject to military law, except one who is held by the military authorities to answer, or who is awaiting trial or result of trial, or who is undergoing sentence for a crime or offense punishable under these articles, is accused of a crime or offense committed within the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia, and punishable by the laws of the land, the commanding officer is required, except in time of war, upon application duly made, to use his utmost endeavor to deliver over such accused person to the civil authorities, or to aid the officers of justice in apprehending and securing him, in order that he may be brought to trial. Any commanding officer who upon such application refuses or willfully neglects, except in time of war, to deliver over such accused person to the civil authorities or to aid the officers of justice in apprehending and securing him shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"When, under the provisions of this article, delivery is made to the civil authorities of an offender undergoing sentence of a court-martial, such delivery, if followed by conviction, shall be held to interrupt the execution of the sentence of the court-martial, and the offender shall be returned to military custody, after having answered to the civil authorities for his offense, for the completion of the said court-martial sentence.

"E. WAR OFFENSES.

"ART. 75. Misbehavior before the enemy: Any officer or soldier who misbehaves himself before the enemy, runs away, or shamefully abandons or delivers up any fort, post, camp, guard, or other command which it is his duty to defend, or speaks words inducing others to do the like, or casts away his arms or ammunition, or quits his post or colors to plunder or pillage, or by any means whatsoever occasions false alarms in camp, garrison, or quarters, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 76. Subordinates compelling commander to surrender: If any commander of any garrison, fort, post, camp, guard, or other command is compelled, by the officers or soldiers under his command, to give it up to the enemy or to abandon it, the officers or soldiers so offending shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 77. Improper use of countersign: Any person subject to military law who makes known the parole or countersign to any person not entitled to receive it according to the rules and discipline of war, or gives a parole or countersign different from that which he received, shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 78. Forcing a safeguard: Any person subject to military law who, in time of war, forces a safeguard shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 79. Captured property to be secured for public service: All public property taken from the enemy is the property of the United States and shall be secured for the service of the United States, and any person subject to military law who neglects to secure such property or is guilty of wrongful appropriation thereof shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 80. Dealing in captured or abandoned property: Any person subject to military law who buys, sells, trades, or in any way deals in or disposes of captured or abandoned property, whereby he shall receive or expect any profit, benefit, or advantage to himself or to any other person directly or indirectly connected with himself, or who fails whenever such property comes into his possession or custody or within his control to give notice thereof to the proper authority and to turn over such property to the proper authority without delay, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial, military commission, or other military tribunal may adjudge, or by any or all of said penalties.

"ART. 81. Relieving, corresponding with, or aiding the enemy: Whosoever relieves the enemy with arms, ammunition, supplies, money, or other thing, or knowingly harbors or protects or holds correspondence with or gives intelligence to the enemy, either directly or indirectly, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial or military commission may direct.

"ART. 82. Spies: Any person who in time of war shall be found lurking or acting as a spy in or about any of the fortifications, posts, quarters, or encampments of any of the armies of the United States, or elsewhere, shall be tried by a general court-martial or by a military commission, and shall, on conviction thereof, suffer death.

"F. MISCELLANEOUS CRIMES AND OFFENSES.

"ART. 83. Military property—Willful or negligent loss, damage, or wrongful disposition of: Any person subject to military law who willfully, or through neglect, suffers to be lost, spoiled, damaged, or wrongfully disposed of, any military property belonging to the United States shall make good the loss or damage and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 84. Waste or unlawful disposition of military property issued to soldiers: Any soldier who sells or wrongfully disposes of or willfully or through neglect injures or loses any horse, arms, ammunition, accouterments, equipment, clothing, or other property issued for use in the military service, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 85. Drunk on duty: Any officer who is found drunk on duty shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if the offense be committed in time of peace, he shall be punished as a court-martial may direct. Any person subject to military law, except an officer, who is found drunk on duty shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 86. Misbehavior of sentinel: Any sentinel who is found drunk or sleeping upon his post, or who leaves it before he is regularly relieved, shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if the offense be committed in time of peace, he shall suffer any punishment, except death, that a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 87. Personal interest in sale of provisions: Any officer commanding in any garrison, fort, barracks, camp, or other place where troops of the United States may be serving who, for his private advantage, lays any duty or imposition upon or is interested in the sale of any victuals or other necessities of life brought into such garrison, fort, barracks, camp, or other place for the use of the troops, shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 88. Intimidation of persons bringing provisions: Any person subject to military law who abuses, intimidates, does violence to, or wrongfully interferes with any person bringing provisions, supplies, or other necessities to the camp, garrison, or quarters of the forces of the United States shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 89. Good order to be maintained and wrongs redressed: All persons subject to military law are to behave themselves orderly in quarters, garrison, camp, and on the march; and any person subject to military law who commits any waste or spoil, or willfully destroys any property whatsoever (unless by order of his commanding officer), or commits any kind of depredation or riot shall be punished as a court-martial may direct. Any commanding officer who, upon complaint made to him, refuses or omits to see reparation made to the party injured, in so far as the offender's pay shall go toward such reparation, as provided for in article 105, shall be dismissed from the service, or otherwise punished, as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 90. Provoking speeches or gestures: No person subject to military law shall use any reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures to another; and any person subject to military law who offends against the provisions of this article shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 91. Duelling—Attempts to commit suicide: Any person subject to military law who fights or promotes or is concerned in or connives at fighting a duel, or who having knowledge of a challenge sent or about to be sent fails to report the fact promptly to the proper authority, if an officer, be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if any other person subject to military law, shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 92. Murder—Rape: Any person subject to military law who commits murder or rape shall suffer death or imprisonment for life, as a court-martial may direct; but no person shall be tried by court-martial for murder or rape committed within the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia in time of peace.

"ART. 93. Various crimes: Any person subject to military law who commits manslaughter, mayhem, arson, burglary, robbery, larceny, embezzlement, perjury, assault with intent to commit any felony, or assault with intent to do bodily harm, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

"ART. 94. Frauds against the Government: Any person subject to military law who makes or causes to be made any claim against the United States, or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or "Who presents or causes to be presented to any person in the civil or military service thereof, for approval or payment, any claim against the United States, or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or

"Who enters into any agreement or conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the allowance or payment of any false or fraudulent claim; or

"Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or against any officer thereof, makes or uses, or procures, or advises the making or use of, any writing or other paper, knowing the same to contain any false or fraudulent statements; or

"Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, makes, or procures, or advises the making of, any oath to any fact or to any writing or other paper knowing such oath to be false; or

"Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, forges or counterfeits, or procures, or advises the forging or counterfeiting of any signature upon any writing or other paper, or uses, or procures, or advises the use of any such signature, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited; or

"Who, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other property of the United States, furnished or intended for the military service thereof, knowingly delivers, or causes to be delivered, to any person having authority to receive the same, any amount thereof less than that for which he receives a certificate or receipt; or

"Who, being authorized to make or deliver any paper certifying the receipt of any property of the United States furnished or intended for the military service thereof, makes or delivers to any person such writing, without having full knowledge of the truth of the statements therein contained and with intent to defraud the United States; or

"Who steals, embezzles, knowingly and willfully misappropriates, applies to his own use or benefit, or wrongfully or knowingly sells or disposes of any ordnance, arms, equipments, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, money, or other property of the United States furnished or intended for the military service thereof; or

"Who knowingly purchases or receives in pledge for any obligation or indebtedness from any soldier, officer, or other person who is a part of or employed in said forces or service, any ordnance, arms, equipment, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, or other property of the United States, such soldier, officer, or other person not having lawful right to sell or pledge the same;

"Shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge, or by any or all of said penalties. And if any person, being guilty of any of the offenses aforesaid while in the military service of the United States, receives his discharge or is dismissed from the service, he shall continue to be liable to be arrested and held for trial and sentence by a court-martial in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had not received such discharge nor been dismissed.

"ART. 95. Conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman: Any officer or cadet who is convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the service.

"ART. 96. General article: Though not mentioned in these articles, all disorders and neglects to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, all conduct of a nature to bring discredit upon the military service, and all crimes or offenses not capital, of which persons subject to military law may be guilty, shall be taken cognizance of by a general or special or summary court-martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and punished at the discretion of such court.

"IV. COURTS OF INQUIRY.

"ART. 97. When and by whom ordered: A court of inquiry to examine into the nature of any transaction of or accusation or imputation against any officer or soldier may be ordered by the President or by any commanding officer; but a court of inquiry shall not be ordered by any commanding officer except upon the request of the officer or soldier whose conduct is to be inquired into.

"ART. 98. Composition: A court of inquiry shall consist of three or more officers. For each court of inquiry the authority appointing the court shall appoint a recorder.

"ART. 99. Challenges: Members of a court of inquiry may be challenged by the party whose conduct is to be inquired into, but only for cause stated to the court. The court shall determine the relevancy and validity of any challenge, and shall not receive a challenge to more than one member at a time. The party whose conduct is being inquired into shall have the right to be represented before the court by counsel of his own selection, if such counsel be reasonably available.

"ART. 100. Oath of members and recorder: The recorder of a court of inquiry shall administer to the members the following oath: 'You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will well and truly examine and inquire, according to the evidence, into the matter now before you, without partiality, favor, affection, prejudice, or hope of reward. So help you God.' After which the president of the court shall administer to the recorder the following oath: 'You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will, according to your best abilities, accurately and impartially record the proceedings of the court and the evidence to be given in the case in hearing. So help you God.'

"In case of affirmation the closing sentence of adjuration will be omitted.

"ART. 101. Powers—Procedure: A court of inquiry and the recorder thereof shall have the same power to summon and examine witnesses as is given to courts-martial and the judge advocate thereof. Such witnesses shall take the same oath or affirmation that is taken by witnesses before courts-martial. A reporter or an interpreter for a court of inquiry shall, before entering upon his duties, take the oath or affirmation required of a reporter or an interpreter for a court-martial. The party whose conduct is being inquired into or his counsel, if any, shall be permitted to examine and cross-examine witnesses so as fully to investigate the circumstances in question.

"ART. 102. Opinion on merits of case: A court of inquiry shall not give an opinion on the merits of the case inquired into unless specially ordered to do so.

"ART. 103. Record of proceedings—How authenticated: Each court of inquiry shall keep a record of its proceedings, which shall be authenticated by the signature of the president and the recorder thereof and be forwarded to the convening authority. In case the record can not be authenticated by the recorder by reason of his death, disability, or absence it shall be signed by the president and by one other member of the court.

"V. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

"ART. 104. Disciplinary powers of commanding officers: Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, and which he may from time to time revoke, alter, or add to, the commanding officer of any detachment, company, or higher command may, for minor offenses not denied by the accused, impose disciplinary punishments upon persons of his command without the intervention of a court-martial unless the accused demands trial by court-martial.

"The disciplinary punishments authorized by this article may include admonition, reprimand, withholding of privileges, extra fatigue, and restriction to certain specified limits, but shall not include forfeiture of pay or confinement under guard. A person punished under authority of this article who deems his punishment unjust or disproportionate to the offense may, through the proper channel, appeal to the next superior authority, but may in the meantime be required to undergo the punishment adjudged. The commanding officer who imposes the punishment, his successor in command, and superior authority shall have power to mitigate or remit any unexecuted portion of the punishment. The imposition and enforcement of disciplinary punishment under authority of this article for any act or omission shall not be a bar to trial by court-martial for a crime or offense growing out of the same act or omission; but the fact that a disciplinary punishment has been enforced may be shown by the accused upon trial, and when so shown shall be considered in determining the measure of punishment to be adjudged in the event of a finding of guilty.

"ART. 105. Injuries to person or property—Redress of: Whenever complaint is made to any commanding officer that damage has been done to the property of any person, or that his property has been wrongfully taken by persons subject to military law, such complaint shall be investigated by a board consisting of any number of officers from one to three, which board shall be convened by the commanding officer and shall have, for the purpose of such investigation, power to summon witnesses and examine them upon oath or affirmation, to receive depositions or other documentary evidence, and to assess the damages sustained against the responsible parties. The assessment of damages made by such board shall be subject to the approval of the commanding officer, and in the amount approved by him shall be stopped against the pay of the offender. And the order of such commanding officer directing stoppages herein authorized shall be conclusive on any disbursing officer for the payment by him to the injured parties of the stoppages so ordered.

"Where the offenders can not be ascertained, but the organization or detachment to which they belong is known, stoppages to the amount of damages inflicted may be made and assessed in such proportion as may be deemed just upon the individual members thereof who are shown to have been present with such organization or detachment at the time the damages complained of were inflicted as determined by the approved findings of the board.

"ART. 106. Arrest of deserters by civil officials: It shall be lawful for any civil officer having authority under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, to arrest offenders, summarily to arrest a deserter from the military service of the United States and deliver him into the custody of the military authorities of the United States.

"ART. 107. Soldiers to make good time lost: Every soldier who in an existing or subsequent enlistment deserts the service of the United States or without proper authority absents himself from his organization, station, or duty for more than one day, or who is confined for more than one day under sentence, or while awaiting trial and disposition of his case, if the trial results in conviction, or through the intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquor, or through disease or injury the result of his own misconduct, renders himself unable for more than one day to perform duty, shall be liable to serve, after his return to a full-duty status, for such period as shall, with the time he may have served prior to such desertion, unauthorized absence, confinement, or inability to perform duty, amount to the full term of that part of his enlistment period which he is required to serve with his organization before being furloughed to the Army reserve.

"ART. 108. Soldiers—Separation from the service: No enlisted man, lawfully inducted into the military service of the United States, shall be discharged from said service without a certificate of discharge, signed by a field officer of the regiment or other organization to which the enlisted man belongs or by the commanding officer when no such field officer is present; and no enlisted man shall be discharged from said service before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

"ART. 109. Oath of enlistment: At the time of his enlistment every soldier shall take the following oath or affirmation: 'I, ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever; and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the Rules and Articles of War.' This oath or affirmation may be taken before any officer.

"ART. 110. Certain articles to be read and explained: Articles 1, 2, and 29, 54 to 96, inclusive, and 104 to 109, inclusive, shall be read and explained to every soldier at the time of his enlistment or muster in, or within six days thereafter, and shall be read and explained once every six months to the soldiers of every garrison, regiment, or company in the service of the United States.

"ART. 111. Copy of record of trial: Every person tried by a general court-martial shall, on demand therefor, made by himself or by any person in his behalf, be entitled to a copy of the record of the trial.

"ART. 112. Effects of deceased persons—Disposition of: In case of the death of any person subject to military law, the commanding officer of the place or command will permit the legal representative or widow of the deceased, if present, to take possession of all his effects then in camp or quarters, and if no legal representative or widow be present, the commanding officer shall direct a summary court to secure all such effects; and said summary court shall have authority to convert such effects into cash, by public or private sale, not earlier than 30 days after the death of the deceased, and to collect and receive any debts due decedent's estate by local debtors; and as soon as practicable after converting such effects into cash said summary court shall deposit with the proper officer, to be designated in regulations, any cash belonging to decedent's estate, and shall transmit a receipt for such deposit, accompanied by any will or other papers of value belonging to the deceased, an inventory of the effects secured by said summary court, and a full account of his transactions to the War Department for transmission to the Auditor for the War Department for action as authorized by law in the settlement of the accounts of deceased officers or enlisted men of the Army; but if in the meantime the legal representative, or widow, shall present himself 'or herself' to take possession of decedent's estate the said summary court shall turn over to him 'or her' all effects not sold and cash belonging to said estate, together with an inventory and account, and make to the War Department a full report of his transactions.

"The provisions of this article shall be applicable to inmates of the United States Soldiers' Home who die in any United States military hospital outside of the District of Columbia where sent from the home for treatment.

"ART. 113. Inquest: When at any post, fort, camp, or other place garrisoned by the military forces of the United States and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, any person shall have been found dead under circumstances which appear to require investigation, the commanding officer will designate and direct a summary court-martial to investigate the circumstances attending the death; and, for this purpose, such summary court-martial shall have power to summon witnesses and examine them upon oath or affirmation. He shall promptly transmit to the post or other commander a report of his investigation and of his findings as to the cause of the death.

"ART. 114. Authority to administer oaths: Any judge advocate or acting judge advocate, the president of a general or special court-martial, any summary court-martial, the judge advocate or any assistant judge advocate of a general or special court-martial, the president or the recorder of a court of inquiry or of a military board, any officer designated to take a deposition, any officer detailed to conduct an investigation, and the adjutant of any command shall have power to administer oaths for the purposes of the administration of military justice and for other purposes of military administration; and in foreign places where the Army may be serving shall have the general powers of a notary public or of a consul of the United States in the administration of oaths, the execution and acknowledgment of legal instruments the attestation of documents, and all other forms of notarial acts to be executed by persons subject to military law.

"ART. 115. Appointment of reporters and interpreters: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe, the president of a court-martial or military commission, or a court of inquiry shall have power to appoint a reporter, who shall record the proceedings of and testimony taken before such court or commission and may set down the same, in the first instance, in shorthand. Under like regulations the president of a court-martial or military commission, or summary court, or court of inquiry may appoint an interpreter, who shall interpret for the court or commission.

"ART. 116. Powers of assistant judge advocates: An assistant judge advocate of a general court-martial shall be competent to perform any duty devolved by law, regulation, or the custom of the service upon the judge advocate of the court.

"ART. 117. Removal of civil suits: When any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any court of a State against any officer, soldier, or other person in the military service of the United States on account of any act done under color of his office or status, or in respect to which he claims any right, title, or authority under any law of the United States respecting the military forces thereof, or under the law of war, such suit or prosecution may at any time before the trial or final hearing thereof be removed for trial into the district court of the United States in the district where the same is pending in the manner prescribed in section 33 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911, and the cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of said district court and shall proceed therein as if the cause had been originally commenced in said district court and the same proceedings had been taken in such suit or prosecution in said district court as shall have been had therein in said State court prior to its removal, and said district court shall have full power to hear and determine said cause.

"ART. 118. Officers—Separation from service: No officer shall be discharged or dismissed from the service except by order of the President or by sentence of a general court-martial; and in time of peace no officer shall be dismissed except in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial or in mitigation thereof, nor discharged except in pursuance of statutes now in force or which may hereafter be enacted; but the President may at any time drop from the rolls of the Army any officer who has been absent from duty three months without leave or who has been absent in confinement in a prison or penitentiary for three months after final conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction.

"ART. 119. Rank and precedence among regulars, militia, and volunteers: That in time of war or public danger, when two or more officers of the same grade are on duty in the same field, department, or command, or of organizations thereof, the President may assign the command of the forces of such field, department, or command, or of any organization thereof, without regard to seniority of rank in the same grade. In the absence of such assignment by the President, officers of the same grade shall rank and have precedence in the following order, without regard to date of rank or commission as between officers of different classes, namely: First, officers of the Regular Army and officers of the Marine Corps detached for service with the Army by order of the President; second, officers of forces drafted or called into the service of the United States; and, third, officers of the volunteer forces: Provided, That officers of the Regular Army holding commissions in forces drafted or called into the service of the United States or in the volunteer forces shall rank and have precedence under said commissions as if they were commissions in the Regular Army; but the rank of officers of the Regular Army under commissions in the National Guard as such shall not, for the purposes of this article, be held to antedate the acceptance of such officers into the service of the United States under said commissions.

"ART. 120. Command when different corps or commands happen to join: When different corps or commands of the military forces of the United States happen to join or do duty together the officer highest in rank of the line of the Regular Army, Marine Corps, forces drafted or called into the service of the United States or Volunteers, there on duty, shall, subject to the provisions of the last preceding article, command the whole and give orders for what is needful in the service, unless otherwise directed by the President.

"ART. 121. Complaints of wrongs: Any officer or soldier who believes himself wronged by his commanding officer, and, upon due application to such commander, is refused redress, may complain to the general commanding in the locality where the officer against whom the complaint is made is stationed. The general shall examine into said complaint and take proper measures for redressing the wrong complained of; and he shall, as soon as possible, transmit to the Department of War a true statement of such complaint, with the proceedings had thereon."

SEC. 4. The provisions of section 3 of this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of January, 1917: Provided, That articles 4, 13, 14, 15, 29, 42, 47, 49, and 92 shall take effect immediately upon the approval of this act.

SEC. 5. That all offenses committed and all penalties, forfeitures, fines, or liabilities incurred prior to the taking effect of this act, under any law embraced in or modified, changed, or repealed by this act, may be prosecuted, punished, and enforced in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 6. All laws and parts of laws in so far as they are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.
And the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on August 7, 1916, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 5645. An act for the establishment of Noyes, in the State of Minnesota, as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

S. 6242. An act authorizing the counties of Nassau, Fla., and Charlton, Ga., to construct a bridge across the St. Marys River between Florida and Georgia; and

S. 6375. An act to authorize the changing of the name of the steamship Aroline.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 527).

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to present the report of the committee of conference on the bill S. 381, commonly known as the Philippine bill. I ask that it lie over and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table and be printed.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House striking out section 34 of the bill, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

"Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipency of the War with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and

"Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and

"Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States, in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence: Therefore

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of this act and the name 'The Philippines' as used in this act shall apply to and include the Philippine Islands ceded to the United States Government by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 11th day of April, 1899, the boundaries of which are set forth in Article III of said treaty, together with those islands embraced in the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900.

"SEC. 2. That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in said islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, signed at Paris December 10, 1898, and except such others as have since become citizens of some other country: Provided, That the Philippine Legislature, herein provided for, is hereby authorized to provide by law for the acquisition of Philippine citizenship by those natives of the Philippine Islands who do not come within the foregoing provisions, the natives of the insular possessions of the United States, and such other persons residing in the Philippine Islands who are citizens of the United States, or who could become citizens of the United States under the laws of the United States if residing therein.

"SEC. 3. That no law shall be enacted in said islands which shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person therein the equal protection of the laws. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

"That in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to be heard by himself and counsel, to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to have a speedy and public trial, to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf.

"That no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense without due process of law; and no person for the same offense shall be twice put in jeopardy of punishment, nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

"That all persons shall before conviction be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses.

"That no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be enacted.

"That no person shall be imprisoned for debt.

"That the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of rebellion, insurrection, or invasion the public safety may require it, in either of which events the same may be suspended by the President or by the Governor General wherever during such period the necessity for such suspension shall exist.

"That no ex post facto law or bill of attainder shall be enacted, nor shall the law of primogeniture ever be in force in the Philippines.

"That no law granting a title of nobility shall be enacted; and no person holding any office of profit or trust in said islands shall, without the consent of the Congress of the United States, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, queen, prince, or foreign State.

"That excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

"That the right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.

"That slavery shall not exist in said islands; nor shall involuntary servitude exist therein except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

"That no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for redress of grievances.

"That no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed; and no religious test shall be required for the exercise of civil or political rights. No public money or property shall ever be appropriated, applied, donated, or used, directly or indirectly, for the use, benefit, or support of any sect, church, denomination, sectarian institution, or system of religion, or for the use, benefit, or support of any priest, preacher, minister, or other religious teacher or dignitary as such. Contracting of polygamous or plural marriages hereafter is prohibited. That no law shall be construed to permit polygamous or plural marriages.

"That no money shall be paid out of the treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation by law.

"That the rule of taxation in said islands shall be uniform.

"That no bill which may be enacted into law shall embrace more than one subject, and that subject shall be expressed in the title of the bill.

"That no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the person or things to be seized.

"That all money collected on any tax levied or assessed for a special purpose shall be treated as a special fund in the treasury and paid out for such purpose only.

"SEC. 4. That all expenses that may be incurred on account of the government of the Philippines for salaries of officials and the conduct of their offices and departments, and all expenses and obligations contracted for the internal improvement or development of the islands, not, however, including defenses, barracks, and other works undertaken by the United States, shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by the Congress, be paid by the government of the Philippines.

"Sec. 5. That the statutory laws of the United States hereafter enacted shall not apply to the Philippine Islands, except when they specifically so provide, or it is so provided in this act.

"Sec. 6. That the laws now in force in the Philippines shall continue in force and effect, except as altered, amended, or modified herein, until altered, amended, or repealed by the legislative authority herein provided or by act of Congress of the United States.

"Sec. 7. That the legislative authority herein provided shall have power, when not inconsistent with this act, by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal any law, civil or criminal, continued in force by this act as it may from time to time see fit.

"This power shall specifically extend with the limitation herein provided as to the tariff to all laws relating to revenue and taxation in effect in the Philippines.

"Sec. 8. That general legislative power, except as otherwise herein provided, is hereby granted to the Philippine Legislature, authorized by this act.

"Sec. 9. That all the property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain, signed December 10, 1898, except such land or other property as has been or shall be designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations of the Government of the United States, and all lands which may have been subsequently acquired by the government of the Philippine Islands by purchase under the provisions of sections 63 and 64 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, except such as may have heretofore been sold and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress, are hereby placed under the control of the government of said islands to be administered or disposed of for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, and the Philippine Legislature shall have power to legislate with respect to all such matters as it may deem advisable; but acts of the Philippine Legislature with reference to land of the public domain, timber, and mining, hereafter enacted, shall not have the force of law until approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That upon the approval of such an act by the Governor General, it shall be by him forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States, and he shall approve or disapprove the same within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved: Provided further, That where lands in the Philippine Islands have been or may be reserved for any public purpose of the United States, and, being no longer required for the purpose for which reserved, have been or may be, by order of the President, placed under the control of the government of said islands to be administered for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, the order of the President shall be regarded as effectual to give the government of said islands full control and power to administer and dispose of such lands for the benefit of the inhabitants of said islands.

"Sec. 10. That while this Act provides that the Philippine government shall have the authority to enact a tariff law the trade relations between the islands and the United States shall continue to be governed exclusively by laws of the Congress of the United States: Provided, That tariff acts or acts amendatory to the tariff of the Philippine Islands shall not become law until they shall receive the approval of the President of the United States, nor shall any act of the Philippine Legislature affecting immigration or the currency or coinage laws of the Philippines become a law until it has been approved by the President of the United States: Provided further, That the President shall approve or disapprove any act mentioned in the foregoing proviso within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved.

"Sec. 11. That no export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from the Philippine Islands, but taxes and assessments on property and license fees for franchises, and privileges, and internal taxes, direct or indirect, may be imposed for the purposes of the Philippine government and the provincial and municipal governments thereof, respectively, as may be provided and defined by acts of the Philippine Legislature, and, where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by the Philippine government or any provincial or municipal government therein, as may be provided by law and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That the entire indebtedness of the Philippine government created by the authority conferred herein shall not exceed at any one time the sum of $15,000,000, exclusive of those obligations known as friar-land bonds, nor that of any province or municipality a sum in excess of seven per centum of the aggregate tax valuation of its property at any one time.

"Sec. 12. That general legislative powers in the Philippines, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be vested in a legislature which shall consist of two houses, one the senate and the other the house of representatives, and the two houses shall be designated 'The Philippine Legislature': Provided, That, until the Philippine Legislature as herein provided shall have been organized, the existing Philippine Legislature shall have all legislative authority herein granted to the Government of the Philippine Islands, except such as may now be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Philippine commission, which is so continued until the organization of the legislature herein provided for the Philippines. When the Philippine Legislature shall have been organized, the exclusive legislative jurisdiction and authority exercised by the Philippine Commission shall thereafter be exercised by the Philippine Legislature.

"Sec. 13. That the members of the Senate of the Philippines, except as herein provided, shall be elected for terms of six and three years, as hereinafter provided, by the qualified electors of the Philippines. Each of the senatorial districts defined as hereinafter provided shall have the right to elect two senators. No person shall be an elective member of the Senate of the Philippines who is not a qualified elector and over 30 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been a resident of the Philippines for at least two consecutive years and an actual resident of the senatorial district from which chosen for a period of at least one year immediately prior to his election.

"Sec. 14. That the members of the house of representatives shall, except as herein provided, be elected triennially by the qualified electors of the Philippines. Each of the representative districts hereinafter provided for shall have the right to elect one representative. No person shall be an elective member of the house of representatives who is not a qualified elector and over 25 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been an actual resident of the district from which elected for at least one year immediately prior to his election.

"Sec. 15. That at the first election held pursuant to this act the qualified electors shall be those having the qualifications of voters under the present law; thereafter and until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature herein provided for the qualifications of voters for senators and representatives in the Philippines and all officers elected by the people shall be as follows:

"Every male citizen of the Philippines 21 years of age or over (except insane and feeble-minded persons and those convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction of an infamous offense since the 13th day of August, 1898), who shall have been a resident of the Philippines for one year and of the municipality in which he shall offer to vote for six months next preceding the day of voting, and who is comprised within one of the following classes:

"(a) Those who under existing law are legal voters and have exercised the right of suffrage.

"(b) Those who own real property to the value of 500 pesos, or who annually pay 30 pesos or more of the established taxes.

"(c) Those who are able to read and write either Spanish, English, or a native language.

"Sec. 16. That the first Philippine Legislature provided for under this act shall be composed of a house of representatives consisting of the members of the present assembly elected on the first Tuesday in June, 1916, which after the passage of this act shall be known as the house of representatives, who shall hold office until representatives herein provided for shall have been elected, and of a senate whose members shall be elected on the first Tuesday in October, 1916, unless the Governor General in his discretion shall fix another date not earlier than 30 nor later than 60 days after the passage of this act, of which due proclamation shall be made. At said first election there shall be chosen one senator from each senate district for a term of three years and one for a term of six years, thereafter one senator from each district shall be elected from each senate district for a term of six years. That on the first Tuesday in October, 1919, each representative district shall elect one representative for a term of three years and triennially thereafter: Provided, That the Governor General of the Philippine Islands shall appoint without the consent of the senate and without restriction as to residence senators and representatives who will in his opinion best represent the senate district and those representative districts which shall be included in the territory not now represented in the Philippine Assembly: Provided, That thereafter elections shall be held only on such days and under such regulations as to ballots, voting and qualifications of electors as may be prescribed by the Philippine Legislature which is hereby given authority to redistrict the Philippine Islands and modify, amend, or repeal any provision of this section.

"SEC. 17. That the terms of office of elective senators and representatives shall be six and three years, respectively, and shall begin on the date of their election. In case of vacancy among the elective members of the senate or in the house of representatives, special elections may be held in the districts wherein such vacancy occurred under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, but senators or representatives elected in such cases shall hold office only for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred. Senators and representatives appointed by the Governor General shall hold office until removed by the Governor General.

"SEC. 18. That the senate and house of representatives, respectively, shall be the sole judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their elective members, and each house may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel an elective member. Both houses shall convene at the capital on the 16th day of October next following the election and organize by the election of a speaker or a presiding officer, a clerk, and a sergeant at arms for each house, and such other officers and assistants as may be required. A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may meet, adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members. The legislature shall hold annual sessions, commencing on the 16th day of October, or, if the 16th day of October be a legal holiday, then on the first day following which is not a legal holiday, in each year. The legislature may be called in special session at any time by the Governor General for general legislation, or for action on such specific subjects as he may designate. No special session shall continue longer than 30 days, and no regular session shall continue longer than 100 days, exclusive of Sundays. The legislature is hereby given the power and authority to change the date of the commencement of its annual sessions.

"The senators and representatives shall receive an annual compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the treasury of the Philippine Islands. The senators and representatives shall, in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective houses and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house they shall not be questioned in any other place.

"No senator or representative shall, during the time for which he may have been elected, be eligible to any office the election to which is vested in the legislature, nor shall be appointed to any office of trust or profit which shall have been created or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such term.

"SEC. 19. That each house of the legislature shall keep a journal of its proceedings and, from time to time, publish the same; and the yeas and nays of the members of either house, on any question, shall, upon demand of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal, and every bill and joint resolution which shall have passed both houses shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor General. If he approve the same, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to that house in which it shall have originated, which shall enter the objections at large on its journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the members elected to that house shall agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of all the members elected to that house it shall be sent to the Governor General, who, in case he shall then not approve, shall transmit the same to the President of the United States. The vote of each house shall be by the yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against shall be entered on the journal. If the President of the United States approve the same, he shall sign it and it shall become a law. If he shall not approve same, he shall return it to the Governor General, so stating, and it shall not become a law: Provided, That if any bill or joint resolution shall not be returned by the Governor General as herein provided within 20 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall become a law unless vetoed by the Governor General within 30 days after adjournment: Provided further, That the President of the United States shall approve or disapprove an act submitted to him under the provisions of this section within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval; and if not approved within such time, it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved. The Governor General shall have the power to veto any particular item or items of an appropriation bill, but the veto shall not affect the item or items to which he does not object. The item or items objected to shall not take effect except in the manner heretofore provided in this section as to bills and joint resolutions returned to the legislature without his approval.

"All laws enacted by the Philippine Legislature shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority to annul the same. If at the termination of any fiscal year the appropriations necessary for the support of government for the ensuing fiscal year shall not have been made, the several sums appropriated in the last appropriation bills for the objects and purposes therein specified, so far as the same may be done, shall be deemed to be reappropriated for the several objects and purposes specified in said last appropriation bill; and until the legislature shall act in such behalf the treasurer shall, when so directed by the Governor General, make the payments necessary for the purposes aforesaid.

"SEC. 20. That at the first meeting of the Philippine Legislature created by this act and triennially thereafter there shall be chosen by the legislature two Resident Commissioners to the United States, who shall hold their office for a term of three years beginning with the 4th day of March following their election, and who shall be entitled to an official recognition as such by all departments upon presentation to the President of a certificate of election by the Governor General of said islands. Each of said Resident Commissioners shall, in addition to the salary and the sum in lieu of mileage now allowed by law, be allowed the same sum for stationery and for the pay of necessary clerk hire as is now allowed to the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and the franking privilege allowed by law to Members of Congress. No person shall be eligible to election as Resident Commissioner who is not a bona fide elector of said islands and who does not owe allegiance to the United States and who is not more than 30 years of age and who does not read and write the English language. The present two Resident Commissioners shall hold office until the 4th of March, 1917. In case of vacancy in the position of Resident Commissioner caused by resignation or otherwise, the Governor General may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Philippine Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy; but the Resident Commissioner thus elected shall hold office only for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred.

"SEC. 21. That the supreme executive power shall be vested in an executive officer, whose official title shall be 'The Governor General of the Philippine Islands.' He shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and hold his office at the pleasure of the President and until his successor is chosen and qualified. The Governor General shall reside in the Philippine Islands during his official incumbency, and maintain his office at the seat of government. He shall, unless otherwise herein provided, appoint, by and with the consent of the Philippine Senate, such officers as may now be appointed by the Governor General, or such as he is authorized by this act to appoint, or whom he may hereafter be authorized by law to appoint; but appointments made while the senate is not in session shall be effective either until disapproval or until the next adjournment of the senate. He shall have general supervision and control of all of the departments and bureaus of the government in the Philippine Islands as far as is not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and shall be commander in chief of all locally created armed forces and militia. He is hereby vested with the exclusive power to grant pardons and reprieves and remit fines and forfeitures, and may veto any legislation enacted as herein provided. He shall submit within ten days of the opening of each regular session of the Philippine Legislature a budget of receipts and expenditures which shall be the basis of the annual appropriation bill. He shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint. He shall be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws of the Philippine Islands and of the United States operative within the Philippine Islands, and whenever it becomes necessary he may call upon the commanders of the military and naval forces of the United States in the islands, or summon the posse comitatus, or call out the militia or other locally created armed forces, to prevent or suppress lawless violence, invasion, insurrection, or rebellion; and he may, in case of rebellion or invasion, or imminent danger thereof, when the public safety requires it, suspend the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus, or place the islands, or any part thereof, under martial law: Provided, That whenever the Governor General shall exercise the authority granted in this section, he shall at once notify the President of the United States thereof, together with the attending facts and circumstances, and the President shall have power to modify or vacate the action of the Governor General. He shall annually and at such other times as he may be required make such official report of the transactions of the government of the Philippine Islands to an executive department of the United States to be designated by the President, and his said annual report shall be transmitted to the Congress of the United States; and he shall perform such additional duties and functions as may in pursuance of law be delegated or assigned to him by the President.

"SEC. 22. That, except as provided otherwise in this act, the executive departments of the Philippine government shall continue as now authorized by law until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature. When the Philippine Legislature herein provided shall convene and organize the Philippine Commission as such shall cease and determine and the members thereof shall vacate their offices as members of said commission: Provided, That the heads of executive departments shall continue to exercise their executive functions until the heads of departments provided by the Philippine Legislature pursuant to the provisions of this act are appointed and qualified. The Philippine Legislature may thereafter by appropriate legislation increase the number or abolish any of the executive departments or make such changes in the names and duties thereof as it may see fit and shall provide for the appointment and removal of the heads of the executive departments by the Governor General: Provided, That all executive functions of the government must be directly under the Governor General or within one of the executive departments under the supervision and control of the Governor General. There shall be established by the Philippine Legislature a bureau, to be known as the Bureau of Non-Christian Tribes, which said bureau shall be embraced in one of the executive departments to be designated by the Governor General and shall have general supervision over the public affairs of the inhabitants of the territory represented in the legislature by appointive senators and representatives.

"SEC. 23. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, a vice governor of the Philippine Islands, who shall have all of the powers of the Governor General in the case of a vacancy or temporary removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor General, or in case of his temporary absence; and the said vice governor shall be the head of the executive department, known as the department of public instruction, which shall include the bureau of education and the bureau of health, and he may be assigned such other executive duties as the Governor General may designate.

Other bureaus now included in the department of public instruction shall, until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature, be included in the department of the interior.

"The President may designate the head of an executive department of the Philippine government to act as Governor General in the case of a vacancy, the temporary removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor General and of the vice governor, or their temporary absence, and the head of the department thus designated shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the Governor General during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

"SEC. 24. That there shall be appointed by the President an auditor, who shall examine, audit, and settle all accounts pertaining to the revenues and receipts from whatever source of the Philippine government and of the provincial and municipal governments of the Philippines, including trust funds and funds derived from bond issues; and audit, in accordance with law and administrative regulations, all expenditures of funds or property pertaining to or held in trust by the government or the Provinces or municipalities thereof. He shall perform a like duty with respect to all government branches.

"He shall keep the general accounts of the government and preserve the vouchers pertaining thereto.

"It shall be the duty of the auditor to bring to the attention of the proper administrative officer expenditures of funds or property which, in his opinion, are irregular, unnecessary, excessive, or extravagant.

"There shall be a deputy auditor appointed in the same manner as the auditor. The deputy auditor shall sign such official papers as the auditor may designate and perform such other duties as the auditor may prescribe, and in case of the death, resignation, sickness, or other absence of the auditor from his office, from any cause, the deputy auditor shall have charge of such office. In case of the absence from duty, from any cause, of both the auditor and the deputy auditor, the Governor General may designate an assistant, who shall have charge of the office.

"The administrative jurisdiction of the auditor over accounts, whether of funds or property, and all vouchers and records pertaining thereto, shall be exclusive. With the approval of the Governor General he shall from time to time make and promulgate general or special rules and regulations not inconsistent with law covering the method of accounting for public funds and property, and funds and property held in trust by the government or any of its branches: Provided, That any officer accountable for public funds or property may require such additional reports or returns from his subordinates or others as he may deem necessary for his own information and protection.

"The decisions of the auditor shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branches of the government, except that appeal therefrom may be taken by the party aggrieved or the head of the department concerned within one year, in the manner hereinafter prescribed. The auditor shall, except as hereinafter provided, have like authority as that conferred by law upon the several auditors of the United States and the Comptroller of the United States Treasury and is authorized to communicate directly with any person having claims before him for settlement, or with any department, officer, or person having official relations with his office.

"As soon after the close of each fiscal year as the accounts of said year may be examined and adjusted the auditor shall submit to the Governor General and the Secretary of War an annual report of the fiscal concerns of the government, showing the receipts and disbursements of the various departments and bureaus of the government and of the various Provinces and municipalities, and make such other reports as may be required of him by the Governor General or the Secretary of War.

"In the execution of their duties the auditor and the deputy auditor are authorized to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and to take evidence, and, in the pursuance of these provisions, may issue subpoenas and enforce the attendance of witnesses, as now provided by law.

"The office of the auditor shall be under the general supervision of the Governor General and shall consist of the auditor and deputy auditor and such necessary assistants as may be prescribed by law.

"SEC. 25. That any person aggrieved by the action or decision of the auditor in the settlement of his account or claim may, within one year, take an appeal in writing to the Governor General, which appeal shall specifically set forth the particular action of the auditor to which exception is taken, with the reason and authorities relied on for reversing such decision.

"If the Governor General shall confirm the action of the auditor, he shall so indorse the appeal and transmit it to the auditor, and the action shall thereupon be final and conclusive. Should the Governor General fail to sustain the action of the auditor, he shall forthwith transmit his grounds of disapproval to the Secretary of War, together with the appeal and the papers necessary to a proper understanding of the matter. The decision of the Secretary of War in such case shall be final and conclusive.

"SEC. 26. That the supreme court and the courts of first instance of the Philippine Islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as heretofore provided and such additional jurisdiction as shall hereafter be prescribed by law. The municipal courts of said islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as now provided by law, subject in all matters to such alteration and amendment as may be hereafter enacted by law; and the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States. The judges of the court of first instance shall be appointed by the Governor General, by and with the advice and consent of the Philippine Senate: Provided, That the admiralty jurisdiction of the supreme court and courts of first instance shall not be changed except by act of Congress. That in all cases pending under the operation of existing laws, both criminal and civil, the jurisdiction shall continue until final judgment and determination.

"SEC. 27. That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings now pending therein or hereafter determined thereby in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved, or in causes in which the value in controversy exceeds $25,000, or in which the title or possession of real estate exceeding in value the sum of $25,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, is involved or brought in question; and such final judgments or decrees may and can be reviewed, revised, reversed, modified, or affirmed by said Supreme Court of the United States on appeal or writ of error by the party aggrieved within the same time, in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure, as far as applicable, as the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States.

"SEC. 28. That the government of the Philippine Islands may grant franchises and rights, including the authority to exercise the right of eminent domain, for the construction and operation of works of public utility and service, and may authorize said works to be constructed and maintained over and across the public property of the United States, including streets, highways, squares, and reservations, and over similar property of the government of said islands, and may adopt rules and regulations under which the provincial and municipal government of the islands may grant the right to use and occupy such public property belonging to said Provinces or municipalities: Provided, That no private property shall be damaged or taken for any purpose under this section without just compensation, and that such authority to take and occupy land shall not authorize the taking, use, or occupation of any land except such as is required for the actual necessary purposes for which the franchise is granted, and that no franchise or right shall be granted to any individual, firm, or corporation except under the conditions that it shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal by the Congress of the United States, and that lands or right of use and occupation of lands thus granted shall revert to the governments by which they were respectively granted upon the termination of the franchises and rights under which they were granted or upon their revocation or repeal. That all franchises or rights granted under this act shall forbid the issue of stock or bonds except in exchange for actual cash or for property at a fair valuation equal to the par value of the stock or bonds so issued; shall forbid the declaring of stock or bond dividends, and, in the case of public-service corporations shall provide for the effective regulation of the charges thereof, for the official inspection and regulation of the books and accounts of such corporations, and for the payment of a reasonable percentage of gross earnings into the treasury of the Philippine Islands or of the Province or municipality within which such franchises are granted and exercised: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any corporation organized under this act, or for any person, company, or corporation receiving any grant, franchise, or concession from the government of said islands, to use, employ, or contract for the labor of persons held in involuntary servitude; and any person, company, or corporation so violating the provisions of this act shall forfeit all charters, grants, or franchises for doing business in said islands, in an action or proceeding brought for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction by any officer of the Philippine government, or on the complaint of any citizen of the Philippines, under such regulations and rules as the Philippine Legislature shall prescribe, and in addition shall be deemed guilty of an offense, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000.

"SEC. 29. That, except as in this act otherwise provided, the salaries of all the officials of the Philippines not appointed by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other employees, shall be such and be so paid out of the revenues of the Philippines as shall from time to time be determined by the Philippine Legislature. The salaries of all officers and all expenses of the offices of the various officials of the Philippines appointed as herein provided by the President shall also be paid out of the revenues of the Philippines. The annual salaries of the following-named officials appointed by the President and so to be paid shall be: The Governor General, $18,000; in addition thereto he shall be entitled to the occupancy of the buildings heretofore used by the chief executive of the Philippines, with the furniture and effects therein, free of rental; chief justice of the supreme court, $8,000; associate justices of the supreme court, $7,500 each; auditor, $6,000; deputy auditor, $3,000.

"SEC. 30. That the provisions of the foregoing section shall not apply to provincial and municipal officials; their salaries and the compensation of their deputies, assistants, and other help, as well as all other expenses incurred by the Provinces and municipalities, shall be paid out of the provincial and municipal revenues in such manner as the Philippine Legislature shall provide.

"SEC. 31. That all laws or parts of laws applicable to the Philippines not in conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby continued in force and effect."

GILBERT M. HITCHCOCK,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. A. JONES,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

RECESS.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move the Senate take a recess until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m., Monday, August 7, 1916) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 8, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 7 (legislative day of August 5), 1916.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

William Edward Byerly, of Velva, N. Dak., to be register of the land office at Williston, N. Dak., vice Thomas B. Murphy, whose term will expire August 7, 1916.

ASSISTANT SURGEONS, PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Dr. Clifford R. Eskey to be assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

Dr. Joseph D. Stout to be assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

Dr. Edwin O. Woods to be assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

Lieut. Col. Frank F. Eastman, Quartermaster Corps, to be colonel from August 1, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Col. George B. Davis, retired from active service July 31, 1916.

Maj. Hugh J. Gallagher, Quartermaster Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from August 1, 1916, subject to examination required by law, vice Lieut. Col. Frank T. Eastman, promoted.

SIGNAL CORPS.

Capt. George S. Gibbs, Signal Corps, to be major from July 27, 1916, vice Maj. William Mitchell, detailed in the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL RESERVE CORPS.

To be first lieutenants in the Medical Reserve Corps with rank from July 29, 1916.

Nicolo Vincenzo Alessi, of Louisiana.
James Stevenson Allen, of New York.
Joseph David Aronson, of Pennsylvania.
Eugene Jacob Asnis, of Pennsylvania.
Carl Lewis Barnes, of Illinois.
William Bates, of New Jersey.
John Jacob Beard, of New York.
Leo Pecci Bell, of Missouri.
Burnett Boisseau Benson, of Kentucky.
Leo Hellee Bernd, of Pennsylvania.
Joel Ives Butler, of Arizona.
Burns Stoddard Chaffee, of California.
George Houghton Clapp, of Pennsylvania.
William Arthur Clark, of Illinois.
Clayton Reynolds Clarke, of New York.
Alfred Burwell Claytor, of Pennsylvania.
Inman Williams Cooper, jr., of Mississippi.
W. Claude Copeland, of Colorado.
Edward Foulke Corson, of Pennsylvania.
James Hugh Finch, of Illinois.
Charles Edward Belin Flagg, of Washington.
Elisha Flagg, of Massachusetts.
James Lennon Foley, of Illinois.
Channing Frothingham, jr., of Massachusetts.
John Patrick Gallagher, of Pennsylvania.
Charles Robert Gill, of New York.
Carl Goehring, of Nebraska.
Frederic Grosvenor Goodridge, of Connecticut.
Samuel Ashby Grantham, of Missouri.
Robert Bruce Grimes, jr., of Pennsylvania.
Arthur Joseph Hall, of the District of Columbia.

Thomas Farris Hale, of Pennsylvania.
 Edward Wilbur Hanson, of Illinois.
 Byron Harry Hermann, of New York.
 Ralph Abram Hurd, of New York.
 William James, of New Jersey.
 John Prentiss Lord, of Nebraska.
 Floyd Willcox McRae, jr., of Georgia.
 James Robert McVay, of Missouri.
 Hertel Philip Makel, of Maryland.
 Laurence Hampson Mayers, of Illinois.
 Hugo Mella, of North Dakota.
 Edwin Morton Miller, of Illinois.
 Thomas Grier Miller, of Pennsylvania.
 George Richards Minot, of Massachusetts.
 Daniel Virgil Moore, of South Dakota.
 Cecil Goddard Morehouse, of Iowa.
 John Walter Morris, of Tennessee.
 Roscoe Edward Mosiman, of Ohio.
 Frank Reid Mount, of Oregon.
 Hugh Stevens Mount, of Oregon.
 Percy Musgrave, of Pennsylvania.
 William Herman Myers, of Georgia.
 Arthur Newlin, of Pennsylvania.
 Frank Roberts Ober, of Massachusetts.
 John Elbert O'Keefe, of Iowa.
 George Kingsley Olmsted, of Colorado.
 Robert Bayley Osgood, of Massachusetts.
 Alfred Harrison Parsons, of New York.
 Francis Weld Peabody, of Massachusetts.
 Albert Pfeiffer, of New York.
 Damon Beckett Pfeiffer, of Pennsylvania.
 Edgar Warden Phillips, of New York.
 William Oscar Hampton Prosser, of Pennsylvania.
 George Kremer Rhodes, of Maryland.
 David Riesman, of Pennsylvania.
 James Stevens Simmons, of Pennsylvania.
 Frank Conger Smith, of South Dakota.
 Mitchell Porter Stiles, of Pennsylvania.
 August Adrian Strasser, of New Jersey.
 George Reed Tabor, of Texas.
 William Barclay Terhune, of Louisiana.
 Donald Vaughn Trueblood, of Washington.
 Ira Clinton Tyndall, of Maryland.
 Norris Wistar Vaux, of Pennsylvania.
 Charles Edward Walts, of Georgia.
 James Ralston Wells, of Pennsylvania.
 Walter John Whitehouse, of Pennsylvania.
 Harry Leigh Willson, of Pennsylvania.
 George Wilson, of Pennsylvania.
 Henry Otto Wyneken, of Texas.
 Walter Meredith Boothby, of Massachusetts.
 Louis Herbert Burlingham, of Massachusetts.
 George Parkman Denny, of Massachusetts.
 William Lincoln Noble, of Illinois.
 Harry Reeves Oliver, of California.
 Frederic Kammerer, of New York, late first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps.
 Arthur Garner Coumbe, of Virginia.
 Linus Reed Cranmer, of Ohio.
 Frederick John Cullen, of Washington.
 John Blair Deaver, of Pennsylvania.
 Frank Martin Dedaker, of Pennsylvania.
 John Sebastian Derr, of Georgia.
 Henry Kuhl Dillard, jr., of Pennsylvania.
 Clarence Eugene Drake, of Texas.
 William Drayton, jr., of Pennsylvania.
 Henry Culp Earnshaw, of Pennsylvania.
 James Bennett Edwards, of New Jersey.
 Edward Coleman Ellett, of Tennessee.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 7th day of June, 1916:

Bruce G. Leighton,
 Harold C. Van Valzah,
 Paul A. Stevens,
 Reginald S. H. Venable,
 John M. Kates,
 Eric F. Zemke,
 Edward J. O'Keefe,
 Arthur S. Walton,
 Valentine Wood,
 Henry A. Sellar,
 Julian B. Timberlake, jr.,
 Laurence W. Clarke,

Arnold Marcus, and Ligon B. Ard.

Ensign Ray H. Wakeman to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 8th day of December, 1915.

John W. Draper, a citizen of New York, to be an assistant surgeon in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy from the 2d day of August, 1916.

Boatswain Edward Sweeney to be a chief boatswain in the Navy from the 21st day of December, 1915.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate August 7 (legislative day of August 5), 1916.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

James O. Carr to be United States attorney for the eastern district of North Carolina.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

CLASS 4.

Benjamin Thaw, jr., to be a secretary of embassy or legation of class 4.

EXCISE BOARD.

Andrew J. Cummings to be a member of the Excise Board for the District of Columbia for a term of three years.

POSTMASTERS.

IOWA.

H. L. Cartwright, Union.

KANSAS.

Charles M. Dillman, Cimarron.

NEBRASKA.

J. B. Davis, Humboldt.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Minnie M. Luce, Hope.

OHIO.

Glenn Baker, Centerburg.

OREGON.

Ira Wimberly, Drain.

TEXAS.

W. P. Copeland, Roscoe.

Burney Reagan, Big Spring.

J. L. Wilson, Celina.

J. O. Wood, Wellington.

VERMONT.

John Layden, West Pawlet.

WASHINGTON.

Arthur B. Foley, Wilbur.

Lester S. Overholt, Omak.

WISCONSIN.

William Dailey, Birnamwood.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 7, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, dispenser of all good, amid the confusion of tongues, the clash of convictions, the criminations and recriminations, the roar of battle, the groans of the wounded and dying, the far cry of the bereaved, the widows and orphans, help us to put our souls into that prayer of prayers which fell from the lips of the world's greatest Teacher, Prophet and Seer and try to live it.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors, and lead us, not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, August 5, 1916, was read and approved.

ELECTION CONTEST—GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Elections No. 2, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 340.

Resolved, That GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM was duly elected a Member of the Sixty-fourth Congress as a Representative from the eleventh congressional district of Massachusetts and is entitled to the seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 20. An act authorizing the county of Gunnison, Colo., to purchase certain public lands for public-park purposes;

H. R. 11162. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize entry of the public lands in incorporated cities and towns for cemetery and park purposes";

H. R. 14868. An act to accept the cession by the State of Oregon of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Crater Lake National Park, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7419. An act granting a patent to a certain strip of land to Elisha A. Crandall;

H. R. 12248. An act for the relief of the estate of Mary H. S. Robertson, deceased;

H. R. 6758. An act for the relief of the legal heirs of Hector M. McDonald, deceased;

H. R. 8630. An act for the relief of the Farmers' State Bank, of Eureka, Woodford County, Ill.;

H. R. 8141. An act for the relief of the dependent widow of Patrick Curran, civilian employee of the Government, who was killed while in the discharge of his duties at the United States naval magazine at Iona Island, N. Y.;

H. R. 14528. An act for the relief of W. W. Finn;

H. R. 10641. An act for the relief of Fred Henderson;

H. R. 5453. An act for the relief of the State board of harbor commissioners of the State of California;

H. R. 2052. An act for the relief of the estate of William D. Allen;

H. R. 10643. An act for the relief of Theodore Bagge;

H. R. 1777. An act for the relief of Frank J. Deutsch;

H. R. 11984. An act for the relief of William E. Heffner;

H. R. 8200. An act for the relief of M. E. Sitlers;

H. R. 12123. An act to appropriate money to build and maintain roads on the Spokane Indian Reservation;

H. R. 14952. An act to reimburse J. T. Nance;

H. R. 9375. An act for the relief of J. M. Potter;

H. R. 13982. An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens;

H. R. 7396. An act for the relief of Hiram P. Geaslin;

H. R. 2555. An act for the relief of the Minnesota & Ontario Power Co.;

H. R. 10052. An act to reimburse J. T. Nance;

H. R. 14299. An act to amend section 33 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 10546. An act for the relief of the Illinois Central Railroad Co., and for other purposes;

H. R. 11416. An act to repeal an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August 1, 1888";

H. R. 15777. An act to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii as amended by Congress relating to the granting of a franchise for the purpose of manufacturing and supplying gas in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii; and

H. R. 7062. An act for the relief of Erskine R. Hayes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15522. An act to establish a national park service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1528. An act for the relief of Martin Huhn; and

H. R. 11129. An act for the relief of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew and for the relief of the owners of cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15048) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil war and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

S. 4654. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 5914. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6331. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to William H. Ingle for homestead entry in Colorado;

S. 3681. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Esparta;

S. 6227. An act to increase the area of the United States Botanic Garden in the city of Washington, D. C.;

S. 6013. An act to confirm the entry of John Dowd;

S. 1548. An act for the relief of Emmett W. Entrikey;

S. 6626. An act to fix the rate of pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office;

S. 10. An act to correct the military record of Clayton H. Adams;

S. 736. An act to correct the military record of John P. Webber, alias John J. Webber;

S. 6154. An act for the relief of Dr. Charles Lee Baker;

S. 6287. An act for the relief of Joseph Eubor;

S. 6308. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease for production of oil and gas ceded lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming;

S. 1265. An act for the relief of J. G. Senpelt;

S. 3774. An act to authorize the sale of lands allotted to Indians under the Moses agreement of July 7, 1883;

S. 3647. An act for the relief of Moses C. Tingley;

S. 3972. An act to provide for selection by the Omaha Indians and the setting apart of reservation lands for tribal cemetery purposes;

S. 5635. An act authorizing the conveyance of certain land in the State of South Dakota to the town of Flandreau in said State;

S. 5632. An act for the relief of Aquila Nebeker;

S. 2388. An act for the relief of Orion Mathews;

S. 5203. An act for the relief of Gardiner L. Eastman;

S. 6601. An act for the enlargement of the post-office building in Pittsburgh, Pa.;

S. J. Res. 151. Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a special joint commission of the Senate and House of Representatives to investigate the employment of Federal prisoners in industrial occupations for the benefit of the Government of the United States;

S. 135. An act for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863;

S. 6667. An act to incorporate the American Nurses' Association;

S. 4288. An act relating to the maintenance of actions for death on the high seas and other navigable waters;

S. 6526. An act authorizing the Shoshone Tribe of Indians residing on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

S. J. Res. 143. Joint resolution granting permission for the erection of a monument in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., to the memory and in honor of the members of the various orders of sisters who gave their services as nurses on battle fields, in hospitals, and on floating hospitals during the Civil War;

S. 3700. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States";

S. 6720. An act to increase the limit of cost of public building at Park City, Utah;

S. 5202. An act to authorize the maintenance and operation of dams across the St. Croix River at Baileyville and Grand Falls, Me.;

S. 6740. An act to correct the military record of Matthew C. Butler, jr.; and

S. 6748. An act providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution appropriating $540,000 for the relief of flood sufferers in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, and Mississippi, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6561. An act providing for the sale at public auction of all unsold suburban lots not reserved for public purposes in the Government town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for the issuance of patents for those previously sold under the act of May 2, 1906, on the payment of the price at which the said lots were reappraised under said act without further condition or delay; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3681. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Esparta; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1548. An act for the relief of Emmett W. Entriiken; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 10. An act to correct the military record of Clayton H. Adams; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 736. An act to correct the military record of John P. Webber, alias John J. Webber; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6154. An act for the relief of Dr. Charles Lee Baker; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6287. An act for the relief of Joseph Eubor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1265. An act for the relief of J. G. Seupelt; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3774. An act to authorize the sale of lands allotted to Indians under the Moses agreement of July 7, 1883; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 3647. An act for the relief of Moses C. Tingley; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3972. An act to provide for selection by the Omaha Indians and the setting apart of reservation lands for tribal cemetery purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5635. An act authorizing the conveyance of certain land in the State of South Dakota to the town of Flandreau in said State; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5632. An act for the relief of Aquila Nebeker; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5203. An act for the relief of Gardiner L. Eastman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6601. An act for the enlargement of the post-office building in Pittsburgh, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 2388. An act for the relief of Orion Mathews; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4288. An act relating to the maintenance of actions for death on the high seas and other navigable waters; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 6720. An act to increase the limit of cost of public building at Park City, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 6748. An act providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 6740. An act to correct the military record of Matthew C. Butler, jr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Bingham Canyon, in the State of Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 697. An act authorizing a credit in certain accounts in the office of the Auditor for the War Department; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2544. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Q. A. Brett a first lieutenant in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 55. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use, at his discretion, surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16604. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, from the borough of Montgomery, Lycoming County, Pa., to Muncy Creek Township, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16534. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16380. An act granting the consent of Congress to the board of supervisors of Highland Township, Pennington County, Minn., to construct a bridge across Red Lake River;

H. R. 16891. An act granting the consent of Congress to Traill County, N. Dak., and to Polk County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North;

H. R. 16875. An act granting the consent of Congress to Crisp County, Ga., to construct a bridge across Flint River, Ga., between Crisp and Sumter Counties;

H. R. 16764. An act to authorize the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties, in Pennsylvania, their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Watsonstown, Northumberland County, Pa., to White Deer Township, Union County, Pa.;

H. R. 7883. An act for the relief of Charlotte M. Johnston;

H. R. 6181. An act for the relief of Letitia W. Garrison;

H. R. 13620. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 14576. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 12194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 11240. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 5914. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 4654. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 12197. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew.

RESIGNATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

JULY 22, 1916.

HON. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I beg to inform you that I have this day transmitted to the governor of California my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the tenth district of California.

Yours, very truly,

WM. D. STEPHENS.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

OVERISSUES OF SECURITIES.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 563) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have the bill passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF STREAMS, ETC., IN ARID PUBLIC LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to have the bill passed with the House amendments, if the House amendments restricting the authorization are likely to remain in the bill after it becomes a law.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that we will do everything we can to retain those House amendments. That is the unanimous judgment of the Committee on Public Lands, and it is our determination to retain them in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interior Department be, and is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed immediately to proceed by all necessary and proper means to discover, develop, protect, and render more accessible for the benefit of the general public, springs, streams, and water holes on what are known as the western deserts and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California; and in connection therewith to erect and maintain suitable and durable monuments and signboards at proper places and intervals along and near the accustomed lines of travel and over the general area of said desert lands, containing information and directions as to the location and nature of said springs, streams, and water holes, to the end that the same may be more readily traced and found by persons in search or need thereof; also to provide convenient and ready means, apparatus, and appliances by which water may be brought to the earth's surface at said water holes for the use of such persons; also to prepare and distribute suitable maps, reports, and general information relating to said springs, streams, and water holes, and their specific location with reference to lines of travel.

Sec. 2. That to carry out the purposes of this act the expenditure of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized. All disbursements made under this act shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior on vouchers approved by the Director of the Geological Survey.

Sec. 3. That whoever shall willfully or maliciously injure, destroy, deface, or remove any of said monuments or signposts, or shall willfully or maliciously fill up, render foul, or in anywise destroy or impair the utility of said springs, streams, or water holes, or shall willfully or maliciously interfere with said monuments, signposts, streams, springs, or water holes, or the purposes for which they are maintained and used, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to make, issue, promulgate, and enforce such rules and regulations as may be necessary, or by him deemed expedient, to carry into force and effect the provisions of this act and accomplish its objects and purposes.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "authorized," insert the word "and."
Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "and directed immediately to proceed by all necessary and proper means" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in his discretion in so far as the authorization made herein will permit."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "what are known as the western deserts and."

Page 2, line 2, strike out the words "in the State of California."

Page 2, lines 19, 20, and 21, strike out the words "All disbursements made under this act shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior on vouchers approved by the Director of the Geological Survey."

Page 3, strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 1, line 3, by striking out the words "Interior Department" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Also the following amendment:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "and," insert the word "he."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same."

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MINING FOR METALLIFEROUS MINERALS, INDIAN RESERVATIONS, ARIZONA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12426) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations in the State of Arizona.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman object to having the bill passed over without prejudice?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the bill being passed without prejudice.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MEMPHIS, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5886) extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,' approved August 23, 1912."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that the reading at a previous session would not suffice. It was read when we had it up a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is this the same bill which the gentleman had up on last Wednesday?

Mr. ADAMSON. It was.

Mr. MANN. It is a short bill; let it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the better practice would be to read it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I thought it was the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion of a bridge now in the course of construction across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., which the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors or assigns, was authorized to construct, maintain, and operate by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,' approved August 23, 1912," be, and the same is hereby, extended to the 1st day of April, 1917.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to resubmit the amendment offered when the bill was before the House last Wednesday and marked on the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after line 6, insert the following: "Provided, That the wagon way portion of said bridge and the approaches thereto shall be completed within said time."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, this amendment I offered to meet this condition—

Mr. ADAMSON. That is at the end of line 7 instead of line 6.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified so as to read at the end of line 7.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 2, after line 7, etc.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker—well, I can offer an amendment to section 1 later.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after section 1, add the following as a new section:

"Amend an act approved July 20, 1912, and amendment thereto approved August 23, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River.'"

So amend the proviso in section 1 of said act that amended it will read as follows:

"Provided, That said bridge shall be so constructed, maintained, and operated that, in addition to its use for railroad purposes, it shall provide for a separate roadway and approaches and continuous use by the public as a highway bridge, to be used by vehicles, pedestrians, horsemen, animals, and all kinds of traffic and travel, for the transit of which reasonable rates of toll may be charged and received, but no rate for passage of a single passenger on a railroad train shall exceed 25 cents."

Mr. ADAMSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that is agreeable to the people of the community, and I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. How does the first part of the amendment read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first part of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following as a new section. "Amend an act approved July 20, 1912,"—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that is not in proper form.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is an awkward statement. The gentleman wants to amend the original act.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am inclined to think there is a pencil emendation to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That said bridge shall be so constructed, maintained, and operated that, in addition to its use for railroad purposes, it shall provide for an adequate and separate roadway and approaches and continuous use by the public, etc."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the language of the amendment is not correct. I move to amend by striking out before the proviso—

Mr. ADAMSON. That is, in the Caraway amendment?

Mr. MANN. Yes—and insert the language written there.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all preceding the proviso in the Caraway amendment and insert "That the proviso in section 1 of said act, approved August 23, 1912, be and the same is hereby amended to read as follows."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think that is better.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Caraway amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 5, page 2, by striking out the quotation marks after the word "twelve."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 5, by striking out the quotation marks after the word "twelve."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. And then, in line 4, by inserting, after the word "river" and the inside quotation marks which follow the word "river," outside quotation marks.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert outside quotation marks after inside quotation marks after the word "river," line 4, page 2.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title by striking out, in the last line of the title, after the word "twelve," the quotation marks and by inserting in the line next to the last, after the inside quotation marks which follow the word "river," outside quotation marks.

Mr. ADAMSON. This is the same change made in the text so as to correctly describe the title.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended so as to conform to the text. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15096) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stats. L., p. 796), entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated for other purposes," are hereby declared applicable to all grants of school lands heretofore made by Congress, and all selections heretofore made and approved under said grants and in accordance with said act of February 28, 1891, if otherwise lawful, are hereby ratified and confirmed; that all pending and unapproved selections heretofore made under said grants and in accordance with said act, if found otherwise valid, and for lands which are nonmineral in character and which have not, prior to date of approval, been withdrawn under the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stats. L., p. 847), may be approved under the provisions of said act of February 28, 1891: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the approval of selections included within withdrawals under the provisions of said act of June 25, 1910, subject to conditions, limitations, or reservations relating to such withdrawn lands if the surface of such land is found by the Secretary of the Interior to be of substantial value for agriculture, grazing, or timber.

The following committee amendment was read:

On page 2, in lines 12 and 13, after the word "character," insert:

And which were subject to selection at the time the applications were filed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the act of Congress approved February 28, 1891, entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated for other purposes," is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"That as to all surveyed or unsurveyed sections in place granted or reserved to the use of schools and included within national forests it shall be lawful for the State in pursuance of an agreement, either prior or subsequent hereto, between the State and the Secretary of Agriculture to relinquish its claim, right, and title thereto and select in lieu thereof other unappropriated nonmineral lands of approximately equal value designated by the Secretary of Agriculture and lying within the boundaries of any national forest or forests within the State wherein the exchange is to be made; that upon the consummation of the exchange herein authorized and its approval by the Secretary of the Interior the President of the United States is authorized to eliminate from such national forest the lands so selected for and on behalf of the State: Provided, That the lands granted in place to such State or Territory and surrendered under the provisions hereof shall, upon the approval of the indemnity or exchange, revert to and become a portion of the national forest wherein located subject to all the laws, rules, and regulations thereto applicable.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to get some information with reference to this matter. Can the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] tell me what the object is? I believe the gentleman wrote the report on the bill.

Mr. RAKER. I wrote a part of it.

Mr. WINGO. Tell us what the object is.

Mr. RAKER. In answer to the gentleman's question, there are two objects. The first is to adjust the lands where the State has lost them—that is, where there has been a railroad grant, or an Indian reserve, to exchange the land and permit the State to obtain the land it otherwise should have obtained under the original acts of Congress, namely, sections 16 and 36. The other provision of the act, in section 3, applies to exchange of land in place where the national forest or Indian reservations have been created, particularly national forests, where the lands have been surveyed, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, to permit the exchange of that land by the State for other land outside the reserve, so that the land might be returned to the Government and fill out the national forest and the land selected by the States may be approved.

Mr. WINGO. The language of the section is contradictory, it appears to me. I do not understand what it means. In the first part, in lines 11, 12, and 13, it says:

That as to all surveyed or unsurveyed sections in place granted or reserved to the use of schools and included within national forests it shall be lawful for the State in pursuance of an agreement, either prior or subsequent hereto, between the State and the Secretary of Agriculture, to relinquish his claim, right, and title thereto—

And so forth.

Then down in the succeeding clause of the same section, and commencing at line 21, it provides:

That upon the consummation of the exchange herein authorized and its approval by the Secretary of the Interior the President of the United States is authorized to eliminate from such national forests the lands so selected for and on behalf of the State.

It looks to me that the first part of the amendment provides the States may make other selections where the original selections were in national forests, and yet the last part provides for the elimination from the forest when the State makes the selection. It appears to me to be contradictory.

Mr. RAKER. The first provision, as to all surveyed or unsurveyed sections granted or reserved to the use of schools and included within national forests, is the land in sections 16 and 36. There are two distinctions there, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, where the land has been surveyed, and there has been some question whether or not the State could exchange that land in the national forest to the Government, because, having been surveyed, the title, they claim, immediately passed in the State. And this, then, creates that seeming trouble. The department has been holding they had a right to make the exchange. There have been two decisions of the United States district court that they could not make the exchange, and the department made its own ruling, and Judge Van Devanter, now on the Supreme Court bench, when he was in the department, ruled it could be made.

Mr. WINGO. Now, the report is very voluminous. I have not had time to read it. What States does this affect? Does this affect the State of Arkansas in any way at all?

Mr. RAKER. California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona. And all of those States were represented before the committee by their Representatives as well as a good part of them by the attorneys general of the States and some of the governors, and the others by the surveyors general.

Mr. WINGO. It just meets the conditions that have arisen in those States, and does not affect Arkansas?

Mr. RAKER. No; it does not affect Arkansas. The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands sent a notice to the governors and the secretaries of state and the surveyors general in the States affected and had advice from them as well as from the Secretary of the Interior, and they have practically agreed on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if he will listen just a moment. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] called my attention to an oversight in that we possibly left out two small words in the bill on page 3, line 11. It reads, "that as to all." Now, the gentleman from Oregon suggested "any surveyed or unsurveyed land." He said the committee agreed to the amendment "or any."

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] suggested "as to all or any surveyed or unsurveyed" land. He says the committee agreed to that amendment—"or any."

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to it. It means the same thing.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment, on page 3, line 11, between the word "all" and the word "surveyed," to insert the words "or any."

Mr. MANN. I had supposed that "all" would include "any."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 3, line 11, by inserting, after the word "all," the words "or any."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That exchanges of title between the United States and States heretofore made and approved under authority of said act of February 28, 1891, whereby the State relinquished its title to surveyed school lands in forest or other permanent reservations in lieu of lands elsewhere are hereby ratified and confirmed, and all pending and unapproved exchanges of like character, if found otherwise valid, and for lands which are nonmineral in character, and which have not prior to date of approval been withdrawn under the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 847), may be approved by the provisions of said act of February 28, 1891: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the approval of selections included within withdrawals under the provisions of said act of June 25, 1910, subject to conditions, limitations, or reservations authorized or permitted by present or future acts of Congress relating to such withdrawn lands, if the surface of such land is found by the Secretary of the Interior to be of substantial value for agriculture, grazing, or timber: Provided further, That in the future exchanges may be made and approved as provided in section 2 of this act or at the election of the State, vacant unappropriated nonmineral public lands of equal acreage outside the limits of national forests may be selected in lieu of lands surrendered or relinquished under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture are hereby authorized, in their discretion, to exchange lands within the limits of national forests for lands outside of such limits of approximately equal value lost to the State by reason of settlements, entries, reservations, or the mineral character of the lands.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 4, after the word "character," in line 13, insert "and which were subject to selection at the time the applications were filed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 19, by inserting after the word "may" the words "within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, strike out the word "by" and insert the word "under."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after the word "timber," in line 5, insert: "Provided further, That all lands within the boundaries of national forests title to which may be vested in the States under the provisions of this act shall be subject to all rights of way which the Secretary of Agriculture may at any time deem necessary for the administration of the national forests."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 13, after the word "State," insert the words "and with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, after the word "nonmineral," insert the word "surveyed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 5, strike out the word "acreage" and insert the word "value."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 16, page 5, after the word "forests," insert the words "designated by the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 18, after the word "act," insert "but nothing herein shall prevent the consummation of the agreement dated June 16, 1911, between the Secretary of the Interior and the State of California providing for the adjustment of the claim of the United States against the State, because of excess approvals and overcertifications under the grant for common schools, through surrender or conveyance by the State of surveyed school sections within the boundaries of national forests."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, after the word "discretion," in line 3, insert "if they shall find that the public interests will be subserved thereby."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I should have offered an amendment or made a motion to disagree with the House amendment on page 5, line 15, striking out the word "acreage" and inserting the word "value," if we had been considering the bill in any other way than by unanimous consent. I think it scarcely fair to the House, when Members consent to the consideration of legislation in this way, to contest amendments proposed by the committee, the adoption of which is undoubtedly expected as a part of the agreement to allow the bill to be considered by unanimous consent.

But I want to call attention to the fact, and I think I would not be doing my duty if I did not call attention to the fact, that if the bill becomes a law with the change that has been adopted, it will be utterly impossible to adjust in any reasonable length of time, or at any expense that the exchanges will justify, the exchanges that are affected by this amendment. It does not matter greatly, so far as the State which I have the honor to represent is concerned, for we have made most of our exchanges using lands within forest reserves as bases. But one of the most beneficial provisions of the act of February 28, 1891, was a provision whereby we allowed the States to get out of the forest reserves with their holdings and take lands elsewhere. In the main, if the States do that, they must, under the conditions that exist, necessarily accept generally lands of lesser value than those they surrender. It is true they might surrender mountain tops of little value, but they would also surrender timberlands of value, and as a matter of administration it would be utterly impossible to make exchanges, taking the lands within reserves for lands outside on the basis of equal value. There are no lands of equal value to exchange. If the provision remained in the bill, the only way it could be done would be by assuming an average value of all the lands which a State has in a forest reserve which it desires to surrender and an average value of all the lands it would select outside.

By adopting that amendment we have nullified a very beneficent and wise provision of the act which we amend by this legislation. I hope that in another body, or in conference, or somewhere, the gentleman in charge of the bill will carefully consider that feature of the situation, so very important to many of the western States, although no longer very important to my State, in view of the fact that we have made most of our exchanges of that character.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. I am not offering an amendment. I am simply making an observation, and giving my opinion in regard to it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will state to the gentleman from Wyoming that very many of us partially or wholly agree with the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But we have been over this matter very exhaustively, and this is a composite adjustment, the best we can make of it, and we feel that for the benefit of all these States that will be benefited by it we ought to accept this measure.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that, Mr. Speaker, but I did not feel that it would be right to allow this bill to go through the House without any suggestion whatever, but that all interested were entirely favorable to that provision. It is utterly unworkable, and if I may use the word without offense to anyone, it is absolutely silly and nonsensical, and calculated to make that provision of the bill of no effect whatever.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while we are on this bill I want to say one word more. This is a very important piece of legislation. It adjusts the land grants of 12 western States, involving hundreds of thousands of acres of lands, many of them selected years ago, transferred by the States, but conditions have arisen under which the States could not make their title good. It is highly important that the bill should pass, and pass, as the gentleman from Colorado says, in the best form in which we can get it, in view of all the conflicting views on the subject. But I want to register this suggestion here and now: If it were not for the fact that this bill was drawn in the Interior Department, and that in the long hearings the gentlemen from the Interior Department seemed to understand what the bill means—or at least what they understand it to mean—if it were not for that fact that the men who are to administer the bill seem to think they understand what it means, I should certainly not be in favor of having it pass the House. For I believe, and I measure my words when I say it, that I have never seen a piece of legislation dealing with a matter comparatively simple which was so utterly obscured and confused by legislation as this matter of exchanges in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. What might have been written on one page so plainly that a man who knew little of the subject might understand has been dragged through some six pages, so involved, so difficult of understanding, that those who are best acquainted with the subject find it necessary to read the bill again and again, and to study its provisions carefully, comparing one with another, in order to arrive at an intelligent opinion as to what is intended.

I am not blaming the committee, except for taking a bill drawn by the department, when the committee is composed of men any one of whom could himself have drawn a very much better bill. The committee took this bill as the department drafted it, backing and filling and double-crossing as it does, and as everybody knows it does who knows anything about it, and they amended it, until I think the bill does about what everyone wants to have done. I think it does conserve the public interest. I think it does probably deal fairly with the States, although a new set of officials in the department could easily interpret it so as to deprive the States of most of their benefits under it. But hoping that the department will continue to interpret its own bill in its own way, I am glad to have it passed; because, as my friend on the other side says, it is the best we could do under the circumstances.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We do not expect to have a new set of officials to administer it.

Mr. MONDELL. We certainly will have, but the gentlemen who are there are in the main very excellent gentlemen, trying to do their duty; most of them will remain, and as to the others we will keep them there long enough so that they can enlighten their successors as to just what this legislation means. I do not want to leave the impression that the public interest is not conserved in the bill. I think it is. I do not think you could interpret the bill in a way to do injury to the public interest; but it could very easily and readily be construed so as largely to nullify what we have started to accomplish, to wit, the fair adjustment of these selections, made years ago. My State is less interested than some of the States, because our adjustments are further along, and they are simpler in character, and we have never had a question with the department in regard to them, except as questions have been raised in other States. But in other States, where the situation is more complicated, there will be some difficulty, unless the department faithfully adheres to its present opinion in regard to this matter.

Having said this much, I am glad to have the bill pass, hoping that as to the one feature to which I have referred, before we get through with the legislation that particular matter will be remedied; not because it greatly affects my State, for it does not, but because it will unfortunately affect many of the other States. Other amendments are needed but I will not take time to refer to them now.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from Wyoming had an opportunity to appear before the committee on this bill. It was considered by the subcommittee and by the full committee. The attorneys of the Department of the Interior and of the Department of Agriculture, as well as the members of the committee, consisting of Members on that side and this, gave it every consideration and, I believe, understand its provisions.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. RAKER. I say, I believe and, in fact, I know that the members of the committee understood the provisions of the bill and that it does accomplish what the States ought to have. It accomplishes what the Government believes ought to be done to protect the Government, and all concerned are thoroughly and fully protected by this well-drawn, well-provided for, well-adjusted piece of legislation on a subject which has been a source of contention before Congress for so many years.

Mr. MONDELL. If my friend from California will yield, I did not say that the members of the committee did not believe they understood the bill. If it continues to be interpreted as they hope it will be, I think it will work out, in a way; but my friend is getting to be quite a joker when he states that this is a well-drawn bill.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, it is always easy to criticize and complain, particularly when one does not understand a piece of legislation himself.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I will say to my friend—

Mr. RAKER. Of course, on the question of acreage and value, the gentleman and I agree, but the department and many others thought this amendment ought to go in, and we felt in duty bound to present it to the House, and the House ought to pass upon it. If the other body takes a different view of it, then we will have our opportunity.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I always yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is aware of the fact that I did appear before the committee, and after I made an extended statement to the committee in regard to the first bill, a new bill was introduced. This is that new bill; it is a little better than the bill I discussed before the committee, but it still has those unfortunate ambiguities.

Mr. RAKER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that when he made his suggestions to the committee he did not in any way correct or modify what he considers not a proper and well-comprehended piece of legislation by any concrete suggested amendment or amendments.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman say that I made no such suggestions?

Mr. RAKER. I mean to say that the gentleman made no concrete suggestions as to particular amendments.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, on the contrary—

Mr. RAKER. Of course one can talk volumes in just going around Robin Hood's barn, but if you want to get results on a piece of legislation you ought to offer concrete amendments and present your arguments to those proposed amendments.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California will remember that I not only discussed the matter before the committee, but that I offered concrete suggestions, and that a number of those concrete suggestions were embodied in the new bill. I am not claiming any credit for them, because the gentleman himself approved those suggestions, and he would probably have made them if I had not.

Mr. RAKER. Then as a matter of fact the gentleman's first statement that this is all from the department does not comport with the facts, but the bill does have in it those valuable suggestions of the gentleman and other gentlemen. The bill is intended to cover the entire subject, and we believe it does. The question of "acreage" and "value" suggested by the gentleman will no doubt be further considered before it becomes a law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to both gentlemen that they are violating the rules when they talk about what happened in the committee. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

[By unanimous consent, leave to extend his remarks in the Record was granted to Mr. RAKER, to insert a letter from Secretary Lane.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—FRED A. CHURCHILL.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. DYER to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Fred A. Churchill (H. R. 9104, 63d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereupon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. EAGAN for five days, on account of illness in his family.

STANDARD LIME BARREL.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 5425, the lime-barrel bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to defer that for a little while.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Very well; I withdraw the request for the present.

STANDARD CLASSIFICATION FOR COTTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15913) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish uniform standards of classification for cotton; to provide for the application, enforcement, and use of such standards in transactions in interstate and foreign commerce, to prevent deception therein, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15156) granting public lands to the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SERUMS, TOXINS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15914) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to license establishments for and to regulate the preparation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products for use in the treatment of domestic animals, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNCOMPAGHE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 43) in relation to the location, entry, and patenting of lands within the former Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, containing gilsonite or other like substances, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SIOUX TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the two next bills upon the calendar, S. 4371 and H. R. 10774, of similar title, authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the granting of a request that a bill be passed over without prejudice preclude its coming up again to-day?

The SPEAKER. If any Member desires to have such a bill taken up later in the day, he would first have to obtain unanimous consent to return to it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly; but half the House might go away, and if unanimous consent was then asked there might not be people here who would object when it was first called. Are we obliged to stay here and wait to see if a bill is called up again?

The SPEAKER. No. The Chair thinks when there is a general leave to pass over without prejudice that it is a bad practice to go back to it that day. Now, once in a long while some gentleman asks that a bill be passed without prejudice temporarily. That means that the House will go back to it during the day if it gets a chance.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But these requests are made—

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, and the Chair thinks the best practice is where there is general leave granted to pass a bill without prejudice it ought not to be called up again during the day.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But we have all three of these requests—

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, there have been a half a dozen. The Clerk will report the next bill.

IMPORTATION OF VIRUSES, SERUMS, TOXINS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 199) to regulate the importation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, to regulate interstate traffic in said articles, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed without prejudice and remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXPENSES, JOINT ENCAMPMENT, AUGUSTA, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 708) to make immediately available for the use of the State of Georgia in paying expenses incurred by said State in connection with the joint encampment held at Augusta, Ga., July 22 to 31, 1914, certain sums appropriated for arming and equipping the militia of said State.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what became of No. 290? I ask unanimous consent that No. 290 be passed over without prejudice. It is under consideration on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request as to 292.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the reason we are not insisting is that the bill is on regular call for Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. It is under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes a similar request as to No. 292. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS IN ABANDONED MILITARY RESERVATIONS, NEVADA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5466) to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry and desert-land entry, and to amend an act entitled "An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry," approved October 1, 1890.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the agricultural lands embraced within the military reservations in the State of Nevada which have been placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior for disposition be disposed of under the homestead and desert-land laws, and not otherwise.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That this act is intended to make applicable to the desert-land laws only such lands as were included under the act of March 3, 1877, providing for the disposition of public lands under the desert-land laws.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title of the bill by striking out all after the word "entry" where it occurs the second time, in line 2 of the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TOWN SITES, IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15958) to amend an act providing for the withdrawal from public entry of lands needed for town sites in connection with irrigation projects.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the committee what is the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which letter, of date June 16, 1916, was written after the Secretary had had submitted to him the bill with the amendment the committee now proposes?

Mr. RAKER. Well, the letter was written, as I recall it, the letter before the department, but the committee considered the bill and amended it itself.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but the letter of the Secretary of the Interior in the report and purporting to be an indorsement of the bill, gives an indorsement of something different from the proposition contained in the measure now before the House.

Mr. RAKER. No, sir. I will state that the committee amendment to the bill simply clarifies the language, but leaves the bill just exactly as the law now applies to the project down there at Elephant Butte Dam; and it now applies to all, so that hereafter no right can be granted or lease of power on these reclamation projects without the consent of the majority of water users and making it apply to all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says that the amendment simply clarifies the situation. It appears to me it is a considerable clarification when you strike out nine lines of an entire proviso and insert, well, a great many—

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the gentleman's attention—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why was this letter of the Secretary of the Interior presented to the House in this report as an indorsement of a bill that he never saw?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the report of the Secretary of the Interior does not purport to indorse the bill as amended, but as introduced. Bills are not sent to a Cabinet officer, as a general rule, for a supplementary report. The committee first gets information from the Cabinet officer before the bill is considered, but does not call upon him for information as to the effect of every little amendment that is made to a bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the average reader in the House reading this report would get another impression, and that is the impression which I had up to the time the gentleman from California said that the Secretary of the Interior had never seen this bill as amended.

The bill is presented to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval and for his criticism.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. The Secretary of the Interior sees a bill containing certain provisions relating to a very important subject. He unqualifiedly indorses the bill as presented to him. Subsequently that bill is changed in most important particulars, amended by the committee in many places, and yet in a report of the committee presenting that bill the letter of the Secretary of the Interior is incorporated as indorsing the measure. I object to the consideration of this bill at this time.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, would not the gentleman withhold it just for one statement?

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish the gentleman would withhold it. I would like to get information myself.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I withhold it temporarily.

Mr. RAKER. In reply to the gentleman, if the facts were as the gentleman stated, he would be justified.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman admitted they were that way.

Mr. RAKER. Let me explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. It is the same as the law now exists, with the sole exception that it permits the lease to irrigation districts. Now, lines 21 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 to 4 are identical with the law as it now exists. The committee thought that that was a wise provision, as undoubtedly the gentleman does, and we put that provision in full in lines 10, 11, and 12, which reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the legally organized and acting water-users' association, or associations, under any such project, is authorized to lease for a period—

And so forth. That is the law, but under this project it could not be leased without the consent of the water-users' association. The committee believed that that provision was so wise that hereafter under any project there should be no lease by the Secretary of the Interior without the consent of the water-users' association, and we struck out that whole long sentence and put it in an amendment here in lines 11, 12, and 13, to the effect that under no circumstances could the Secretary of the Interior lease any of the power without the consent of the water-users' association.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it may be that the bill as amended is all that it should be, but I was entirely deceived—and, of course, I impute no wrongful motive whatever to the gentleman from California or to any other gentleman on the committee—by the report of the committee. The report says:

The report of the Secretary of the Interior on the bill is as follows.

And the Secretary of the Interior never saw the bill as reported. And, therefore, in the absence of just the information I want, I shall object, but with this request, Mr. Speaker, that the bill go over without prejudice. There will be abundant opportunity to consider this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects to the present consideration of the bill, and asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

OTTAWA INDIAN TRIBE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 138, an act for the relief of the Ottawa Indian Tribe, of Blanchard Fork and Roche de Boeuf.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REGISTRY FOR VESSEL "GOLDEN GATE."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8816) authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the sailing vessel Golden Gate to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the sailing vessel Golden Gate, rebuilt at San Francisco, Cal., from the wreck of the sailing vessel Golden Gate, wrecked near the harbor of Montevideo, Uruguay, and abandoned by her owners as a total wreck, to be registered as a vessel of the United States whenever it shall be shown to the Commission of Navigation that the cost of rebuilding said vessel in the United States amounted to three times the actual cost of said wreck and that the vessel is wholly owned by citizens of the United States.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "is" and insert the word "it."

In line 9 strike out the word "Commission" and insert the word "Commissioner."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INSURANCE FUND FOR UNEMPLOYMENT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the House joint resolution 250, to provide for the appointment of a commissioner to prepare and recommend a plan for the establishment of a national insurance fund for the mitigation of the evil of unemployment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AVIATION IN COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 15736, a bill to provide for aviation in the Coast Guard.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed without prejudice, if it has not been done.

The SPEAKER. The request has already been made, and the bill has been passed over.

ASSESSMENTS FOR OPENING STREETS, ETC., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 15460, a bill to provide for the payment of assessments for the opening of streets, avenues, roads, and alleys in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will not do it.

Mr. MANN. I am going to do it, and I will fight it when it comes up on the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 386, a bill to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War Volunteer Officers' Retired List," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask that a day be fixed, not to interfere with the calendar, when the conference report on this bill could be considered?

Mr. MANN. It would not be in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. No; it would not be in order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, can I be recognized to suspend the rules and pass this bill?

The SPEAKER. Not now. The gentleman stands as the thirty-second applicant to suspend the rules.

HOURS OF SERVICE OF EMPLOYEES ON RAILROADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9216) to amend sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWNING. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] objects. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BROWNING. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have it passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from New Jersey any objection to its being passed over without prejudice?

Mr. BROWNING. I will not object to that.

The SPEAKER. It is passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on this bill, H. R. 9216. I think a number of gentlemen here do not understand what the measure is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on Calendar No. 311. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that that bill was passed without prejudice?

The SPEAKER. It was passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CULLOP. That is as I understand.

OIL AND GAS, SHOSHONE OR WIND RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION, WYO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16396) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease for production of oil and gas ceded lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire why the committee did not increase the minimum amount of royalty that is provided in this bill? Under a similar provision, carried in the general omnibus leasing bill, provision is made for similar cases in litigation in California. As I recall, the minimum was not less than one-eighth. In this bill you provide for not less than one-tenth.

Mr. MONDELL. The provisions of the committee amendment are taken from the general leasing bill, and the provision as to the minimum royalty is the same as the general provision for royalty contained in the general leasing bill. There is perhaps a different provision, as the gentleman suggests, in cases where there has been a development and where there has been some question of contest.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not this bill cover instances where there are contests now pending in the department?

Mr. MONDELL. There are some few cases of that kind, I think, that I know of.

Mr. STAFFORD. But those three or four carry very valuable rights to good oil lands in Wyoming, I believe.

Mr. MONDELL. The thought of the committee was that these people, having some rights there, were at least entitled to the same consideration that the ordinary lessee would have under the general provisions of the leasing law. Of course, the Secretary of the Interior can increase that minimum as much as he likes. It is only a minimum of one-tenth. In other words, they made the minimum the ordinary commercial rate of the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not a similar provision, involving oil wells in southern California, incorporated in the omnibus leasing bill that passed the House in the last Congress? A provision was incorporated there making the minimum one-eighth.

Mr. MONDELL. No. The general provision of the leasing bill, I will say to my friend—

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not speaking about the general leasing provision. In the case referred to the minimum provision was one-eighth.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not sure that the gentleman is right or not; but whether that be true or not, this is, as the gentleman will understand, merely a minimum. The Secretary of the Interior has the authority to increase it as much as he likes. He may consider the situation and the conditions existing in the country and make such a rate as he sees fit. That is the ordinary commercial rate. The committee made the minimum the ordinary commercial rate. I think it quite high enough.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the difference is this: In California it is a well-known and well-defined oil field. In this instance it is a wildcat proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are some superior oil wells in Wyoming, just as rich in value as there are in California, and the Standard Oil Co., through its subsidiaries, as I am informed by the department, is interested in this legislation. I simply want to ascertain why your committee departed from the rule laid down by the Committee on the Public Lands by making it one-tenth, whereas the Public Lands Committee made it one-eighth.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We made it the minimum, and the department has the right to raise it to such amount as it sees proper.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no idea what the consideration was that led the committee to adopt one-tenth, the ordinary commercial rate, as the minimum, except that the committee adopted as section 2 the general provisions with regard to the length of the lease and the minimum royalty, which were the general provisions of the leasing bill.

Now, I will say to my friend that I am quite well acquainted with this particular situation. It is true there is, I think, at least one well on this land where oil has been found. There is no well so far as I know in which any great quantity has been found. We are hopeful that it will develop a fairly good oil field. Nobody expects it to be a bonanza. The ordinary commercial minimum is one-tenth. The committee evidently felt that it was fair to fix that as the minimum, authorizing the Secretary, of course, in his discretion, to go as far above that as he saw fit. He may make it more. He can adjust the royalty to fit the condition, whatever it may be, and I think the action of the committee was entirely proper in adopting the usual minimum.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I wish to say to the gentleman that the Osage Indian oil fields, the richest in the world, were originally let for 10 years at a royalty of 10 per cent. It increased to one-eighth, and it was a question with the committee whether it should remain at 8 per cent or be made greater. The matter was referred to President Roosevelt and left in his discretion, and my recollection is that he put it at one-eighth. Now, when the 10 per cent was given to the Prairie Oil Co. it was an undeveloped field—like this one. They might have had one or two paying wells. This is a wildcat proposition. If there had been a developed field, we would have been right in asking a further amount.

Mr. MONDELL. And I will say further to the gentleman that it is not a field where it is possible to market a gallon of oil until we shall have got development there sufficient to pay to build a pipe line to the railroad. There is no oil marketed, and my understanding is that the well that has been secured on this particular land is a comparatively small one; that is, as compared with bonanza wells. But in any event, as gentlemen will understand, this is a minimum. The Secretary of the Interior has full authority to fix the royalty as he sees fit. This is a small field that we are hoping to develop. We think we ought to develop it. The price of gasoline is constantly mounting. These are good gasoline oils, and while this field probably will not reduce the price of gasoline the country over, whatever effect it has, of course, will be in that direction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Public Lands has given this question of the proper rental and royalty to be paid for the use of our oil lands, or the oil on our public lands, more consideration than any other committee in the House. I do not question that the Committee on Indian Affairs has given very good consideration to this bill, but the Committee on the Public Lands, after months and months of hearing and consideration, decided that, so far as the oil wells in southern California were concerned, which were in litigation, the royalty, in case the litigants wanted to accept that provision, should be not less than one-eighth of the output. I think we should adhere to that, and unless the gentleman is willing to accept an amendment making the minimum one-eighth instead of one-tenth I think I shall feel compelled to object.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman wants his kind of legislation or not legislation at all, and wants to prevent the development of an industry, very well.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not stating that. I am stating that the committee that has given more consideration to this matter than any other committee has fixed one-eighth as the minimum, and I am saying that the committee that has thoroughly considered it should be given the credit of having its determination written into the bills reported from other committees that have not given it as thorough consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman understands that this particular field is to all intents and purposes a new field, entirely undeveloped except as to one well at the lower end of the area—a small producer, as I understand it, of possibly 200 barrels a day. The Secretary of the Interior under the proposed legislation can make the royalty higher if he wants to do so. He certainly will make inquiries as to how much these Indians ought to have. The committee says it shall be not less than 10 per cent. Now, under these circumstances why should the gentleman insist on a larger minimum when the matter is left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire of the gentleman—because he has first-hand knowledge, and my information was obtained only incidentally some years ago by a casual visit to the department—does this bill cover those claims pending in the Interior Department as to some rich oil fields in the State of Wyoming, which claims are supposed to be controlled by subsidiaries of the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not quite sure just what claims the gentleman has in mind, but I suppose he has in mind what is known as the Midwest field.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is not only one claim, but there are two or three.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; the Midwest—the Salt Creek field.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am informed that there are two or three subsidiary companies.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think they are subsidiary. There are half a dozen independent properties there. I do not know whether the Standard Oil Co. is interested in them. It may or may not be. I know that the principal operator there is entirely independent. That field is 150 miles from this field, I will say to my friend. This is in a distant part of the State. These lands are about 35 miles from the railroad. Parties have been trying to get oil in that locality. One well was secured, possibly more, on a piece of private land adjacent to these lands. I think one well has been drilled on some of these lands that are claimed. That well is not, I understand, a large producer. And I will say to my friend that there is nothing to indicate that the field is going to be a bonanza field, though we hope it will be a good one; nor is it any part of the fields that were affected by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Midwest case.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many claims are pending on the land covered by this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I really do not know how many filings have been made—possibly half a dozen or more. The parties have not pressed their claims, however, because—

Mr. STAFFORD. How many claims are in litigation in the department?

Mr. MONDELL. So far as I know, there is only one party who has been trying to get the department to settle the question whether these are Indian lands, subject to lease under the Indian law, or whether they are public lands, subject to disposition under the law under which the cession was made. These people have been trying to get the department to settle that question one way or the other. The department has not been disposed to do it. These people asked the department to bring suit against them for the purpose of determining whether the law authorized them to enter these lands or not. The department at one time was disposed to do that, but finally concluded not to do it; and then the department proposed a leasing bill as a way out, and the committee added these provisions in section 2, which are the provisions of the general leasing bill. Now, my own idea is that a royalty of 10 per cent would probably be a very excellent royalty under those conditions, from the standpoint of the Indians and of all concerned. That is, I think it would be quite enough, but the Secretary can make the royalty whatever he desires to make it. This is, in any case, but a minimum. The Indians can not receive less than 10 per cent. Under the legislation under which this land was ceded the Indians would get only $2.50 an acre for these lands under the placer act. They now get anywhere from 10 per cent up on any development that may be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that this bill covered some part of Wyoming that was regarded by the department as a bonanza field.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought, if that were the case, the same rule should be applied as that which the House adopted as its policy in the omnibus leasing bill, so far as the California litigated oil claims were concerned. Having the statement of the chairman of the committee [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] and of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who are acquainted with the conditions, and whose statement is that this is not regarded as a bonanza field, and that there is more or less risk involved in the venture, I will not press the question of the amendment, as I first suggested, in view of the information received, and therefore I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 16396) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease for production of oil and gas ceded lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the identical Senate bill (S. 6308) and to consider that bill in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CARLIN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to lease, for the production of oil and gas therefrom, lands within the ceded portion of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming, under such terms and conditions as shall be by him prescribed; and the proceeds or royalties arising from any such leases shall be first applied to the extinguishment of any indebtedness of the Shoshone Indian Tribe to the United States and thereafter shall be applied to the use and benefit of said tribe in the same manner as though secured from the sale of said lands as provided by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians residing on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect": Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to abridge or enlarge any asserted or initiated rights or claims under any law of the United States.

Sec. 2. That the leases granted under this act shall be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall not be less than one-tenth in amount or value of the production and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum during the continuance of the lease. The rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years each upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of expiration of any such period; said leases shall be irrevocable except for the breach of the terms and conditions of the same and may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States District Court for the District of Wyoming whenever the lessee fails to comply with their terms and conditions.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONDELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar House bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MUNICIPALLY OWNED INTERSTATE RAILWAYS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 455) to define the rights and privileges of the trustees of municipally owned interstate railways, and construing the act to regulate commerce with reference thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the gentleman makes that motion with the idea of objecting to the bill if it does not go over?

Mr. MANN. I do not think I care to answer that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

SALE OF MISBRANDED ARTICLES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10496) to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation in interstate commerce of misbranded articles, to regulate the traffic therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request with respect to that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXPORTATION OF GIN IN BOND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16417) to provide for the exportation of gin in bond in other than original packages.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to obtain information from the author of the bill as to whether this provision would exempt gin for export from payment of all excise duties?

Mr. ALLEN. It does not affect the existing law as to the export of gin. It only permits gin to be bottled in bond immediately after it goes into bond. It takes away the time limit. As the report sets out, the law relating to spirits being retained in bond, particularly spirits that have gone into whisky and things of that kind, recognizes the fact that it improves with age. Gin is a neutral spirit, and there is no improvement in it by age, and there is no necessity for holding it that length of time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That distilled spirits known commercially as gin of not less than 80 per cent proof may at any time within eight years after entry in bond at any distillery be bottled in bond at such distillery for export without the payment of tax, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECLAMATION PROJECT AT YUMA, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14825) to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BALTIMORE & WASHINGTON TRANSIT CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13840) to amend an act approved May 20, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia,' approved June 8, 1896."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know how familiar my distinguished friend from Kentucky, the chairman of the committee, may be with this measure, but I see the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] also is here. The committee has reported House bill 13840 and also Senate bill 5976 upon the same subject, supposed to be almost identical bills, though differing a little in form, but the committee does not seem to agree with itself as to the merits of all the propositions in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] brought this matter before the committee, and I remember quite well when this particular bill was there, but I do not remember the consideration of the Senate bill to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill was reported by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOUD], though perhaps he is not aware of it.

Mr. LLOYD. The two bills are identical, except that the House committee offered an amendment to the House bill. What is sought to be done—

Mr. MANN. I know what is sought to be done, but the two bills are not identical as reported from the committee.

Mr. LLOYD. They are supposed to be identical. There is just a difference in the sections.

Mr. MANN. In the first bill, the House bill, the committee struck out lines 23, 24, and 25, on page 3, at the end of the bill and inserted an amendment. I do not know that it is important.

Mr. LLOYD. It is very important.

Mr. MANN. But in the Senate bill they did not do that. I suggest, however, that if either bill is to be considered the gentleman ask to consider the Senate bill. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rose also to make a reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The report is rather brief and gives no information whatsoever.

Mr. MANN. The report on the Senate bill is fairly full.

Mr. LLOYD. It is reasonably full.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read the report upon the House bill and did not have the Senate bill before me. I did not get the idea as to the purpose of the bill. Will the gentleman kindly explain the real purpose of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is to permit the railroad company to enter the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I can explain the purpose of the bill in a very few words. I do not know just what the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co. is, but I suppose it is that road that runs to Baltimore and Annapolis, and probably it is already built in the city, but I do not know about that. Under existing law when they build they are required to have an underground connection. They can not make a ground circuit from the car track to the power house. This is what the District Public Utilities Commission say in regard to it:

The purpose of this was to guard against the destructive effects of electrolysis caused by stray current in the earth from a grounded circuit. Such destructive effects exist only when there are underground metal structures to be destroyed.

There is no necessity for a nongrounded return on the line of the Washington & Maryland Railway Co. (successor to the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland) at the present time, due to the fact that the line runs through an undeveloped section of the District of Columbia. The necessity will exist, however, when the adjoining territory is built up.

They go on to say that the Public Utilities Commission under this bill and under the law creating the Public Utilities Commission will have authority at any time to require the company to make a direct circuit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did not the gentleman state the Senate bill was not identical with the House bill?

Mr. MANN. I said as reported to the House. The House reports an amendment.

Mr. LLOYD. The original House bill and the original Senate bill are the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire what is the reason the committee struck out the provisions which relate to the railroad company paving between the rails and 2 feet on either side?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not only strikes out that part but substitutes other matter for it. Under the bill the transit company is only required to take care of the streets in such manner as the commissioners will determine upon. The amendment strikes that provision out and requires that existing law requiring that the street railway companies keep up the streets be complied with.

Mr. MANN. The amendment to the bill, I will say in the main, in other respects changes the law by inserting the words "Public Utilities Commission" in place of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. That is because under the law which we passed, since this bill was originally passed, created the Public Utilities Commission and they have power over all of these things, I take it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois as suggesting that the Public Utilities Commission is given any authority or option relative to the construction of streets?

Mr. MANN. No. I say under the law creating the Public Utilities Commission they have this power.

Mr. STAFFORD. Am I to understand that this railroad company, by the bill in the form that the gentleman seeks to have adopted, would relieve the railroad company of the obligation of repairing the streets between the rails and on either side to the extent of 2 feet?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is intended not to permit them to escape the construction and repair of the streets used by them.

Mr. LLOYD. The Public Utilities Commission were not created at the time the original act was passed. Now, the Public Utilities Commission would have control of any part of the railroad that might be constructed within the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. It will rest entirely with the Public Utilities Commission whether they would exact that condition or not?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whereas under the existing law they are obliged to repair the street?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think I am in favor of the exemption of this railroad company from paving between the streets and leaving it to the option and discretion of the commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we are getting information. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will listen, I will read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines 13, 19, and 21 and substitute the following: "The said transit company shall comply with the laws and regulations relating to the paving and repairing of streets in the District of Columbia."

That is the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is no such amendment in the Senate bill, which requires paving between the rails and 2 feet on either side.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the bill we are asking to be considered—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would be in favor, if the Senate bill be taken up, of amending the Senate bill to that effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would not. I would like to have incorporated that very provision—that they should be required to pave the streets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have just read the amendment to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It might come in on streets not paved, and in that case they ought not to be required to pave.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Evidently the gentleman did not follow the reading of the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I followed the gentleman very closely, and I say that in all deference to the gentleman—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Let me read it again:

The said transit company shall comply with the laws and regulations relating to the paving and repairing of streets in the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say in reply that I understood the gentleman to state that the Public Utilities Commission has the discretion to impose that condition on them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. I got the notion from some gentleman.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman got it from me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If this committee amendment were adopted that would meet all the objections set up by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is a little mistaken in reference to this situation. If the Senate bill is agreed to there should be required that the law should be carried out or that the roadway should be kept up.

That provision is cut out of the House bill, but it remains in the Senate bill just as you want it. It provides:

The same to be paved between the rails and 2 feet outside thereof with such material and in such manner as shall be approved by the said commissioners, and kept in repair by the said railway company.

Now, if the Senate bill is agreed to, that provision will be in the law. If the Senate bill is not agreed to, then the House amendment, proposed by the House committee, might be agreed to, which would change this law; but the original House provision, without any amendment—the bill as it is presented to the committee—was exactly the same as the Senate bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose of the House committee in eliminating that provision of the law and substituting the phraseology as reported?

Mr. LLOYD. I was not present just at the moment this was considered in the committee, and I do not know. This is Mr. CROSSER's bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was made in deference to Mr. CROSSER's views, and I have the amendment in his handwriting. But I see no substantial difference in the Senate bill and the House bill as amended.

Mr. LLOYD. I understand from Mr. CROSSER that he wants this Senate bill to be passed. It is the CROSSER amendment in the House bill that we adopted. Now, Mr. CROSSER himself, in order to secure this legislation, is perfectly willing to accept the Senate bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The request is that the Senate bill (S. 5976) be taken from the Speaker's table and be considered in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act approved May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896," be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That the said transit company shall be empowered to construct, maintain, equip, and operate a single or double track street railway over said line, with all necessary buildings, switches, machinery, appliances, appurtenances, and other devices necessary to operate the same by electricity, compressed air, storage battery, or other motive power, to be approved by the Public Utilities Commission of said District."

Sec. 2. That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia," approved June 8, 1896, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That said railway shall be constructed of good material, with rails of approved pattern, and in a neat and substantial manner, subject to the supervision and approval of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia; the standard gauge to be used, and the surfaces of the tracks to conform to the grades of the streets established by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and where the tracks lie within the streets of the District of Columbia the same to be paved between the rails and 2 feet outside thereof with such material and in such manner as shall be approved by the said commissioners, and kept in repair by the said railway company.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out in line 8, page 2, the quotation marks; and strike out in line 9 the language "Sec. 2" and insert on page 3, at the end of line 2, quotation marks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. MANN: Page 2, line 8, after the word "District," strike out the quotation marks; page 2, line 9, strike out the words "Sec. 2"; page 2, line 21, after the word "Columbia," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert "the said transit company shall comply with the laws and regulations relating to the paving and repairing of streets in the District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. I offer this amendment because all of this is a part of section 2 of the act it is proposed to amend. The Senate segregated it. The language they put in is part of section 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments?

The question was taken and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the bill has to go back to the Senate again, I offer the House amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 18, 19, 20, and 21, and substitute the following: "The said transit company shall comply with the laws and regulations relating to the paving and repairing of streets in the District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not want to strike out all that he suggested. The House amendment, if carried into the Senate bill, would strike out after the word "Columbia," in line 21, on page 2, down to the end of the section, and insert the language found at the top of page 3 of the House bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Has the gentleman a copy of the House bill?

Mr. MANN. I have them both.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 2 of the Senate bill, after the word "Columbia" in line 21, strike out all of the language down to and including the word "company," line 2, page 3, and insert:

"The said transit company shall comply with the laws and regulations relating to the paving and repairing of streets in the District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. With quotation marks following.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Columbia" insert quotation marks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title by striking out the quotation marks after the word "Columbia" in the second line from the bottom of the title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title by striking out the quotation marks after the word "Columbia" in the second line from the bottom of the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House bill (H. R. 13840) do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPRESS COMPANIES AND PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 12712, to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to its policy in exempting from the Public Utilities Commission, which has the time to give consideration to public utilities in the District, certain of these public-service corporations, as, for instance, the bill under consideration, relieving the express companies from making report to the Public Utilities Commission, and leaving them in the same category as the other express companies which are obliged to make report to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The express companies have no intrastate or intraterritorial business in the District of Columbia. They are strictly under the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is one reason, and then another reason is that the Interstate Commerce Commission, having control of the express companies, requires the companies' statements to be issued at certain times in the year. The Public Utilities Commission for the District of Columbia requires these statements to be made at another time in the year. If the express companies could furnish their reports to both commissions at the same time, then everything that is necessary would have been done. But in this way they have to furnish two reports at different times in the year, and it is unnecessary expense to them; and in addition to that, as I have said, they have no intrastate or intraterritorial business.

Mr. STAFFORD. What character of express companies under the Public Utilities Commission law are now obliged to make report to the Public Utilities Commission?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Every express company that has an office in the District of Columbia has to make that report under the present law, and there is no reason in the world why it should be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. The thought was in my mind that these express companies, operating upon some of these suburban railroads, could have their rates more equitably and expeditiously passed upon by the local utilities commission, a local body, than by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Interstate Commerce Commission and the Utilities Commission for the District of Columbia both recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am aware of that from the reading of the report, but that does not always necessarily carry conviction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8, paragraph 1, of an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia (37 Stat. L., p. 975), be amended by adding to the names of the companies excluded from the operation of said section, after the words "steam railroads," in the third subdivision of the last paragraph on page 975, the following: "express companies subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-UTILITIES LAW OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7591) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 14 of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"PAR. 14. That the accounts shall be closed annually on the 31st day of December and a balance sheet of that date promptly taken therefrom. On or before the 1st day of April following, such balance sheet, together with such other information as the commission shall prescribe, verified by an owner or officer of the public utility, shall be filed with the commission and a copy thereof transmitted to Congress."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC AUCTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14824) to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one inquiry to begin with. Under this bill no one can sell at public auction any merchandise or stock of merchandise without obtaining a license or permit from the District Commissioners. Suppose the sheriff or the marshal wants to make a sale. Suppose the court orders a sale made. Would the court have to obtain a license from the Commissioners?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I should certainly say not.

Mr. MANN. I should certainly say that under this bill they would.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The order of court would have way.

Mr. MANN. The order of court is powerful, but it is not as powerful as an act of Congress. We have plenary jurisdiction in the District of Columbia, and if we say they can not make a sale without obtaining a permit I am inclined to think they can not without violating the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That would be a court sale. This says "No person, firm, or corporation."

Mr. MANN. It is an officer of the court who makes the sale. It is a person.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; he only makes it for the court, not in his individual capacity at all.

Mr. MANN. Then here is a receiver appointed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The receiver, too, acts for the court.

Mr. MANN. I know he acts for the court, but we have discovered through long practice that you have to be careful. We take the trouble always in the interstate-commerce acts to put in the words "or receiver," and all those things.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I agree with the gentleman that the sheriff or receiver ought not to pay this license. I do not believe that he does, but I am willing to make it clear that he should not.

Mr. MANN. I am calling attention to it. I have not any amendment to offer, and I do not propose to object, I will say to the gentleman; but I think if this bill passes in this shape here somebody ought to take it up and call attention to a matter of that sort in the Senate. We have absolute power. We can regulate the practice of the courts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The courts can overrule it.

Mr. MANN. They can not overrule it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They do frequently.

Mr. MANN. The courts can declare a law unconstitutional. That is true. This would not be unconstitutional.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think we should interfere with a court sale, but if the gentleman will suggest an amendment to relieve his view of it I would be glad indeed if he would submit it.

Mr. MANN. I have not an amendment prepared.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would the words "voluntary sale" meet the gentleman's views, or "court sale excepted," or something like that? Or "excepting sales made under levy by the marshal, under order of the court"?

Mr. MANN. I do not like to undertake myself to put the language of a legal amendment in shape on the spur of the moment on the floor of the House. If some other gentleman picks out the right language it might occur to me whether it was good, bad, or indifferent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask for consideration of the bill. I think we will have no trouble in properly amending it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, or corporation, either for himself or itself, or for another, or for any firm or corporation to sell or offer to sell at public auction any stock or stocks of merchandise, in whole or in part, without first obtaining from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia a written or printed permit so to do; and the said Board of Commissioners shall not issue a permit for any such sale or sales until they are satisfied that neither fraud nor deception of any kind is contemplated or will be practiced, and that neither the sale, the reasons therefor, nor the goods to be sold have not already been or will not thereafter be fraudulently or falsely advertised or in any wise whatsoever misrepresented.

SEC. 2. That every such permit shall be issued for a definite period of time not exceeding 12 months from its date of issue, and the date and hour of its expiration shall be stated in the permit, and before such permit shall be issued the applicant therefor shall pay to the District of Columbia, through its collector of taxes, such fee as the said Board of Commissioners may deem sufficient to reimburse the District of Columbia for the work and expense of issuing the permit and gathering information concerning the applicant and his goods as the said board may deem prudent and best for the protection of the public, but which fee shall not exceed the sum of $50. The application for the said permit shall be by verified petition, stating the name of the applicant, residence, street, and number of the proposed place of selling, and shall set forth in detail the goods to be sold and what statements or representations are to be made or advertised as to the same, and the length of time for which the permit is desired; and, if previously engaged in a like or similar business, to designate all the places where the same was conducted, and shall furnish to said commissioners such further evidence as shall be deemed necessary to establish the truth of the statements made in the said petition.

SEC. 3. That no permit as herein provided for shall be required for the sale of any wagon, carriage, automobile, mechanics' tools, used farming implements, live stock, including game, poultry (dressed or undressed), vegetables, fruits, melons, berries, flowers, or for the sale of used household furniture and effects when being sold at the residence of the housekeeper selling them.

SEC. 4. That the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby vested with authority to temporarily suspend the operation of the license herein provided for whenever they may believe that this act or any part thereof, or regulations made in pursuance thereof, are about to be or are being violated, and they shall thereupon forthwith institute the appropriate proceeding in the police court in accordance with this act, and in the event that the said violation results in a conviction, then and in that event the license shall be and become null and void, but in the event that the said proceeding shall terminate in favor of the defendant, then and in that event the suspension of said license shall be at an end, and the license shall thereupon be restored and be in full force and effect.

SEC. 5. That no person as herein provided for shall sell at public auction, from the 1st day of April until the 30th day of September, both inclusive, between the hours of 7 o'clock in the evening and 8 o'clock the following morning, nor from the 1st day of October until the 30th day of March, both inclusive, between the hours of 6 o'clock in the evening and 8 o'clock in the morning, any jewelry, diamond, or other precious stone, watch, gold and silver ware, gold and silver plated ware, statuary, porcelain, bric-a-brac, or articles of vertu.

SEC. 6. That any person selling or offering for sale any property under the provisions of this act shall, in describing the same, be truthful with respect to the character, quality, kind, and description of the same and which, for the purpose hereof, shall be considered as warranties, and any breach of the same shall be punishable by prosecution in the police court, as hereinbefore set forth.

SEC. 7. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia upon information by the corporation counsel or one of his assistants. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $200 or imprisonment of not more than 60 days or both, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 8. That nothing herein shall be construed to excuse or release any person, firm, or corporation, or property from the payment of any occupational or property tax, or any other tax imposed or levied by law. Neither shall anything herein be construed to obviate the application of any fraudulent or false advertisement statute of the District of Columbia to any person who may violate the same; nor shall anything herein be construed to prevent any prosecution for fraud, deceit, or larceny by trick; nor to in any way estop or hinder any remedy at law or in equity, or the right to cancel or estop any unconscionable bargain or fraudulent transaction.

Sec. 9. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in line 3, page 1, after the word "hereafter," I move to amend as follows: Insert a comma and the words "excepting sales made under authority of law."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 1, line 3, after the word "hereafter," insert a comma and the following words: "excepting sales made under authority of law," so that the line as amended will read: "That hereafter, excepting sales made under authority of law, it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, or corporation," and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, will this do away with these auction houses?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. GALLAGHER. They are not prohibited in this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; they are. They are not prohibited in so many words, but you can not prohibit a sale except by general description.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I did not know but what you could stop them from operating these mock auction houses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If this bill passes, there is no sort of doubt that it will have that effect.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Why not include these fake fortune tellers that are strung along the Avenue?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will introduce a bill of that kind, the Committee on the District of Columbia will be very glad to consider it.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Can not this bill be amended?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It relates to an entirely different subject. We are dealing now with auctions and not with fortune tellers.

Mr. GALLAGHER. It seems to me it is just as important to stop the fortune tellers. Pennsylvania Avenue is lined with a lot of fake fortune tellers with signs out. I do not think that is a very good thing—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I did not have time to read the bill. I did not know but we might be able to amend it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; this bill does not deal with fortune tellers at all, but just with the fake auctions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

UNCLAIMED BANK DEPOSITS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16070) to dispose of unclaimed bank deposits in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a great many bills are being passed over without prejudice. That keeps them ahead of other bills that ought to be considered.

Mr. MANN. The reason we are doing it is to hasten along and get an opportunity to consider those bills.

Mr. CARLIN. Why not pass it over without saying "without prejudice"? Then when it comes back on the calendar next time it will take a different place.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, no; that would take it off the calendar entirely.

Mr. MANN. I think this expedites the reaching of bills further down on the calendar. Very few of these bills will be objected to without some one asking that the objection be reserved, and then discussing the bill for a while. In asking to have so many of them passed over to-day, it gives the opportunity to consider the bills further down.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman does not seem to understand me. I have no objection to bills being passed over, but why pass them over without prejudice, which retains their present place on the calendar?

Mr. MANN. There is no way of passing a bill over except without prejudice, or objecting to it, which takes it off the calendar.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not desire to object to it, and I do not desire to take it off the calendar.

Mr. MANN. And if it is objected to twice, it never can go on the calendar again.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing the bill without prejudice?

There was no objection.

WHITMAN NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16532) authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any land within the following-described areas found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or for the protection of stream flow may be included within and made part of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, by proclamation of the President, said lands to be thereafter subject to all laws affecting national forests: Township 11 south, range 34 east; townships 11 and 12 south, range 35 east; township 10 south, range 35½ east; townships 10 and 11 south, range 36 east, Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands in private ownership within established boundaries of the said Whitman National Forest which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, are chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, and in lieu thereof may give in exchange such Government timber as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be of approximately equal value; and any reconveyed lands shall, upon acceptance, become subject to all laws affecting national forests.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "timber," insert the words "in or near the Whitman National Forest."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOYAL CREEK INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9326) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1903.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks to pass the bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPUBLIC COAL CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the coal deposits in and under certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAYS. I object.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman be willing to have it passed over without prejudice?

Mr. MAYS. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

FLANDREAU BAND OF SIOUX INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13165) authorizing the Flandreau Band of Sioux Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARID LANDS IN NEVADA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2519) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] that I think this bill should be safeguarded by certain amendments. The object sought is wise and meritorious, but I am sure the gentleman from Nevada does not want to afford opportunity for speculation, or to afford opportunity to withdraw enormous areas of land without making any real attempt at finding water. I think the bill should be amended on page 2, in line 10, after the word "developed," by inserting the words "and rendered available for such use."

That would require parties not only to find water and develop it, but to render it available for use in irrigation. I do not think that anyone should be given 640 acres of land unless they do actually render available for use enough water to irrigate 20 acres.

I want to make a further suggestion. In section 4, lines 19 and 20, the provision is that the remaining area within the limits of the land embraced within any such permit shall thereafter be reserved from other disposition. One section out of four is finally patented, if the conditions are met, and the provision is that thereafter the remaining three sections shall be reserved from other disposition except that the Secretary of the Interior may sell it. We are about to pass an enlarged homestead law. It does not seem to me wise to give people an opportunity to withdraw vast areas in Nevada in this way and withhold them from homestead entry. I would strike out the words "shall thereafter be reserved from other disposition," leaving the language "that the remaining areas within the limits of the lands embraced in any such permit may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior by sale," and so forth. It would still leave the Secretary with authority to dispose of the three remaining sections after the patenting of one, but it would not reserve those three sections from all other disposition. I do not think it is wise to do that.

I want to suggest, in addition to that, that at the end of section 3 there should be this proviso—and I should like to have the attention of the gentlemen who are familiar with these things:

Provided, That the lands embraced in any permit herein provided for shall at all times be subject to settlement or appropriate entry under the public-land laws, but such settlement or entry rights shall be held and perfected subject to the rights of the holder of such permit.

Let me for a moment illustrate the necessity for that kind of an amendment. In the Fifty-fifth Congress the House passed a seemingly very innocuous reservoir bill to encourage the development of water in the semiarid regions by the building of reservoirs, and it was very much along the lines of this bill. It was well intended, but, just as this bill does, it made it possible to withdraw from entry every acre of vacant land in a State. Under that law the Interior Department was compelled, when I was assistant commissioner, to make regulations that were in fact contrary to law in order to prevent whole regions from being withdrawn from homestead settlement and entry during the period that those withdrawal rights were held. There was one county in Kansas in which one man withdrew every acre of unentered land in that county, and but for those regulations which were, as I have said, contrary to law there would have been no settlement over vast areas. Under this bill, which I think is well intended, it would be possible to withdraw and withhold from any and every form of entry known to the land laws every acre of unentered land in Nevada for two years, and without cost. No one, I think, wants to have that done; at the end of two years they would slap on some more of these permits, and so on. We entirely remove the danger of permits not in good faith if we provide that the issuance of these permits will not prevent the assertion of a settlement right under the homestead law, or the making of a homestead entry, or other proper entries. The man making that settlement, or asserting that right, would know that he did it subject to any rights which the permittee may secure; therefore, the permittee proceeding in good faith would probably not be interfered with by a homestead settlement, but if it were made it would not defeat his right; but where it was notorious that these permits were sought simply for the purpose of withholding large areas from settlement the homestead settler would come in and he would secure his rights.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. We have no objection whatever to those suggestions or to any amendments which will properly safeguard the people's interests.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize the gentleman's attitude, and that he does not desire to have the condition arise, which it seems to me might arise under the bill in the form in which it passed the Senate. He desires, in good faith, to encourage this development. He is trying to secure legislation; naturally he is not to be expected to criticize the Senate bill. We should secure legislation along these lines, but at the same time we should prevent the granting of exclusive permits that might result in the withdrawal from settlement of lands in very large areas for a considerable length of time for speculative purposes. The Senate bill is very broad. Under it I do not note any limit to the number of these four-section water prospecting permits one person could secure. They would cost nothing, not even a filing fee. They could cover the entire State without turning a hand or spending a penny. They hold for two years.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] becomes too deeply committed, let us find out what the proposition is. As I understand, this bill proposes to give a man who wishes to make search for water the right to make that search on four sections, and if he finds the water so that it is available for irrigating purposes, he is entitled to have one section of the land, and the other three sections are to be reserved from homestead entry and put up for sale in 40-acre lots.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Not less than 40 acres.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] proposes to give away the other three sections, and not to put it up for auction sale at all, which is a very different proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. No; I leave it in the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's amendment as he read it, and as I understood it, provided that the other three sections should be open to homestead entry.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course they would be open to homestead entry, but the Secretary may nevertheless sell them.

Mr. MANN. Of course you may sell them, but you can also give them away, and, of course, that means that you would give them away. That is an entire departure from the theory of the bill. I do not undertake to say which is correct. This bill was in the last Congress, and I objected to its consideration at one time because I thought perhaps it was giving too much. It now comes in with the same provision in this Congress, and on the floor it is proposed to change it practically to give away at any place four sections of land where you can find water. Of course that means that a development company gets a permit to examine four sections of land. They get one section, and they locate some of their men on the other three sections. I shall have to ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice for further consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the gentleman from Illinois to construe what I have said as an indication of any desire on my part to give away, although we do give away and will give away, these lands. To make this bill more liberal I think some limit should be placed, for unless some such provision is made every acre of land in the State of Nevada, every acre that is not now filed on, could be covered by a permit and thus be withdrawn for two years, so that not an entry could be made in that entire State under any land law in that time, and at the end of that period it would be entirely possible to again renew the permits. In the meantime the water development might be much or little; nobody knows.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman is correct the bill ought not to pass, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INDEFINITE LEAVES OF ABSENCE, SUPERANNUATED EMPLOYEES, POSTAL SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6915) granting indefinite leaves of absence to superannuated employees of the Postal Service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

APPROPRIATION FOR EXPENSES INCURRED UNDER TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 649) making appropriations for expenses incurred under the treaty of Washington.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CERTAIN CLAIMS OF THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3654) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and adjust certain claims of the State of North Carolina.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15575) to amend the act of March 22, 1906, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know I desire to have it done, but I notice in reference to this matter the department says that it is necessary to have five sections of land and that the committee did not make that change in the bill, it having been introduced for four sections. Did the committee consider that matter?

Mr. DILL. The committee did and thought four sections would be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the act of March 22, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 80), entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby amended to read as provided herein, and that one section, No. 13, as hereinafter provided, be, and the same hereby is, added to the said act.

"Sec. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve from allotment or other disposition and set apart such lands of the Colville Reservation as in his judgment may be necessary, said lands not to exceed four sections in all, for school, agency, sawmill, gristmill, and other mill or administrative purposes, said lands to remain reserved so long as needed for such respective purposes. And the Secretary of the Interior may also set apart for temporary use and occupancy such lands as he may deem necessary for mission purposes among said Indians, not to exceed in any instance, except as hereinafter specifically provided, 40 acres of land lying at any one point, said lands to remain so reserved as long as actually required and used exclusively for mission purposes, subject, however, to such regulations as the said Secretary deem proper to make: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to issue a patent in fee simple to the properly designated missionary board or corporation which now maintains the St. Mary's School and Mission for Colville Indians, for the 60 acres of land in township 33 north, range 27 east of the Willamette meridian, which is the site of said St. Mary's School and Mission plant; and in addition thereto the said board or corporation shall have the privilege of using for training purposes and support of said school and mission the lands already formally set apart for such purposes, together with those several tracts selected and used for school or mission purposes which the mission authorities, prior to 1914, described and requested to have set apart, such privilege to continue so long as the lands are required and used exclusively for Indian mission and school purposes. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to reserve as an Indian cemetery any lands within said reservation, not to exceed 50 acres in all, and not otherwise formally or officially appropriated, which have heretofore been or are now being used by the Indians for burial purposes."

"Sec. 13. That the lands allotted, those retained or reserved, and the surplus lands sold, set aside for town-site purposes, or granted to the State or otherwise disposed of, shall be subject to the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress."

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "point," insert the words "not included in any town site heretofore provided for."
Page 2, line 19, after the word "Secretary," insert the word "may."
Page 3, line 11, after the word "cemetery," insert the words "or cemeteries."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENDING TIME OF PAYMENT OF MONEY DUE THE GOVERNMENT BY THE CITY OF AUGUSTA, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16630) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to extend the time of payment of the amount due the Government by the city of Augusta, Ga.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what reason can the gentleman from Georgia offer for reporting this bill?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, the present situation with respect to the Government's contract with the city of Augusta, Ga., for the city's purchase of the old post-office property there appears to be as follows:

March 4, 1911, the Government owned a Federal building and a vacant site. The act of Congress approved same date authorized the exchange of the new site for the city's vacant lot, the United States paying the difference in value, provided city purchased old post-office property. Old post office appraised at $50,000. The city's lot valued at $16,000 more than the Government's vacant site.

The department contracted with the city to exchange lots and to convey the old post-office property to city upon completion of the new Federal building; city to pay net balance of $34,000 upon delivery of deed to old post-office property.

The deeds for vacant lots have been exchanged. The new post office has been completed and the city notified to forward draft. The contract requires that upon receipt of draft the department shall deliver last-mentioned deed and if the city defaults it loses all claim to its equity in the old post-office property.

The reason why the city of Augusta asked for this extension is in view of the recent catastrophe in Augusta during, I think, the month of March, wherein a portion of the city was practically destroyed by fire, causing damage of over $7,000,000.

The Treasury Department has no objection to the extension of time, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not interpose objection to the present consideration of this bill. Of course, as the bill is upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar it can not be considered at this time if the gentleman interposes an objection, and I earnestly request that he withhold the same and permit the bill to be considered by the House.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have frequently extended the time for payment where we sold land to settlers, especially Indian lands. We have done so a great many times, though I do not recall any instance where we did not require that the interest on the extension should be paid in advance.

Mr. VINSON. If the gentleman will yield—

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Georgia think that if this had been the reverse, and the United States by making this exchange of land had agreed to pay the city of Augusta $34,000, that the city of Augusta would either postpone the time for payment, or, if we should take the extension of time, the city of Augusta would let us off without interest?

Mr. VINSON. Replying to the gentleman's question, I am confident that if the city of Augusta had a claim against the United States and a great calamity had fallen on the country, the city of Augusta would promptly, if requested to do so by the National Government, give it ample time to meet its indebtedness.

Mr. MANN. Why should we do more for the city of Augusta than we do for some poor pioneer down in Oklahoma, out in Montana, Wyoming, or Washington? We have quite a number of bills pending now, in one House or the other—we passed some at this session—extending the time for payment, but always requiring the payment of interest.

Mr. VINSON. Well, I do not think the gentleman will find any record whereby the Government exacted interest in cases of a calamity.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. These are all cases of calamity.

Mr. VINSON. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Why, every one of these cases where we extend the payment the settlers come in here by their Representatives and say that owing to nature not giving them sufficient moisture, or something else, they have not been able to raise any crops. We extend the time and they pay the interest.

Mr. VINSON. Does the gentleman from Illinois take the position that the Government should go into the business of charging interest on money that is due to it by the citizens of Augusta, Montana, Wyoming, or any other place?

Mr. MANN. I take the position that we ought not to do it, but we are doing it every day. We are not loaning money. Here, the city of Augusta owes us the money. They say they are not prepared to pay it without hardship. It is like any other debt. It was a fair transaction. They entered into it knowingly and willingly. In fact, they obtained it as a concession. The Government of the United States was not asking for it. Now, they owe the money. I am perfectly willing to extend the time for payment, but I see no reason why we should extend the time without the payment of some interest.

Mr. VINSON. I can not see, Mr. Speaker, why any interest should be exacted in this case, because the original contract between the city of Augusta and the United States never contemplated interest, and for one I think it is an unwise policy for the Government to exact interest in a case of this character from any of its citizens who happen to be indebted to it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. VINSON. I trust the gentleman will not do that, because it is a fact—

Mr. MANN. I have finished my discussion on it this afternoon. I will think it over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it go over without prejudice.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16700) to amend an act relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, approved March 4, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8, paragraph 1, of an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia (37 Stat. L., p. 975), as amended by an act approved February 25, 1916, be amended by adding to the names of the companies excluded from the operation of said section, after the words "and the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, excepting as to the regulation of its operation inside of the District of Columbia," in the third subdivision of said paragraph, on page 975, the following: "And the Washington-Virginia Railway Co., excepting as to the regulation of its operation inside of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARLIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT PAY FOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11152) to provide retirement pay in certain cases for judges of the United States district courts in the Territories.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

TABLET IN MEMORY OF COL. DAVID DU B. GAILLARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15078) granting to the widow of Col. David Du B. Gaillard authority to place, in his memory, a tablet in the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington, Va.

The title was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MILITARY PARK, GUILFORD COURTHOUSE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse.

The title was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PINEY BRANCH ROAD BETWEEN ALLISON AND BUCHANAN STREETS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12035) to provide for the abandonment of Piney Branch Road between Allison Street and Buchanan Street NW., in the District of Columbia.

The title was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request as to that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

UNITED STATES JAIL AT GUTHRIE, OKLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6904) authorizing the donation of the United States jail at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States jail at Guthrie, Logan County, Okla., shall, from and after the passage of this act, be and become the property of Logan County, Okla.

Also, the following committee amendment was read.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey, by proper quitclaim deed, to the county of Logan, in the State of Oklahoma, the United States jail at Guthrie, Okla., and all the lands set apart therewith.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title of the bill will be amended to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. THOMPSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

MISSISSIPPI CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION AT GULFPORT, MISS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 252) authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss.

The title of the resolution was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 235) to authorize the President of the United States to convey to the foreign Governments participating in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition the grateful appreciation of the Government and the people of the United States.

The title of the resolution was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LANDS OF WINNEBAGO AND OMAHA INDIANS, NEBRASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11161) providing for the taxation of the lands of the Winnebago Indians and the Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I also ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill 6116, and that that bill be considered in lieu of the House bill 11161, the two bills being identical.

Mr. MANN. Where is the Senate bill? Over in the committee?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Where is the Senate bill now?

Mr. VENABLE. My information is that it has been referred to the House committee.

Mr. MANN. It is probably with the Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. VENABLE. The bills are the same.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to pass it over temporarily. The Committee on Indian Affairs is right down below here. You have to have the original engrossed bill of the Senate before you can act upon it.

Mr. VENABLE. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Speaker, to pass over the bill temporarily.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIAN DEPREDACTION CLAIMS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6876) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations,' approved March 3, 1891," approved January 11, 1915.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HIGHWAY THROUGH FISH-CULTURAL STATION, UNICOI COUNTY, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11474) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to permit the construction of a public highway through the fish-cultural station in Unicoi County, Tenn.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to grant permission to the road commissioners of Unicoi County, Tenn., a right of way for a public highway, not more than 20 feet wide, through the property of the United States in Unicoi County, Tenn., used as a fish-cultural station and hatchery Provided, That such conveyance of right of way shall not be construed as affecting the right or title of the United States in said property or as in violation of any stipulation or condition in the conveyance of the same to the United States, and on the further condition that the land or right of way to be conveyed thereunder shall be constructed and maintained as a highway free of any expense to the United States, and all work thereon shall be such as not to interfere with the operations and efficiency of said fish-cultural station, and in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of Commerce.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out, after the word "to," the words "grant permission" and inserting the word "convey." On page 2, line 3, after the word "way," insert the word "authorized." In the same line, after the word "conveyed," strike out the word "thereunder," and insert the word "hereunder."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION ON THE KLAMATH RIVER, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11245) to authorize the establishment of an auxiliary or field fish-cultural station on the Klamath River, in the State of California.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes. I would just as lief object. I will, eventually. We do not pass any bills of this character.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman made a request to pass the bill over. I would like to have it passed if I could.

Mr. MANN. I do not make any response. The gentleman is at liberty to do as he pleases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass the bill over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COOS HEAD MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1159) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Coos Head Military Reservation, in the State of Oregon, to the cities of Marshfield and North Bend, Oreg., both being municipal corporations, for park purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to grant permission to and to authorize the cities of Marshfield and North Bend, each being a municipal corporation of and within the State of Oregon, to use and occupy all of those tracts or parcels of land known as the Coos Head Military Reservation, and also described as lots 1, 2, and 3, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 2, township 26 south, range 14 west of the Willamette meridian, and lots 1, 2, and 4, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 3, township 26 south, range 14 west of the Willamette meridian, situated on the south shore of the entrance to Coos Bay, at Coos Head, in Coos County, State of Oregon, for park purposes, and to exercise such use and occupation by and through a commission consisting of three persons, two of whom shall be named and appointed by the said city of Marshfield from among its resident citizenship, and one to be named and appointed by the said city of North Bend from among its resident citizenship; and for the purpose of enabling said cities more effectually to promote the purposes herein defined, the said commission is hereby granted the privilege—

(a) To fell and to remove trees and underbrush from said parcels of land, and to otherwise clear and improve the same.

(b) To erect temporary buildings upon said parcels of land for the accommodation and convenience of the public.

(c) To grant to private parties and to others the privilege of erecting temporary buildings upon said parcels of land for the accommodation of private persons and the public.

(d) To survey and plat said parcels of land, or any part thereof, for the purpose of enabling said commission to indicate and define the particular tract or tracts of land granted for such privileges to any person or persons.

(e) To police said parcel or parcels of land while the same or any part thereof is being used or occupied as a park or for parking purposes, or while the same or any part thereof is used or occupied under any privilege granted by said commission in accordance herewith.

(f) To provide and enforce reasonable charges, restrictions, rules, and regulations for the use of property and the conduct of persons while upon said parcels of land or upon any part thereof while being used or occupied, in whole or in part, for park purposes; subject, however, at all times to the rights of the United States in any manner to assume control of, hold, use, and occupy, without leave or consent from anyone or from said cities of Marshfield or North Bend, or from said commission, any or all of said parcels of land for any and all military, naval, life-saving station, lighthouse, and any and all other Government purposes, freed from any and all grants, conveyances, privileges, charges, incumbrances, improvements, or liens, matured or unmatured, made, created, permitted, or sanctioned thereon, by said cities of Marshfield or North Bend or said commission, or either of them, under and by virtue of this act: Provided, That the United States shall not be or become liable to any person or persons for any damages or compensation whatever to the said cities of Marshfield or North Bend or to said commission, or to either of them, for any future use by the said Government of any and all of the above-described parcels of land for any of the above-named Government purposes: Provided further, That each and all of the uses, occupations, and privileges hereby granted are and shall be of a temporary character only, and the said Secretary of War is hereby authorized to revoke the same at his discretion.

Mr. MANN. There is not very much information contained in the report on this Senate bill. I should like to ask whether the cities affected desire this legislation?

Mr. HAWLEY. They have passed resolutions through their common councils authorizing the taking over by the cities of this property if the grant is made by the Government. They agree to preserve it in good shape and police it, which is an important thing just now.

Mr. MANN. How large are these cities?

Mr. HAWLEY. The city of Marshfield approaches 7,000 inhabitants, I should think, and the city of North Bend some 4,000 or 5,000. There are other people living on the peninsula, so that the total number of people served will be over 15,000, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. How many acres are there in this reservation?

Mr. HAWLEY. About 120 acres.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, this bill does not provide for the sale of the land to these cities, but simply grants to them the use of this military reservation until the Government wants it, reserving the right of the Government to take it at any time.

Mr. HAWLEY. At any time, without any request whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, what improvements has the Government on this tract?

Mr. HAWLEY. Practically none. It has been abandoned for many years. Nuisances are committed upon it, the Government does not provide for its care, and if these cities take it over they will police it and care for it, and it will be preserved in better condition than it is now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

METROPOLITAN POLICE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10926) to amend an act approved June 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3699) to donate to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for park purposes the tract of land known as the Powder House lot.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 793) modifying and amending the act providing for the disposal of the surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill proposes to advance out of the Treasury a considerable sum of money to the Indians, to be reimbursed to the Government finally?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there any reason why we should advance that money without charging some rate of interest on it?

Mr. EVANS. I know of no particular reason why interest should not be charged. I do not know whether it has ever been done.

Mr. MANN. I do not know of any other case like this where we have acted.

Mr. EVANS. The situation is briefly this, that this reservation was ordered to be opened some seven years ago, but because some coal and oil and other rights were not reserved the reservation had never been opened. It is now ready to open, but there is a disposition to open only a part of it. Because it appeared that the reservation was ready to be opened, the grazing privileges have been cut off, and these Indians have been left without means of support. Formerly they leased the grazing privileges, from which they received an income, but last year the Government spent about $30 for the purpose of feeding these Indians. It is now proposed that the Secretary of the Interior shall loan to these Indians $150,000—

Mr. MANN. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars would come nearer the amount.

Mr. EVANS. I think it would finally, but $150,000 by this bill.

Mr. MANN. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars by the bill as originally introduced, and $150,000 by the committee amendment, which I am sure the gentleman from Montana is not in favor of.

Mr. EVANS. I am in favor of it if the amount is increased. The Indians have a valuable property, but they are personally poor. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs testified before the committee that he could open the reservation within 60 days if this bill goes through.

Mr. MANN. I have examined the matter quite carefully, and have talked with some of the gentlemen who are here in behalf of the bill. I can see a good deal of merit in the proposition; but where we propose to sell a lot of Indian lands right away, and pending the sale propose to invest a large sum of money in stock raising or something else, what reason is there why the Government should do this at its own expense in the end, the Indians having plenty of property, and not charge them any interest on the amount advanced to them?

Mr. EVANS. Personally I should not object to an interest charge, because I think the principal will be repaid within two years. I shall not object to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. EVANS. I hope the gentleman will not ask that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I feel obliged to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VETERINARY INSPECTORS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16060) providing for the classification of salaries of veterinary inspectors and lay inspectors (grades 1 and 2) employed in the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and the gentleman from Indiana objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AVIATION CORPS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17020) making an appropriation for the benefit of the Aviation Corps of the Department of War, and repealing the provisions of certain acts relating to the acquisition of a site and the erection of a public building at Ripon, Wis.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, by request I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOHN ERICSSON.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 5) for erecting a suitable memorial to John Ericsson, with committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 5, with committee amendments. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized for the erection, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a suitable memorial to John Ericsson, the inventor and constructor of the Monitor, said sum to be expended for the purposes herein named by a commission consisting of the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That the design and location of said memorial and the plan for the treatment of the grounds connected with its site shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if no one else demands a second, I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a second.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to commemorate by suitable monument the memory of one of the most distinguished members of the engineering profession, and a man who rendered services of an extraordinarily valuable character to the people of the United States in a great crisis in their history. John Ericsson was born in Sweden in 1803 and died in the city of New York in 1889, in which city he was buried. Subsequently, at the request of the Swedish Government, his body was transported upon an American man-of-war to Sweden for interment in his native land. He is most familiarly known to fame as the man who constructed the Monitor, at a very critical period in the existence of the Republic. But outside of his connection with the construction of the Monitor, he had been identified with a long list of useful inventions and improvements that have been of inestimable value to mankind. He was the first to adopt the screw propeller for steam vessels. He originated the use of compressed air for the transmission of power and of forced draft by centrifugal blowers. He was the inventor of improved boilers for steamships, and of the surface condenser for marine engines. One of his inventions that was particularly valuable to the United States was the location of the propellers below the water line, and it was tried for the first time on a vessel of the United States Navy. He was the inventor of an apparatus for deep-sea soundings, involving the principle now incorporated in Lord Kelvin's deep-sea sounding device, to locate accurately warning signals, and he was the inventor and designer and the improver of innumerable mechanical devices of great advantage to the commercial world.

He received the thanks of Congress and of the Legislature of the State of New York during his lifetime for services which he rendered to this country. He came to the United States in 1838, was naturalized in 1849, and lived the remainder of his life in this country until he died, as already stated, in the city of New York in 1889.

It is peculiarly fitting, Mr. Speaker, that at this time the Congress of the United States by some suitable memorial should commemorate the distinguished services of John Ericsson. He was a native of one of the few countries which is neutral during the present war. The United States is now on the most friendly terms with that progressive nation. Although the time has been considerable since he rendered the services for which the country is particularly grateful, there are now numbered among the citizens of this country a vast number of natives of Ericsson's native land who constitute a valuable and desired addition to our citizenship. They reverence his memory; they have just pride in his achievements; they are hopeful that his services will be commemorated by some fitting and lasting memorial. Nothing does so much to encourage patriotism and to make men's hearts beat more rapidly with patriotic fervor than the contemplation of the deeds of able and patriotic men which the country in some suitable manner recalls to its people. A fitting memorial in the Nation's Capital will attract men from all parts of the United States as to a shrine, and it will enkindle a noble and more intense love of our country in the hearts of many estimable citizens.

I hope that the House will take advantage of this opportunity to pass this bill. In the last Congress nearly 300 Members of the House publicly pledged themselves to support legislation designed to commemorate the memory of this very distinguished man, and I am glad that they are all present now and will have an opportunity to vote for the bill at this time. [Applause.] I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

[Mr. STEENERSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second on the motion to suspend the rules in the absence of anyone else demanding it, not because I am opposed to the bill but because I thought it was proper to have it in a status where gentlemen might address the House concerning the bill. If anyone now wishes to be heard in opposition I would be very glad to yield him the time. Apparently no one is opposed to the bill. I am with the others who have spoken. I think we are paying a proper tribute to this great patriot, to this great Swedish citizen—Swedish-American I shall call him, notwithstanding the prejudice against hyphenated names, because it would not be just merely to call him an American. It would not be just merely to call him a Swede. It is only just to call him, as he was, a great citizen of the United States, born in Sweden, who is sometimes referred to as a Swedish-American. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, the remark was just made about a man being a "Swedish-American." If there was any man in this country who was intensely American it was Capt. John Ericsson. Throughout the entire country, from East to West, we do not know anything of Swedish-Americans. They are all Americans. [Applause.] Though often called Swedish-Americans, it is nevertheless true the Swedish-born people, adopted citizens of our Nation, love the land which gave them birth. They are an educated people; they read and recite the sagas, the literature, and sing the songs of their forefathers. They read the history of its warrior kings, its poets, and love its splendid music, instrumental and vocal. While this is all dear to them, above all they love their adopted country, and no citizenship of the United States is truer than they to the Stars and Stripes and what the flag stands for. [Applause.] The first settlement of the Swedish-born people in the West was in 1846, in Henry County, Ill., led by Eric Janson, with a company of about 1,000 men, women, and children from the hillsides and the valleys of Sweden. They established the well-known colony of Bishop Hill in as beautiful a portion of Illinois as can be found, and they and their descendants have transformed it into a veritable garden. I was born in the same county, so known of the energy, industry, and perseverance of the pioneer Swedish citizens of that county.

When the Civil War came there were no people in this country of foreign birth who responded better in relation to numbers to the call to preserve the Union and for the defense of the flag. [Applause.] Of the men of Swedish birth in Illinois it is said that every fifth man able to carry arms responded to the call of Lincoln and of the Nation.

When the news came that John Ericsson had constructed the Monitor which won the victory over the Merrimac and saved the Capital of the Nation, with the same came news of victories won by the valor of Swedish-born soldiers in the battle fields of the West. There was the celebrated Company C of the Forty-third Illinois, all of Swedish birth, who distinguished themselves at Shiloh. On the same battle field and elsewhere Silversparre's battery won glory for themselves. Capts. Forse and Eric Johnson, of the Bishop Hill company, Fifty-seventh Illinois, served for over four years in the defense of the Union; then there was Capt. Stolbrand, the great artilleryman, and Capt. John Dedrick, of the Nineteenth Illinois; Col. Hans Mattson, who led the Scandinavians from Minnesota. The soldier boys came from the shops and farms of Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota, and together with the Norwegians of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, did deeds of valor on many a battle field for the preservation of the Union. I remember as a boy when the news came that the Monitor, John Ericsson's invention, had won the battle against the Merrimac, and with what gladsome joy it was received.

The Swedish-born people, their sons and daughters, are and always have been true to this Government, whether you find them in the factories in the New England States, or in the shops of the great centers of manufacture, or in the fields of Minnesota, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, or Illinois; wherever you may find them from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in shops, factory, farm, mine, forest, or as merchants, bankers, or educators, they are a patriotic people.

They love to speak of John Ericsson and the brave boys who, during the Civil War, were always found loyal to this country. [Applause.]

In the schools and colleges of our land they have gained highest distinction, and the sons and daughters of Scandinavia in our schools compare favorably with those of any lineage or ancestry. The present governor of Minnesota is an example; I can remember when his father, his grandfather, and grandmother came to this country. They did not look "very much," as we say, but they have shown their sterling worth. They came to this country poor, with empty hands, but with an ambition to succeed. Their civilization was of the type that read the Bible. They brought the Bible and hymn book with them. They taught their children to worship God. They gave them the best education they could. They taught them to be true Americans, and to-day their children and grandchildren are filling honored places. The history of this family is the history of many Scandinavian families in this country. [Applause.]

I am glad to be present and vote for this measure; I wish the committee had recommended a larger amount; still I am pleased that Congress will show its appreciation to the memory of Capt. John Ericsson.

The turret idea evolved and put into practice in constructing the Monitor was the commencement and foundation of the present type of naval warships. Ericsson's fame as an inventor is national and it is also world-wide. The last century brought forth many wondrous inventions, and among the inventors Capt. John Ericsson's name classes with Morse, Bell, Edison, Howe, McCormick, and Marconi, wondrous in their inventive genius for the comfort and welfare of the peoples of the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER].

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill providing for the erection of a suitable monument in the National Capital in honor of Capt. John Ericsson is a meritorious one from every viewpoint, and I want to see the House pass it by a unanimous vote.

Every school child in the land has been thrilled by the story of Capt. Ericsson and his Monitor. I know that the first story of the Civil War that impressed itself on my mind was the story of the thrilling fight between John Ericsson's Monitor and the Merrimac. I heard the story even before I started to school from my father, himself a veteran of the old Grand Army of the Republic.

We have erected monuments in Washington to the memory of many of our great men, and it is in every way fitting that we should erect one to the memory of this great Swedish-American, a man whose memory the people of this Republic will revere as long as the Republic stands.

In connection with this I wish to insert as a part of my remarks extracts from the finest speech on John Ericsson that I have ever read. I refer to the speech of Congressman CHARLES H. SLOAN, of Nebraska. It is a literary gem. It contains more interesting information about John Ericsson than can be found in any schoolbook or history that has ever come to my attention. It should be published as a Government document and sent out to the public schools everywhere. I happen to be one of the members of the Committee on Printing, and if a resolution is introduced to make this speech a House document I will, as one member of the committee, vote to report it favorably. Congressman SLOAN's speech, in part, follows:

"Mr. SLOAN. Years ago in the schoolbooks we learned that Baltimore was the Monumental City. It is now seldom so designated. This is largely due to the fact that within an hour's ride from the 'Metropolis of the Chesapeake' there stands by the lordly Potomac, at a point where the waters from the mountains meet the tides of the sea, our National Capital.

"Its regular streets, broad avenues, palatial homes, and great buildings, public and private, together with its numerous parks, whose areas describe many geometric outlines, all challenge the notice and command the favorable comment of visiting Americans and foreigners.

"Some of the most interesting features of Washington are its monuments, erected as a protest against the oft-repeated statement that republics forget and are ungrateful. Between the Capitol and the Potomac, reaching toward the heavens, stands the greatest obelisk in the world. It was erected by a generous people's voluntary subscription and a congressional appropriation to the memory of Washington. Near the banks of the Potomac, beyond which rises in solemn grandeur Arlington Cemetery, the resting place of American heroism, is now being constructed a magnificent Greek temple in commemoration of Lincoln. [Applause.] In the various parks are imposing statues erected to brave, wise, and great Americans, 'whose deeds crown history's pages, and time's great volume make.' All these are in chaste marble, enduring granite, or imperishable bronze. These in the main are erected to commemorate America's native sons.

"However, America did not come into national existence by native effort alone, nor has that national existence been maintained independently of those who looked for the first time upon the sun in other climes or under other flags than ours. In an oblong square fronting the Executive Mansion is Lafayette Park. Here are beautiful walks under trees transplanted from many other countries. In the southeast corner upon an elevated pedestal, about which is the compatriot group, stands a bronze statue, with military trappings, of America's early, tried, and noble friend—Lafayette. [Applause.]

"At the northeast corner is a similar statue erected to Kosciuszko, the Pole. May it stand there in grandeur until dismembered Poland, which gave him birth and for which he fought and fell, shall take its place among the other nations of the earth. [Applause.] In the southwest corner is another statue of heroic mold erected to Rochambeau, the great French general, who led his army, side by side with the Americans under Washington, up to triumphant Yorktown. The latest statue placed is in the northwest corner, that of Baron von Steuben, an officer under Frederick the Great. He became, after Valley Forge, the effective drill sergeant of our Continental Army. It was to a large extent his methods and discipline, added to the zeal, daring, and patriotism of the American Army, which humbled the land forces of Britain. [Applause.]

"Nor are those who distinguished themselves on land alone remembered. In Franklin Park there has recently been erected a bronze statue of Irish Jack Barry, who nobly earned the title, 'The Father of the American Navy.' [Applause.] Recently the American Government in just retrospect condemned its own neglect of John Paul Jones, who under different flags had become in that period of revolution on two continents 'the terror of the seas.' As a measure of justice the American Government transported his remains from their Parisian resting place and placed them in a mausoleum at the Annapolis Naval Academy. Afterwards a statue enduring, imposing, and appropriate was erected to his memory at Potomac Park in the National Capital. The achievements of this Scot in gallantry and daring reflected luster all along his career, but never more than when he patrolled the seas in vigorous warfare against all who would assail the encradled Republic of the west. [Applause.]

"John Ericsson was born with a genius for mechanics and a mind for mathematics. With the industry and persistence of his race this child of the north lived and closed his career with a record for achievement which, had he lived a few centuries ago, would have, by the iconoclasts of to-day, been called a romance.

"He first saw the light under the northern sun in Vermeland, Sweden. His nativity was but a few degrees from the Arctic Circle. It was the land of the short day and summer and the long night and winter. Eighteen hundred and three was a year of great import to America. It was the year when Napoleon, intending to deliver his greatest indirect blow at Britain, ceded Louisiana to the United States, giving us the scope of an empire. Far off Sweden was then under the rule of the great Napoleon. There a boy was born who 59 years later was to prove a great factor in preserving intact, under the American flag, that mighty domain. Napoleon intended by so ceding Louisiana to build a western republic capable of battling successfully with Britain. That was an enterprise in which the great Corsican recognized his own inability, for already Britain's supremacy of the seas had confined Napoleon's triumphs to continental Europe.

"The march of events confirmed the foresight of Bonaparte. Britain was successfully combatted and our most marked victory was at New Orleans, the populous center of that great annexation. The supreme trial of the Republic was not destined to be with Great Britain or any other power. It arose between two parts of the Republic itself. In that John Ericsson earned the distinction which the bill for his monument now pending in this Congress would confer.

"Between the Swedish cradle and the American tomb (1803-1889) we find many interesting facts. Ericsson exhibited a precocity for drawing at the age of 4. At 8 he became an adept at understanding and handling machinery. He was the builder of a perfect miniature mill at 9. At 10 he astonished Admiral Platten, the great Swedish canal builder, who prophesied for the boy an extraordinary future. At 13 he directed 600 Government military laborers in the construction of public highways. So the good roads builders of to-day may find a pioneer in John Ericsson. At 17 he became a soldier in the army of Bernadotte, under whom he was rapidly advanced. At 18 he was a surveyor in the King's service. His measurements and maps made at that time still remain marvels of accuracy and utility. At 23 he left his homeland of the north, where he deemed his abilities and activities circumscribed, for Britain was then as now the empire of the sea. There he believed would be a demand for the creations of his brain and their perfection by his hand. [Applause.]

"Britain was not an hospitable host for the Scandinavian genius. The man who rivaled Stephenson in producing the steam locomotive, the foreigner who produced at a London fire the first steam fire engine, the alien who bound the cannon barrels against their bursting, and the originator of the screw propeller, came up against British official inertia and English red tape. While Ericsson could take dead metal and shape it to his will, chain the elements, make a gun safe, at least to its handlers, subdue the fire fiend, and seizing upon the theory of bird flight, apply it to shipping, revolutionize in cheapness and speed navigation, yet he could not jar loose the official mind of Britain. The official mind of Britain was much like the official minds of other countries which have so often dismissed the suggestions of genius with these insuperable objections: 'We never saw it before. It was never done before.' It almost leads one to inquire why the ancients wasted rocks with which to build pyramids. Were there not sufficient official skulls for the purpose?

"So in 1839, wearied with Britain's official inaction, though he had acquired 30 British patents, he started for New York, the then ambitious port of the Western Continent, now the one through which passes more commerce than any other port of the world.

"He had been schooled in his native land to look to officials and governments for patronage, but he learned in Britain, and had it confirmed in America, that governments are less inclined toward seeing and adopting enterprise than is private capital. This is probably due, first, to the fact that the government is not intent on accomplishing gain, and second, the machinery of government being hedged in by constitutions and laws, and controlled by many heads instead of one, is necessarily slow in either seeing or accomplishing that which is not warranted by precedent.

"He came to America at the invitation of Robert F. Stockton, an American capitalist. In 1842 he designed, and the Government adopted, its first real steam war vessel, known as the Princeton. He invented an instrument for measuring distances and in firing guns. The range finders on our great dreadnaughts are but the perfection of this instrument invented by Ericsson. Its importance may well be realized since size of guns, weight of projectile, resistance of armor plate, and distance between gun and target constitute the four great factors in naval gunnery.

"The New World became attractive to him. He conceived a patriotic devotion to the great Republic whose enterprising men and liberal government gave him scope for his genius and industry. From this country he was granted 100 patents. So, in 1848, he adjured his allegiance to the Crown of Sweden and became a naturalized American citizen. Before our Civil War he conceived the Monitor and offered it to Napoleon III, there seeming to be no American demand, but Napoleon rejected it. By a strange coincidence, the character of the great battle in Hampton Roads was to either side suggested by Ericsson. Mallory, the naval secretary of the Confederacy, had been a friend of Ericsson's before the Civil War. In his then talks with the inventor, the ironclad was discussed, and Mallory later upon obtaining his position in the Confederate Cabinet, used Ericsson's thought, years before the war informally communicated, for the construction of the Merrimac.

"The Civil War was on. Its first year had shown in the activities of the field the mettle of both sides, albeit lack of discipline and preparation were manifested on either side, but more particularly by the North. It is an ancient story now about the construction of the Merrimac. Her entering Hampton Roads, sinking our Cumberland, burning the Congress—both wooden vessels—and driving the Minnesota into a position of helplessness,

"But the building of the Merrimac was not unknown to the northern authorities, and the time of her arrival where the battle must take place was of course reasonably forecasted. It seemed providential that preparation for meeting it should have been made by the one man then in the world capable of successful preparation. [Applause.]

"On September 14, 1861, the Government entered into a contract with Ericsson to construct the Monitor. One of his claims was that it should be impregnable to shot. Think of it! In that critical period the Government, dealing with the only individual capable of meeting the great national crisis, inserted in its contract of purchase a condition that payment should be withheld unless that condition could be clearly met.

"The Monitor's keel was laid October 25, 1861; her engines were steamed December 30. It was launched January 30, completed February 15, went into United States commission February 25, and on March 8 made her famous trip to Hampton Roads. Word painting of the first great sea fight, where gravity seems to have been conquered and where iron not only floated but fought iron, is left to the many writers and historians who with picturesque detail have given to the world an account of the first great naval battle as modern warfare then begun and since continued. Interesting as such an account might be, more interesting would be a statement of the fear and trembling on the decks of every northern wooden man-of-war. The consternation of Philadelphia, Boston, and New York, who saw in the immediate future the menace of their invaded ports, their destroyed shipping, and their wealth placed under tribute to the ironclad monsters already under construction and fashioned after the Merrimac. More interesting yet was the suspense and almost terror in Washington, where those in authority in anticipation saw the Merrimac steaming up the Chesapeake on into the Potomac, past Mount Vernon, and up to the National Capital, with guns trained on the Treasury and the Capitol, which meant more than a mere battle and the destruction of property. It meant a release of the southern blockade. It meant recognition of the Confederacy by all the powers on earth. It meant their commerce aiding the seceding group. It forecasted an unconquerable South and a permanently divided Nation.

"Men sometimes refer to the battle in Hampton Roads as being undecisive, because neither ship was captured or sunk. But the best evidence of victory was the subsidence of fear throughout our Navy; the restoration of complete confidence in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia; the tightening of the southern blockade; the nonrecognition by foreign powers; the supreme relief and the glorious confidence of Lincoln and his Cabinet; and as time went on the complete victory by the North and the perpetuation of the Union left unquestioned proof of who was victor and who was vanquished in the first great battle of floating iron. [Applause.]

"That in building the Monitor, Ericsson's chief consideration was for battle rather than navigation is suggested in the final end of the historic craft. Late in the year of 1862, as the northern naval forces were prosecuting their conquest against the shore defenses of the South, the Monitor was sent down the Atlantic coast. There, in a stormy sea, it passed Cape Hatteras; but in the increasing gale which followed it yielded to the battering of Neptune's artillery, and on the 31st day of December, 1862, it sank in that section of the sea which has claimed so many craft of both wood and iron and levied, year by year, heavy tribute of human life.

"My attention has recently been called to the fact that Dr. Greenville Weeks, who was a surgeon on board the Monitor in its first battle cruise, and still with it on its final trip, still lives, at the age of fourscore years. He recently visited the great Capital whose preservation was the Monitor's prize in 1862. It may be a matter of general indifference, but to me one of the most interesting seafaring accounts I ever read was 'the last cruise of the Monitor,' written many years ago by Dr. Weeks, in which he graphically described the last trip and final passing of the Monitor upon which he had been an officer and witness in its battle triumph, and which he left on its final cruise only when it sank to rise no more.

"There is a story of the ancient Swedish kings, and, by the way, one of them was named Ericsson, that a prince entitled to the throne must look upon it, then go and perform some great and heroic deed; then drink a libation from a skull before he takes his seat of power. Ericsson had looked upon a throne of metal, proffered by Neptune. He drank a libation from rebellion's skull, and became entitled to his throne. That right was confirmed by Neptune and Mars. [Applause.]

"Some may think Ericsson's Monitor was the chance thought of the dreaming inventor. It was not. It was the legitimate product of a highly organized, tempered, tried, and cultured brain, which always controlled and commanded a hand of cunning.

"A tribute to Ericsson is, in a broad sense, a tribute to the race from which he sprung. No evidence of this would seem better or more appropriate just now than a quotation from Admiral Luce in a paper read before the Naval Institute April 20, 1876:

"The Monitor was the crystallization of 40 centuries of thought on attack and defense, and exhibited in a singular manner the old Norse element of the American Navy; Ericsson (Swedish son of Eric) built her; Dahlgren (Swedish branch of valley) armed her; and Worden (Swedish, wordy, worthy) fought her. How the ancient Skalls would have struck their wild harps in hearing such names in heroic verse! How they would have written them in 'immortal runes'!"

[Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request, to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I rise not in particular to pay tribute to the Scandinavian people, which has been well done by both my colleague and the other two gentlemen who have spoken, but to recall that the putting of the Monitor at the service of the Government required the service not only of the distinguished and able Scandinavian but the use of the great historical figure—Abraham Lincoln. It was a fact that the naval officers of that day turned down the Monitor as an absolutely impractical and ridiculous proposition, and it required the direct personal order of Abraham Lincoln. Not only did it require the order of Lincoln but there are some of us among the older Members of the House who recall the then gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Sperry, who sat here with us for years, and it is just and fitting that we should recall in this connection that when John Ericsson, not himself a man of wealth, needed money to build the Monitor, it was Nehemiah D. Sperry, of New Haven, Conn., who from his own private means not only put up the money to build the Monitor but under the exactions of the Navy Department gave a bond not only that the Monitor would be completed but that the Monitor would be a success. Upon those conditions, so confident was he of the merits of the Monitor, that he hazarded his entire private fortune, and this day when we are all paying just and proper tribute to that representative of the Scandinavian people that have done so much for our country, let us not forget along with them that representative of the pioneer races, Abraham Lincoln, and that stalwart New Englander, Nehemiah D. Sperry [applause], who did so much to make the Monitor a success. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we are paying a very deserving tribute to a very great man who has gone on, and I want just for a second to call attention to a very great man who is still here. Twenty-three years is a long time. Not very many Members of the House have been here that long, although I think most of them prove they have been in existence more than 23 years. Length of service in the House counts for something, and I could prove by the testimony of all the newer Members of the House that it counts for a great deal.

I rise just now, feeling very serious about some things and very good-natured about everything, not to pay tribute but just to call attention to a fact. Twenty-three years ago to-day in this Chamber there marched down to the front in the well between the Speaker and the Members of the House, and for the first time took the oath of office as a Member of the House of Representatives, a man who has kept his oath of office in every respect. I refer to the great statesman, beloved by us all, the Speaker of the House of Representatives. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House, I thank Brother MANN for his very kind remarks, not only on this occasion but on diverse occasions. When I was sworn in on the 7th day of August, 1893, I would have been willing to have compromised on two terms in Congress. I suppose the district I have the honor to represent was at that time the worst factionalized district in America. It was called the "Bloody ninth." Now, it is the "Peaceful ninth." [Applause.]

I fully agree with the statement that Speaker Carlisle made once, that the better you know the House of Representatives and the longer you know it, the higher your opinion of it is. When I came here Charles F. Crisp, of Georgia, was Speaker, and he made a magnificent one. Thomas B. Reed, one of the most brilliant men that this country ever produced, was the minority leader. William L. Wilson, a very amiable, brilliant, splendid gentleman, was the majority leader. And I beg leave to assure you that Mr. Reed, as minority leader gave the Democrats plenty to do.

They are all gone. It was a great generation of men. One day I was sitting beside Jehu Baker, toward the end of that Congress. He had been here off and on for 25 years—mostly off. He had been a Republican when he first came here, and in 1892 he had three nominations, Democrat, Labor Union, and Greenback. He was a good deal of a philosopher. Toward the end of the session I was sitting by him one day and he said to me, "They are always talking about the old times and there being giants in those days. I have been around here at intervals for a long time. I sat in the Forty-fourth Congress, one of the most celebrated, but I give it as my opinion that this Congress, the Fifty-third, has as high an average of ability as any of the Congresses that ever preceded it." I think the same thing about this House.

When I came here we entered immediately into one of the hottest fights that ever took place in the House of Representatives, on the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law, and it wrecked more lives than did the Siege of Troy. If it had not been for one of these pesky landslides that come along occasionally my service would have been dated from the day that I first came here. But the next time I was one of the victims of that great landslide.

I thank the gentleman from Illinois; I thank the gentlemen of the House. I do not know that I will be here 23 years more, but I am going to stay as long as I can. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is an appropriate time to take this unanimous vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill which has been read from the Clerk's desk.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 111 gentlemen present—not a quorum.

Mr. CULLOP. It is evident we can not get a quorum tonight. Therefore, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. NOLAN. I demand a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 61.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. CULLOP. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. NOLAN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 29.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Adair	Coleman	Fairchild	Hamilton, N. Y.
Anthony	Cooper, Ohio	Fess, Ohio	Harrison
Ashbrook	Cooper, W. Va.	Fields	Hart
Barnhart	Copley	Finley	Hayes
Beales	Costello	Focht	Heaton
Bell	Crago	Fordney	Helm
Black	Cramton	Foss, Ill.	Henry
Blackmon	Crisp	Foster	Hensley
Bruckner	Crosser	Freeman	Hernandez
Burgess	Dale, N. Y.	Gallivan	Hicks
Burnett	Dallinger	Gard	Hill
Byrnes, S. C.	Darrow	Garner, Tex.	Hinds
Callaway	Davenport	Garrett	Holland
Cannon	Decker	Gillett	Hollingsworth
Cantrill	Dempsey	Glass	Hopwood
Capstick	Dewalt	Godwin, N. C.	Houston
Carew	Driscoll	Good	Howard
Carlin	Drukker	Gordon	Howell
Carter, Mass.	Dunn	Gould	Hughes
Carter, Okla.	Dupré	Graham	Hulbert
Cary	Eagan	Gray, Ala.	Humphrey, Wash.
Casey	Edmonds	Gray, N. J.	Husted
Chandler, N. Y.	Edwards	Gregg	Hutchinson
Charles	Elston	Griest	James
Chilperfield	Emerson	Guernsey	Johnson, Wash.
Clark, Fla.	Estopinal	Hamilton, Mich.	Jones

Kahn	Martin	Powers	Smith, Tex.
Kearns	Meeker	Price	Snell
Keister	Miller, Del.	Ragsdale	Snyder
Kelley	Miller, Pa.	Rainey	Stedman
Kennedy, R. I.	Mooney	Reavis	Steele, Pa.
Kent	Moore, Pa.	Ricketts	Stephens, Nebr.
Key, Ohio	Moores, Ind.	Roberts, Mass.	Sterling
Kiess, Pa.	Morgan, La.	Rodenberg	Stiness
Kreider	Morin	Rowe	Sulloway
Lafean	Morrison	Rowland	Summers
Lazaro	Moss	Rucker	Sutherland
Lee	Mott	Russell, Mo.	Switzer
Lehlbach	Murray	Russell, Ohio	Taylor, Ark.
Lenroot	Nelson	Sanford	Tilson
Leshner	Norton	Saunders	Tinkham
Lieb	Oakey	Schall	Treadway
Liebel	Oglesby	Scott, Mich.	Tribble
Lindbergh	Olney	Scott, Pa.	Van Dyke
Loft	O'Shaunessy	Scully	Vare
Loud	Overmyer	Sells	Walker
McCulloch	Page, N. C.	Shackelford	Ward
McDermott	Paige, Mass.	Shallenberger	Watson, Pa.
McFadden	Parker, N. J.	Sherley	Williams, T. S.
McGillcuddy	Parker, N. Y.	Sherwood	Williams, Ohio
McKinley	Patten	Sims	Wilson, Fla.
McLaughlin	Peters	Slemp	Wilson, La.
Madden	Platt	Small	Winslow
Magee	Porter	Smith, Mich.	Wise
Mapes	Pou	Smith, N. Y.	Wood, Ind.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 213 Members answered to their names—not a quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we can get a quorum here to-day, and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. NOLAN. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] demands a division on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 63.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking this vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-six gentlemen have arisen, a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of adjourning will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 111, answered "present" 5, not voting 230, as follows:

YEAS—86.

Abercrombie	Dies	McChintie	Slayden
Adamson	Dixon	McKellar	Stafford
Aiken	Doughton	McLemore	Steagall
Alexander	Ferris	Mann	Steele, Iowa
Almon	Flood	Matthews	Stephens, Miss.
Aswell	Gardner	Mays	Stephens, Tex.
Bailey	Glynn	Montague	Taylor, Ark.
Barkley	Gray, Ind.	Moon	Taylor, Colo.
Buchanan, Tex.	Greene, Vt.	Nicholls, S. C.	Thomas
Butler	Hardy	Oldfield	Tillman
Byrns, Tenn.	Hastings	Oliver	Venable
Campbell	Haugen	Olney	Vinson
Candler, Miss.	Hay	Padgett	Volstead
Caraway	Hedin	Park	Walsh
Condy	Hood	Quin	Watkins
Collier	Hull, Tenn.	Ramseyer	Watson, Va.
Cox	Johnson, Ky.	Rayburn	Webb
Cullop	Kincheloe	Rogers	Whaley
Dale, Vt.	Kitchin	Rouse	Wingo
Danforth	Lever	Rubey	Young, Tex.
Davis, Tex.	Lloyd	Sears
Dent	Longworth	Shallenberger

NAYS—111.

Anderson	Denison	Hamill	London
Austin	Dickinson	Hamlin	McAndrews
Ayres	Dill	Haskell	McArthur
Bacharach	Dillen	Hawley	McCracken
Beakes	Doelling	Hayden	McKenzie
Bennet	Doolittle	Helgesen	Maher
Booher	Dowell	Helvering	Miller, Minn.
Borland	Dyer	Hilliard	Morgan, Okla.
Bowers	Eagle	Huddleston	Mudd
Britt	Ellsworth	Hull, Iowa	Neely
Britten	Esch	Igoe	Nichols, Mich.
Browne	Evans	Jacoway	Nolan
Browning	Farley	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan
Brumbaugh	Farr	Keating	Pratt
Buchanan, Ill.	Flynn	Kettner	Raker
Burke	Gallagher	King	Randall
Caldwell	Gallivan	Kinkaid	Rauch
Church	Gandy	Konop	Reilly
Cline	Garland	La Follette	Riordan
Connelly	Goodwin, Ark.	Langley	Roberts, Nev.
Conry	Greene, Mass.	Linthicum	Sabath
Cooper, Wis.	Griffin	Littlepage	Shouse
Curry	Hadley	Lobeck	Slegel

Sinnott	Swift	Temple	Wheeler
Smith, Idaho	Taggart	Thompson	Williams, W. E.
Smith, Minn.	Tague	Timberlake	Wilson, Ill.
Stone	Talbott	Towner	Young, N. Dak.
Sweet	Tavener	Wason

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—5.

Fuller	North	Sloan	Steenerson
Humphreys, Miss.

NOT VOTING—230.

Adair	Fields	Kent	Reavis
Allen	Finley	Key, Ohio	Ricketts
Anthony	Fitzgerald	Kiess, Pa.	Roberts, Mass.
Ashbrook	Focht	Kreider	Rodenberg
Barchfeld	Fordney	Lafean	Rowe
Barnhart	Foss	Lazaro	Rowland
Beales	Foster	Lee	Rucker
Bell	Frear	Lehlbach	Russell, Mo.
Black	Freeman	Lenroot	Russell, Ohio
Blackmon	Gard	Leshner	Sanford
Bruckner	Garner	Lewis	Saunders
Burgess	Garrett	Liebel	Schall
Burnett	Gillett	Liebel	Scott, Mich.
Byrnes, S. C.	Glass	Lindbergh	Scott, Pa.
Callaway	Godwin, N. C.	Loft	Scully
Cannon	Good	Loud	Sells
Cantrill	Gordon	McCulloch	Shackelford
Capstick	Gould	McDermott	Sherley
Carew	Graham	McFadden	Sherwood
Carlin	Gray, Ala.	McGillcuddy	Sims
Carter, Mass.	Gray, N. J.	McKinley	Sisson
Carter, Okla.	Green, Iowa	McLaughlin	Slemp
Cary	Gregg	Madden	Small
Casey	Griest	Magee	Smith, Mich.
Chandler, N. Y.	Guernsey	Mapes	Smith, N. Y.
Charles	Hamilton, Mich.	Martin	Smith, Tex.
Chipherfield	Hamilton, N. Y.	Meeker	Snell
Clark, Fla.	Harrison	Miller, Del.	Snyder
Coleman	Hart	Miller, Pa.	Sparkman
Cooper, Ohio	Hayes	Mondell	Stedman
Cooper, W. Va.	Heaton	Mooney	Steele, Pa.
Copley	Helm	Moore, Pa.	Stephens, Nebr.
Costello	Henry	Moore, Ind.	Sterling
Crago	Hensley	Morgan, La.	Stiness
Cramton	Hernandez	Morin	Stout
Crisp	Hicks	Morrison	Sulloway
Crosser	Hill	Moss	Summers
Dale, N. Y.	Hinds	Mott	Sutherland
Dallinger	Holland	Murray	Switzer
Darrow	Hollingsworth	Nelson	Tilson
Davenport	Hopwood	Norton	Tinkham
Davis, Minn.	Houston	Oakey	Treadway
Decker	Howard	Oglesby	Tribble
Dempsey	Howell	O'Shaunessy	Van Dyke
Dewalt	Hughes	Overmyer	Vare
Doremus	Hulbert	Page, N. C.	Walker
Driscoll	Humphrey, Wash.	Paige, Mass.	Ward
Drukker	Husted	Parker, N. J.	Watson, Pa.
Dunn	Hutchinson	Parker, N. Y.	Williams, T. S.
Dupré	James	Patten	Williams, Ohio
Eagan	Johnson, Wash.	Peters	Wilson, Fla.
Edmonds	Jones	Platt	Wilson, La.
Edwards	Kahn	Porter	Winslow
Elston	Kearns	Pou	Wise
Emerson	Keister	Powers	Wood, Ind.
Estopinal	Kelley	Price	Woods, Iowa
Fairchild	Kennedy, Iowa	Ragsdale
Fess	Kennedy, R. I.	Rainey

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. DEWALT with Mr. MCFADDEN.

For the balance of the session:

Mr. FOSTER with Mr. CHIPERFIELD.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. JAMES.

Mr. GARNER with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Until further notice:

Mr. FINLEY with Mr. NORTH.

Mr. JONES with Mr. MOONEY.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. FULLER.

Mr. CRISP with Mr. HINDS.

Mr. T. S. WILLIAMS with Mr. WALKER.

Mr. DALE of New York with Mr. MEERER.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. HOUSTON with Mr. GUERNSEY.

Mr. CROSSER with Mr. EMERSON.

Mr. HOLLAND with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. HULBERT with Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

Mr. GREGG with Mr. STEENERSON.

Mr. WISE with Mr. ELSTON.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. SLOAN.

Mr. MCDERMOTT with Mr. CHARLES.

Mr. CALLAWAY with Mr. PETERS.

Mr. LEWIS with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

Mr. RAINEY with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana with Mr. SMITH of Michigan.

Mr. BLACK with Mr. CRAGO.

Mr. ADAIR with Mr. CAPSTICK.

Mr. BRUCKNER with Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts.

Mr. DAVENPORT with Mr. BEALES.

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. COOPER of Ohio.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. CHANDLER of New York.

Mr. FIELDS with Mr. DEMPSEY.
Mr. HELM with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.
Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. HAYES.
Mr. HUGHES with Mr. GRIEST.
Mr. EAGAN with Mr. HICKS.
Mr. EDWARDS with Mr. FOCHT.
Mr. BELL with Mr. HUTCHINSON.
Mr. MOSS with Mr. LOUD.
Mr. MORRISON with Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington.
Mr. HOWARD with Mr. GOOD.
Mr. GARD with Mr. FREEMAN.
Mr. GARRETT with Mr. GOULD.
Mr. SMITH of New York with Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts.
Mr. SAUNDERS with Mr. MOORES of Indiana.
Mr. SMALL with Mr. RICKETTS.
Mr. SHERWOOD with Mr. RODENBERG.
Mr. SMITH of Texas with Mr. TILSON.
Mr. WILSON of Florida with Mr. TREADWAY.
Mr. VAN DYKE with Mr. SULLOWAY.
Mr. STOUT with Mr. SNELL.
Mr. ASHBROOK with Mr. CRAMTON.
Mr. CASEY with Mr. DRUKKER.
Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. FESS.
Mr. CARLIN with Mr. FAIRCHILD.
Mr. BURNETT with Mr. DUNN.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma with Mr. DALLINGER.
Mr. CAREW with Mr. COSTELLO.
Mr. DUPRE with Mr. COLEMAN.
Mr. BARNHART with Mr. HILL.
Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. FOSS.
Mr. GORDON with Mr. HOWELL.
Mr. BURGESS with Mr. HEATON.
Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. GRAY of Alabama with Mr. MAPES.
Mr. LOFT with Mr. MILLER of Delaware.
Mr. KEY of Ohio with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. LEIBEL with Mr. ROWLAND.
Mr. MCGILLICUDDY with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. LIEB with Mr. KAHN.
Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. MONDELL.
Mr. LAZARO with Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa.
Mr. BLACKMON with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.
Mr. HARRISON with Mr. GILLET.
Mr. HART with Mr. HOPWOOD.
Mr. SIMS with Mr. COOPER of West Virginia.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD with Mr. GRAHAM.
Mr. SCULLY with Mr. SNYDER.
Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri with Mr. SWITZER.
Mr. SHERLEY with Mr. LAFEAN.
Mr. RAGSDALE with Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania.
Mr. PATTEN with Mr. WILLIAMS of Ohio.
Mr. PAGE of North Carolina with Mr. SANFORD.
Mr. LEE with Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island.
Mr. DECKER with Mr. McLAUGHLIN.
Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. MADDEN.
Mr. MURRAY with Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania.
Mr. OGLESBY with Mr. MAGEE.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.
Mr. LESHER with Mr. SCOTT of Michigan.
Mr. OVERMEYER with Mr. PARKER of New York.
Mr. SISSON with Mr. ROWE.
Mr. RUCKER with Mr. PLATT.
Mr. PRICE with Mr. PAIGE of Massachusetts.
Mr. TRIBBLE with Mr. STINESS.
Mr. SUMNERS with Mr. WARD.
Mr. STEDMAN with Mr. WINSLOW.
Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. WOODS of Iowa.
Mr. STEELE of Pennsylvania with Mr. WOOD of Indiana.
Mr. HENRY with Mr. HUSTED.
Mr. POU with Mr. OAKLEY.
Mr. MORGAN of Louisiana with Mr. NORTON.
From August 5 to 8, inclusive:

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi with Mr. CANNON.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. There is not a quorum present and the House declines to adjourn.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record—

The SPEAKER. That request is not in order.

Mr. MANN. No such request is in order?

The SPEAKER. Not in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. I want to ask the Speaker whether or not the following motion would be in order:

Ordered, That the Sergeant at Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its Members as are absent without leave?

And the further inquiry, whether there was not a gentlemen's agreement that there would be no roll calls and no point of no quorum upon any bill until Members were given three days' notice to be in attendance?

Mr. MANN. Of course there was no such agreement. It would be impossible to have an agreement that there would be no point of no quorum until three days' notice had been given. Only a crazy man would try to make such an agreement as that.

Mr. RAKER. There was an understanding that on any contested bill—

Mr. MANN. There was a gentleman's agreement.

Mr. RAKER. That if there was to be any contested bill three days' notice would be given.

Mr. MANN. If any bill was brought up upon which a contest was made, it was to be put over until three days' notice had been given, but that was a gentleman's agreement.

Mr. RAKER. That is what I refer to.

Mr. MANN. And some men do not know what it is to be a gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I made my inquiry of the Speaker for the purpose of reminding the House that there was a gentleman's agreement. I am not responsible for the comments of the gentleman from Illinois as to Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing on earth to do with the gentleman's agreement; but, answering the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry as to the first proposition, the Chair thinks that motion is in order.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, it being evident that it is impossible to get a quorum to-night, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Of course it is not necessary to ask unanimous consent. That motion can be made.

Mr. NOLAN. I shall have to object to any unanimous consent of that kind. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to arrest the absentees and bring them to the bar of the House.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will reduce his motion to writing.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. FULLER. I renew the request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] asks unanimous consent that further proceedings under this call be dispensed with, and that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. NOLAN. I object; and I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order in the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I will ask if there has been enough intervening business so that a motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WEBB. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I want to appear in the Record as being present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I also desire to appear as present.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, if the motion to adjourn is agreed to the Unanimous Consent and Suspension Calendar is dead, is it not?

The SPEAKER. It is until two weeks from to-day. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. NOLAN) there were—ayes 111, noes 55.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 93, answered "present" 7, not voting 232, as follows:

YEAS—100.

Abercrombie	Barkley	Campbell	Danforth
Adamson	Booher	Candler, Miss.	Dent
Alexander	Britt	Church	Dickinson
Allen	Britten	Coady	Dixon
Almon	Browning	Collier	Doughton
Aswell	Buchanan, Tex.	Cox	Ferris
Bacharach	Butler	Cullop	Flood
Bailey	Byrns, Tenn.	Dale, Vt.	Gandy

Glass	Lloyd	Quin	Stout
Glynn	Longworth	Rainey	Taylor, Ark.
Goodwin, Ark.	McClintic	Ramseyer	Thomas
Gray, Ind.	McKellar	Rayburn	Tillman
Greene, Vt.	McLemore	Rogers	Venable
Hamlin	Mann	Rouse	Vinson
Hardy	Matthews	Rubey	Volstead
Harrison	Mays	Saunders	Walsh
Hastings	Montague	Sears	Watkins
Haugen	Moon	Shallenberger	Watson, Va.
Heflin	Morgan, Okla.	Sisson	Webb
Hood	Nicholls, S. C.	Slayden	Whaley
Igoe	Oldfield	Stafford	Williams, W. E.
Johnson, Ky.	Oliver	Stegall	Wilson, La.
Kincheloe	Olney	Steele, Iowa	Wingo
Kitchin	Padgett	Stephens, Miss.	Young, N. Dak.
Lever	Park	Stephens, Tex.	Young, Tex.

NAYS—93.

Anderson	Dowell	Johnson, S. Dak.	Riordan
Austin	Dyer	Johnson, Wash.	Roberts, Nev.
Ayres	Eagle	Keating	Shouse
Beakes	Ellsworth	King	Siegel
Bennet	Esch	Kinkaid	Smith, Idaho
Borland	Farley	Konop	Smith, Minn.
Bowers	Farr	La Follette	Stone
Browne	Flynn	Littlepage	Sweet
Brumbaugh	Gallagher	London	Swift
Buchanan, Ill.	Gallivan	McAndrews	Taggart
Burke	Garland	McArthur	Tague
Caldwell	Greene, Mass.	McCracken	Talbot
Carlin	Griffin	Maher	Tavener
Cline	Hadley	Miller, Minn.	Taylor, Colo.
Connelly	Hamill	Mudd	Temple
Conry	Haskell	Neely	Thompson
Cooper, Wis.	Hawley	Nichols, Mich.	Timberlake
Curry	Hayden	Nolan	Towner
Davis, Tex.	Helgesen	Phelan	Wason
Denison	Helvering	Pratt	Wheeler
Dill	Hilliard	Raker	Wilson, Ill.
Dillon	Huddleston	Randall
Doelling	Hull, Iowa	Rauch
Doollittle	Jacoway	Relly

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—7.

Fuller	Humphreys, Miss.	North	Steenerson
Hay	Lobeck	Sloan

NOT VOTING—232.

Adair	Fairchild	Kennedy, R. I.	Pou
Aiken	Fess	Kent	Powers
Anthony	Fields	Kettner	Price
Ashbrook	Finley	Key, Ohio	Ragsdale
Barchfeld	Fitzgerald	Kless, Pa.	Reavis
Barnhart	Focht	Kreider	Ricketts
Beales	Fordney	Lafean	Roberts, Mass.
Beil	Foss	Langley	Rodenberg
Black	Foster	Lazaro	Rowe
Blackmon	Frear	Lee	Rowland
Bruckner	Freeman	Lehlbach	Rucker
Burgess	Gard	Lenroot	Russell, Mo.
Burnett	Gardner	Leshner	Russell, Ohio
Byrnes, S. C.	Garner	Lewis	Sabath
Callaway	Garrett	Lieb	Sanford
Cannon	Gillett	Liebel	Schall
Cantrill	Godwin, N. C.	Lindbergh	Scott, Mich.
Capstick	Good	Linthicum	Scott, Pa.
Caraway	Gordon	Loft	Scully
Carew	Gould	Lond	Sells
Carter, Mass.	Graham	McCulloch	Shackleford
Carter, Okla.	Gray, Ala.	McDermott	Sherley
Cary	Gray, N. J.	McFadden	Sherwood
Casey	Green, Iowa	McGillicuddy	Sims
Chandler, N. Y.	Gregg	McKenzie	Sinnott
Charles	Griest	McKinley	Slemp
Chipfield	Guernsey	McLaughlin	Small
Clark, Fla.	Hamilton, Mich.	Madden	Smith, Mich.
Coleman	Hamilton, N. Y.	Magee	Smith, N. Y.
Cooper, Ohio	Hart	Mapes	Smith, Tex.
Cooper, W. Va.	Hayes	Martin	Snell
Copley	Heaton	Meeker	Snyder
Costello	Helm	Miller, Del.	Sparkman
Crago	Henry	Miller, Pa.	Stedman
Cramton	Hensley	Mondell	Steele, Pa.
Crisp	Hernandez	Mooney	Stephens, Nebr.
Crosser	Hicks	Moore, Pa.	Sterling
Dale, N. Y.	Hill	Moore, Ind.	Stiness
Dallinger	Hinds	Morgan, La.	Sulloway
Darrow	Holland	Morin	Sumners
Davenport	Hollingsworth	Morrison	Sutherland
Davis, Minn.	Hopwood	Moss	Switzer
Decker	Houston	Mott	Tilson
Dempsey	Howard	Murray	Tinkham
Dewalt	Howell	Nelson	Treadway
Dies	Hughes	Norton	Tribble
Dorenau	Hulbert	Oakey	Van Dyke
Driscoll	Hull, Tenn.	Oglesby	Vare
Drukker	Humphrey, Wash.	O'Shaunessy	Walker
Dunn	Husted	Overmyer	Ward
Dupré	Hutchinson	Page, N. C.	Watson, Pa.
Eagan	James	Palge, Mass.	Williams, T. S.
Edmonds	Jones	Parker, N. J.	Williams, Ohio
Edwards	Kahn	Parker, N. Y.	Wilson, Fla.
Elston	Kearns	Patten	Winslow
Emerson	Kelster	Peters	Wise
Estopinal	Kelley	Platt	Wood, Ind.
Evans	Kennedy, Iowa	Porter	Woods, Iowa

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HAY with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. LOBECK with Mr. REAVIS.
 Mr. AIKEN with Mr. COPLEY.
 Mr. KETTNER with Mr. STERLING.
 Mr. LIEB with Mr. SLEMP.
 Mr. CARAWAY with Mr. GILLET.
 Mr. DIES with Mr. FORDNEY.
 Mr. EVANS with Mr. MCKENZIE.
 Mr. HULL of Tennessee with Mr. FAIRCHILD.
 Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. SNELL.
 Mr. SABATH with Mr. LEHLBACH.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 8, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16733) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce" approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1093), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13046) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest, in the State of Oregon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1094), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. KEY of Ohio, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1092), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5386) for the relief of James Campbell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1095), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MONTAGUE: A bill (H. R. 17338) making an appropriation for the construction of a public highway from the corporate limits of the city of Richmond, Va., to the Cold Harbor National Cemetery; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. GARLAND: A bill (H. R. 17339) appropriating $50,000 for the erection of a monument to the memory of Robert Morris; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. BENNET: Resolution (H. Res. 341) regarding inquiry concerning Ellis Island; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HAY: Resolution (H. Res. 342) providing for the appointment of an additional page for the remainder of the present Congress; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. RODENBERG: Concurrent resolution (H. Con Res. 53) appointing a select committee to investigate the shipment of munitions of war from the United States to the Republic of Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BROWNING: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 291) authorizing the Secretary of War to exempt commissioned officers of the National Guard from the age provision of section 24 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 17340) granting a pension to Margaret A. Weed; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLACKMON: A bill (H. R. 17341) granting a pension to Deborah Harrison; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DRUKKER: A bill (H. R. 17342) granting an increase of pension to Emily Davison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 17343) granting an increase of pension to William M. Haines; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17344) granting an increase of pension to Byron See; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOOD: A bill (H. R. 17345) for the relief of John Dauberman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 17346) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Tschoepe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 17347) granting an increase of pension to William E. Meadows; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 17348) granting a pension to Tilman L. Crafton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17349) for the relief of R. W. Earnheart; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petitions of women voters of Garfield and Lake Counties, Colo., favoring woman-suffrage amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER: Memorial of Board of Trade of West Chester, Pa., indorsing the Smith-Hughes bill; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, opposing House bill 10845; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of citizens of Chester County, Pa., opposing House bill 6468; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of woman's section of the Navy League of the United States, Coatesville Division, Philadelphia Branch, and Devon Division, Philadelphia Branch, favoring adequate preparation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorials of public meetings of Chester, Pa., favoring adoption of constitutional amendment forbidding polygamy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorials of union meeting of Presbyterian, Baptist, and Methodist Churches of Media; union meeting of West Chester; Presbytery of Chester; union congregational meetings of Borough of Ridley Park, Pa.; mass meetings of Darby; Methodist Episcopal Church of Parkesburg; union mass meeting of Phoenixville; Darby Methodist Episcopal Church, of Darby; public meeting of Haven Church; union meeting of the Parkland churches of Media, Pa., favoring constitutional amendment forbidding polygamy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONNELLY: Petition of citizens of Russell, Ellis, Gransfield, Osborn, and Palco, all in the State of Kansas, pertaining to enactment of such legislation as will enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to arbitrate and settle certain industrial disputes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petitions of J. O. Crowell, of Dennis, and A. Young, of Boston, Mass., favoring woman-suffrage amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Liquor Dealers' Protective Association of Illinois, relative to enforcement of United States revenue laws governing sale of intoxicating liquors; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EAGAN: Petition of Liquor Dealers' Protective Association of Illinois, relative to United States revenue laws governing the sale of intoxicating liquor at retail; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FLYNN: Petition of Seggerman Bros., of New York, against Senate amendment to revenue bill, relative to suspension of drawbacks; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER: Papers to accompany bill granting an increase of pension to Byron See; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MATTHEWS: Evidence to support House bill 17308, granting an increase of pension to Daniel E. Warner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OAKLEY (by request): Memorial of American Branch of the Socialist Party of Hartford, Conn., favoring 1-cent postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RANDALL: Memorial of Joseph G. Rickels and 230 others, of San Fernando, Cal., protesting against bills to amend the postal laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 8, 1916.

(Legislative day of Saturday, August 5, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Lane	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Brandeggee	Gronna	Mvers	Smoot
Bryan	Hardwick	Nelson	Taggart
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Overman	Tillman
Clapp	Husting	Penrose	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	James	Ransdell	Warren
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Robinson	Williams
Culbertson	Jones	Shafroth	Works
Cummins	Kenyon	Sheppard
Curtis	Kern	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. STERLING and Mr. THOMPSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. CHILTON and Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], and the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. BECKHAM, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 526).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the Army appropriation bill be taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask for the adoption of the report.

Mr. CLAPP. I think we ought to have the report read or some slight intimation given the Senate as to what the report contains. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon what the conference committee did with the provision relating to the age at which young men may enlist without their parents' consent?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In asking that the conference report be adopted I had no desire to hasten it through without consideration. The conference report was submitted yesterday and printed in the RECORD and it has been printed in document form and laid on the desk of Senators. I shall be glad to make any statement in reference to it.

I may state to the Senate first, generally, that the bill as reported to the Senate originally appropriated $330,599,010.10. The net deductions on the floor of the Senate were $16,628,563. In tabular form, I may state it as follows:

On floor of Senate.
Deductions	$29,318,295.00
Additions	12,689,732.00
Net deductions	16,628,563.00
As reported to Senate	330,599,010.10
Net deductions	16,628,563.00
As passed Senate	313,970,447.10
As passed House	182,303,356.10
Increase over House bill	131,667,091.00

Reductions in conference.....	$48,363,917.00
Additions in conference.....	1,990,000.00
Net reductions.....	46,373,917.00
As passed Senate.....	313,970,447.10
Net reductions in conference.....	46,373,917.00
As agreed to in conference.....	267,596,530.10
As passed House.....	182,303,356.10
Increase over House bill.....	85,293,174.00

Mr. HARDWICK. It is about 250 per cent increase over an ordinary Army appropriation bill in normal times, is it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just about that.

In answer to the question of the Senator from Minnesota as to the amendment which was proposed and passed by the Senate referring to the consent of parents to the enlistment of young men between the ages of 18 and 21, the House conferees refused to agree to that amendment, and the Senate conferees, after two or three days' discussion, receded from the Senate amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not intend to call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the report. I know that the country is going to be very much disappointed indeed at the striking out of the Senate amendment with reference to the consent of parents. For one, anticipating that there will not be a yeas-and-nays vote, I simply want to say that I shall vote against the adoption of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CHILD LABOR.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, inasmuch as I was a member of the subcommittee which heard the testimony and the arguments submitted upon this bill, and am in a measure responsible not only for the form in which it appears at this time before the Senate but for the substance of the proposed legislation, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate while I consider as briefly as possible some of the suggestions which have been made in opposition to the legislation.

I listened with great interest to the discussion of the subject by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. His argument was comprehensive; it was analytical; it was interesting; it was eloquent; and I compliment him most sincerely upon the performance, for I believe, if the measure becomes a law and ever reaches the Supreme Court of the United States, that those who oppose it could not do better than to utilize the argument he has already made.

I listened also with great care and with equal interest to the argument made by my friend, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. His observations touched a phase of the subject well worthy of attention, for he dealt rather with the policy of the legislation than with its constitutionality; and if I have had any serious doubt as I have examined this subject it has related to the necessity of the legislation rather than to its validity.

May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia, who unhappily is not present at this moment, that little is to be accomplished by citations from the statesmen of former days. I heard with delight the views of Madison and of Jefferson and of the men of that period; but those views, Mr. President, contribute little to the investigation we are now making. Those men are not alone in their expressions of a desire to preserve intact and with integrity the dual form of government. All men—all intelligent men—in this day believe in the preservation of the distinctions which were originally established in the Constitution of the United States. When we give our full adherence to those lofty views, we are no nearer to a conclusion with respect to the subject than when we began, for the inquiry now is, Does this legislation infringe upon the right of the States? Does it withdraw from the States any part of the power which the founders of the Constitution originally intended should be exercised by the States and not by the Nation?

The Senator from Georgia, as I remember, gave to the Senate but two extracts from men of distinction with regard to legislation of this character. He cited an opinion—not a judicial opinion, but an opinion—announced by ex-President Taft, which seemed to be applicable to the discussion we are now having. I say nothing with regard to the opinion of Mr. Taft. I can only suggest that the environment in which he lived and moved may have had something to do with his view respecting the power of Congress to enact a national child-labor law. I pass to the other instance, the other authority, cited against legislation of this character. It is found in a book, which is a collection of lectures delivered at one time by the present Chief Executive.

I do not attempt to quote literally the language used by the Senator from Georgia, but I intend to state the impressions which were made upon my mind by his references to the President of the United States.

He made two charges against this distinguished citizen, both of which are grave and serious. In substance, he said, first, that the President is attempting to coerce the Democratic majority into a support of the bill we are now considering. Substantially, he said that the President is using his vast power, his almost illimitable influence to compel the Senators who share his political belief and participate with him in a political organization to support this bill against their better judgment. He also said that he is exercising this power, believing that the measure is unconstitutional, for you will remember how careful the Senator from Georgia was to abstain from any suggestion or to make any admission that the President had changed his mind with regard to the Constitution and the authority conferred upon Congress in the commerce clause of that document.

Mr. President, I have been uncertain from the beginning, for three years or more, whether or not the President of the United States knows anything about the Constitution. I grant that he is an intellectual power; I grant that he is a man of fine attainments, of unusual training and education; but I am not ready to admit that he has any acquaintance with the Constitution; for, if I do admit it, I must at the same time believe that he is utterly indifferent to its obligations and to its mandates.

I do not know what influence the President of the country has attempted to exert upon the Democratic majority with respect to this particular bill; but I do know, and every intelligent man in the United States knows, that from the beginning of his administration to the present moment the Chief Executive has attempted, through every influence of which he is possessed, to absorb the legislative power of the Government and to exercise it in connection with the administrative or executive power; and, if he understands that the forefathers established a government in which there were to be three independent and coordinate branches, then he is careless of his duty and obligations, because it is known to us all that he has done everything that he could do to merge every power of responsible society in the Executive Office.

There has not been a single important measure passed by the Congress of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1913, that Congress has not felt his heavy hand upon it. I do not say—it would be possibly disrespectful, and certainly it is disagreeable to say—how far he has succeeded in taking to himself all the legislative powers; but those he has not taken have escaped him because he was unable to master the situation. This is the breach of the Constitution of which I most complain.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia, in his forebodings with regard to the unconstitutionality of this measure and its grave consequences upon the future of the Republic and upon our form of government, seems to ignore, at least he but lightly mentions, the more serious and graver violation of the Constitution that has been witnessed every day during this administration.

My friend from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and my friend from California [Mr. WORKS] seem to think that we are at the parting of the ways. They seem to think that the Constitution is about to be shattered by this particular legislation; but if they would lift their eyes to a broader and more comprehensive and more fundamental subject they would see that, if the Government of the United States, its form and its substances, are about to be changed, they will be changed, not by legislation affecting the children of the United States, but they will be changed by this insistent and persistent invasion of legislative prerogatives; and, inasmuch as voices have been lifted here warning the country of the frightful result of legislation of this sort, I ask those who are troubling their minds and hearts about this subject to dwell for a little time upon the infinitely more serious encroachment upon the Constitution which we are witnessing day after day, with scarcely a protest raised against the aggressor.

So much, Mr. President, for the constitutional views of the present Chief Executive. In all that I have said it must be understood that I am not disparaging his character, which I believe to be high; I am not disparaging his learning, which I know to be great; I am not impeaching his patriotism; I am only saying that he does not comprehend the Government of which he is the Executive. He is not imbued with the spirit of the Constitution which he has sworn to obey and to execute. He believes, as many people apparently believe in these days, that we must not only have a leader, but we must have a master in the White House, and that there is no hope in the divided energies of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches of the Government.

Mr. PITTMAN and Mr. CLAPP addressed the Chair.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not desire to interrupt the line of argument the Senator is making, but it seems that he has diverted slightly from the child-labor bill, which I assume he is discussing, to another branch of argument, and is discussing the tendency of the Executive to invade the legislative function. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether he considers that the attitude at the present time of Mr. Hughes, who is the candidate for the office now held by President Wilson, on the suffrage question, is a threatened invasion of the legislative function? Now, just a second, and let me make myself a little clearer.

As I take it, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a matter solely within the function of the legislative body of the Federal Government and the respective bodies of the States. As I understand it, the Executive has nothing whatever to do with a constitutional amendment—no power of approval nor of veto. Now, as I understand, the Republican Party has laid down a policy that will govern it in its legislation upon that subject if that party is given control of Congress, namely, that it will not consider the Federal amendment for suffrage a question for national legislation. Now, I want to know whether that function of the legislative body is not now being threatened by the Republican candidate for President in the speeches he is making through the country, wherein he is attempting to obtain the women's vote upon the ground that he, through his influence, is going to overcome the policy of the Republican Party, as announced in its platform, and force upon Congress a different policy, to wit, suffrage by national amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to reply to the question put by the Senator from Nevada. I assume that every citizen of the United States, whether he is a candidate for office, whether he holds office, or whether he is purely a private citizen, has a right to an opinion upon every subject which affects the welfare of his fellow men. He not only has a right to his opinion upon every such subject, but he has a right to express it and give it the widest possible publicity. The Senator from Nevada is too intelligent and logical a reasoner to fail to discern the difference between the expression of an opinion with regard to a public matter and the use of the power which an office confers in order to enforce the opinion of the Chief Executive upon the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. PITTMAN rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator will confine himself to a question.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will. Then, as I understand the Senator—who is one of the leaders of his party—he construes the declaration of his Presidential candidate as only a private expression of opinion, and as meaning that he, if elected, will not use any power that he may have to enforce or influence Congress in the passage of the national suffrage amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I believed that the candidate of the Republican Party, if successful, would use the power which resides in the Presidential office, and which I need not describe, to coerce Congress, the members of his political party, to support or to oppose an act of legislation, I would not vote for him, and I will criticize and condemn him just as freely and emphatically as I am criticizing and condemning the present Chief Executive. Possibly the Senator from Nevada was not a member of this body when I had occasion in former years to express the same views which I am now endeavoring to put upon record with respect to a Republican President. He did not offend the rule of the Constitution so grievously and so repeatedly as has the present Executive, but he did offend it, and I took the earliest opportunity to declare my unalterable opposition and repugnance to the attempt to compel Congress to do his bidding.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am very much interested in the Senator's learned discussion; but I should like to have the Senator, if he will, state what particular function or power the President used to coerce Congress to legislate according to his will.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can hardly believe that the Senator from Mississippi asks the question for information—to describe the power and the manner of its exercise.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If there is such power being used, I should like—and it probably would be very enlightening to the American people—to have it in the RECORD. If the President is doing anything so indefensibly wrong as the Senator charges he is doing, the people of America have a right to know it, and know it specifically, that public sentiment may deal with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Mississippi knows; and it is quite likely that if I should call upon him to reveal his own experience in recent years he would give a much more accurate and enlightening description of the power and the manner in which it is used than I could possibly do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will say to the Senator that no power of that character has ever been exerted upon me. I should like to know what power it is. I have never been moved by any power that the present Executive or any other Executive ever had in the performance of my duties on this floor. And, if I may be permitted to add, I would spurn with contumely any effort of the Executive to dictate to me in the performance of the functions of the place I hold in this Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I can well understand that the power to which I have referred has not been effectual with the Senator from Mississippi, and I am not asserting that it has been effectual with any Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have too much regard for my fellow Senators to enter upon that subject; but I know as well as I can know anything concerning the contemporary history of my country that it has been done.

I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator controvert the right of the Chief Executive to confer with his party associates touching matters of legislation?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator indicate how the President, with regard to this bill, has violated his constitutional prerogative?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know that he has with respect to this bill. I only know what the newspapers say.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, if I am correctly informed, is in favor of the child-labor bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very much in favor of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. And, if I am correctly informed, he understands that the President is in favor of the child-labor bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] declared that the President was in favor of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. But in his speech advocating this child-labor bill, in which the Senator from Iowa agrees with the President, he assails the President as being ignorant of the Constitution or as deliberately disregarding its limitations upon the exercise of his power. Now, I call upon the Senator from Iowa to state in what particular the President has committed this offense against Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the offense has been committed continuously since the President came into power. Now, there is no use of Senators ignoring or trying to evade that one situation. Why, I have talked with Senators enough about the relations between the Senate and the Chief Executive to know what I am talking about, and I have referred to this subject because I believe it is a grave offense against the Constitution, and infinitely graver than to pass this bill, even though some Members of the Senate may believe it to be unconstitutional.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief statement?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. No one better than the Senator from Iowa understands the rule of ethics that should govern in the relations between the Executive and Members of Congress. The Senator from Iowa has somewhat bitterly assailed the President for interfering in matters of legislation, and that, too, when the Senator from Iowa is discussing a bill toward which he occupies the same position that the President occupies. Now, I ask the pardon of the Senator from Iowa for stating in his time that in my opinion the Senator from Iowa is committing a grosser indiscretion and violation of ethics than he has charged against the Executive.

The President can not appear upon this floor to defend himself against a charge of this kind; and when a Senator makes a charge of that nature he ought to be specific. He ought not to base it upon secret or confidential cloakroom conversations.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not, Mr. President. I make it upon history that is just as well known as the proceedings of the Senate. I have entered upon the subject because the Senator from Georgia suggested that the President of the United States was violating his conception of the Constitution in favoring this bill. I have said, and I repeat, that if he is violating his conception of the Constitution with regard to the validity of the bill—and of that I know nothing whatsoever—such violation is inconsequential as compared with his general attitude toward Congress and legislation.

Mr. President, having said so much with regard to the authority of the President, I pass to a consideration of the measure itself, and, first, I intend to devote a few minutes to the changes which have been suggested by the Senate committee.

The first difference between the House bill and the Senate proposal is that the House bill declares that products into which child labor under the forbidden conditions has entered shall not be transported from the State of production to any other State, or, in the hands of dealers in other States, shall not be transported from such State into another unless the dealer has a certificate showing that the commodity was produced without the aid of child labor. There is some doubt in the minds of Senators, I know, with regard to the wisdom of this change. I have no pride of opinion with respect to it. I only desire that it shall be made as impregnable as possible; and if the better judgment of Senators is in favor of adopting the House theory, I shall cordially cooperate with those Senators in the passage of the bill. I, however, am of the opinion that the bill as reported by the Senate committee is less open to constitutional objection than the bill passed by the House, and I will give my reasons for that opinion.

The junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] seemed to be of the opinion that the Senate substitute was in the nature of a subterfuge in this respect. I frankly say that it was because I thought the House bill bore that complexion that I was in favor of changing the bill so that the prohibition would be laid upon the factory, the owner of the factory, the producer of the commodities, rather than upon specified goods which were the result in whole or in part of child labor. Everybody agrees that the goods produced by a child, or into which the labor of a child enters, are just as innocent and harmless or useful, as the case may be, as though the goods were produced by an adult.

It seemed to me that to attempt to put a brand or a stain upon the goods to which child labor contributes is to indulge a false pretense. They are not forbidden because of anything intrinsic with the goods or commodities themselves. They are precisely the same in form and character as though they had been manufactured by an adult, and to suggest to the Supreme Court of the United States, if the bill shall finally reach that tribunal, that we are trying to prevent the goods which are innocent of themselves and useful in themselves from transportation simply because they had been manufactured in whole or in part by a child under forbidden conditions was to insist upon a sham. If there was any peculiarity about goods manufactured or made by children, or in part by children, then the theory of the House bill would have been sound. But there is no difference whatsoever, and to insist upon an exclusion of such goods when we are really attempting to punish or penalize the man or corporation which employs the child seemed to me to introduce the case to a court, if it ever reaches a court, in a most unfortunate and unhappy way; and I thought, and I think still, that the honest, fair, reasonable way in which to construct the legislation is to penalize the man who employs the child, because all we are attempting to do is to prevent the employment of children under the conditions that are prohibited in the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. The goods would still be the same innocent goods. We would try to reach over the goods to the manufacturer himself. Do we not more closely relate the effort by placing an inhibition on the goods than in the other way? Of course we must all recognize that we are simply using the interstate-commerce clause here to correct an evil that goes to the health and welfare of the people. It seems to me the more closely we can relate it to commerce the more likely it is to be sustained.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so, Mr. President. However, the object is to prevent the employment of children under certain conditions, and we have just as much right to say that the product turned out by the factory which employs the children shall not be permitted to enter interstate commerce or interstate transportation as we have to say that the particular goods manufactured by the child shall not be shipped from one State to another. The only difference in the world is the extent of the penalty.

But that is a small matter as compared with the next consideration. Under the House bill it would have been necessary under all circumstances for the Government to have proved that the goods shipped were made in whole or in part or were the result in whole or in part of child labor under the forbidden conditions. That proof is absolutely impossible. You have only to think a moment of the variety and course of manufacture to know that in most instances the proof would be impossible; the law would become utterly ineffective.

Now, how did those who composed the House bill attempt to remedy that acknowledged obvious weakness in a bill which aimed its penalties toward the shipment of goods which were made in whole or in part by a child under 14 years of age or in whole or in part by a child under 16 years working more than eight hours a day? The House appreciated the difficulty. Every student of the subject knows that the proof could not be made in most instances. The House therefore proposed that the presence or the employment of a child under these ages or beyond these hours within 60 days before the shipment should be prima facie evidence that the goods shipped were the product of such child labor. Without that provision the House bill would, in my opinion, be utterly ineffective. I gave some study to the validity or legality of that provision in the bill. There are a great many cases—some in the Supreme Court of the United States—which deal with the question of prima facie evidence. There is a good deal of learning in the law books respecting the relation of the fact which is to be prima facie evidence to the ultimate fact. Everybody knows that Congress can not say arbitrarily that a given fact shall be prima facie evidence of another fact. There must be some natural, inevitable relation between the two facts in order to give us the authority to declare that one of them shall be prima facie evidence of the other. I am not prepared to say that the Supreme Court or any other court might not hold that the fact of the employment of a child in a factory within 60 days could be made prima facie evidence of the fact to be proven, namely, that the goods which were sought to be shipped were produced by the child, but there is very grave doubt respecting that provision.

Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator if the leading motive in changing from the House bill to the Senate provision was not rather the practical working of the law than the question of constitutionality?

Mr. CUMMINS. Altogether. In my opinion one is just as constitutional as the other; that is, it is just as constitutional to debar the entire product of the factory in which children are employed against a law as it is constitutional to debar the product to which the child may in some degree have contributed. There is no difference in that respect. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], I think, very freely conceded that. It is possible that he believes that there are degrees of infinity. They were both so clearly and obviously unconstitutional from his standpoint that he made no great difference between them, and no one could, in my opinion.

I do not know whether I ought to say this or not, but I think I may. The truth is that when the subcommittee began to consider the House bill this thought occurred to certain members of it, and in order that those who had been supporting or furthering the bill might understand the doubt that had arisen in the minds of some members of the committee we sent for Mr. Parkinson, who is the legal adviser of the Anti-Child Labor Society. He is a lawyer connected with Columbia University. He argued the case before the subcommittee and exhibited a knowledge of the subject which very few people can claim. We put this point before him and reasoned it out with him. I do not intend to suggest that he, as an original proposition, would have preferred the plan proposed in the Senate committee amendment, but he agreed with the change and, in fact, as I remember it, not only agreed but supported it heartily and confidently.

But that is not all, Mr. President. There is another difficulty about the House bill in its application which you can very easily perceive. What must a child do about a factory in order to contribute to the production of certain goods? Is a messenger in the office of the factory a laborer who helps to produce the things that are manufactured in the factory? Does the boy who is employed in an incidental capacity or outside capacity, or the girl who is so employed, contribute to the ultimate product of the factory? This question would be a very troublesome and vexatious one; it would involve the consideration of so many circumstances and be surrounded with so many complexities that we thought it ought to be eliminated from the legislation.

Again, in the House bill, dealers throughout the country everywhere before they could ship goods from one State to another must be provided with a certificate from the manufacturer asserting that the goods were manufactured in compliance with this law—that is to say, no child under the age of 14 years had contributed to their production or no child under 16 working more than 8 hours a day had contributed to their production. If that provision in the bill had remained, in my judgment the Supreme Court or any other court would have declared it unreasonable and therefore unconstitutional. It would have been an indefensible invasion upon the rights and privileges of the business men of this country.

For instance, take the illustration of Marshall Field & Co., of Chicago, with a store which covers two or three city blocks. That company or any other company—and I am simply instancing that company in order to show what would be the situation—would be compelled to have a certificate from the manufacturer of every piece of goods or every article in its store or it could not send them beyond the State of Illinois.

Not only so, but under the House bill, in my opinion, it would not be enough for Marshall Field & Co. to have a certificate respecting the manufacture or production of the completed article that it proposed to sell, but it would have been necessary to have provided itself with a certificate which covered every independent ingredient in a composite article.

Senators need but think about that for a moment to know that a bill of that sort would raise such a storm of protest, would so seriously interrupt and obstruct the business of the country, as to make it not only intolerable but to make it fairly sure that the court would declare it to be an unreasonable regulation of commerce, and therefore unconstitutional.

The Senate committee eliminated the dealer in States other than the State of production, and the State of production was retained, Mr. President, for this reason and this reason only. The producer could colorably sell his product to a dealer in his own State, and in that way entirely escape the operation of the law. Therefore, so far as the dealers in the State of production are concerned, they are required to provide themselves with a certificate which shows that the goods were produced in harmony with the law.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. The House bill contains no protection whatever for the manufacturer with respect to representations made as to the age of the child. A father, a mother, or anyone standing in loco parentis could make a certificate or affidavit with regard to the age of the child and the manufacturer, who employed the child in perfect good faith, would yet be subject to all the penalties and restrictions of the act. In my opinion, a provision of that kind is unreasonable and would not be sustained in the court.

But that is not all. The penalty in the original bill was attached to every shipment, no matter how numerous were the shipments or how few the children employed in violation of the law.

The case can not be better stated than to read a word from an argument that was made before the committee upon that subject. The application, as well as the truth of this statement, will be apparent to anyone who is familiar with the language of the House bill:

Moreover, each separate shipment constitutes an offense, so that the volume of shipments and not the number of children employed measures the penalty which may be incurred. An establishment making 500 shipments per day and employing 1 child would incur 10 times as many penalties as an establishment employing 200 children within the forbidden age and making but 50 shipments per day. The measure is not aimed at production in which children are exclusively employed. An establishment may have 10 or 12 or 20,000 operatives, but the employment of 1 child under 16 whose service may be said to contribute to the production of a commodity which is shipped in interstate commerce contaminates and penalizes every shipment flowing from that plant, although each article is otherwise sound and wholesome.

I repeat that the House bill makes every shipment a separate offense, and the penalty, therefore, has no relation whatever to the extent of the offense. The Senate substitute attempts to ameliorate that very onerous and, as I think, unreasonable provision in this way:

Provided, That a prosecution and conviction of a defendant for the shipment or delivery for shipment of any article or commodity under the conditions herein prohibited shall be a bar to any further prosecution against the same defendant for shipments or deliveries for shipment of any such article or commodity before the beginning of said prosecution.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the House bill from which the Senator is reading?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; it is the Senate substitute.

I think, Mr. President, this reduces the prosecution within reasonable bounds, and any court, in considering the reasonableness of the general regulation, would not find in that part of the bill a cause for criticism or prejudice against the general regulation.

For these reasons, Mr. President, the amendments to the House bill were proposed by the committee and are now before us. In my judgment, the Senate substitute is better and vastly more practical and more reasonable than is the House bill, and if I were attempting to sustain the constitutionality of the measure—as undoubtedly some one will be compelled to make that attempt—I would enter upon the work much more confidently with a bill free from some of the impracticable and, as I think, arbitrary and unreasonable provisions of the House measure.

Mr. President, I have but a word to say with regard to the constitutionality of the bill. I can understand the perturbation of some of my friends who look upon this bill as the parting of the ways, who look upon it as a complete change in the form of our Government. We have been at the parting of the ways, Mr. President, so often in the history of this country that it does not alarm me to meet the opportunity to take either one of two roads. Every great measure intended for the happiness and welfare of the people which has been proposed in Congress has been a parting of the ways. Every such measure has been met with the same objection which has met this bill. I do not share the rather gloomy forebodings that depress the spirits of some of my associates.

I have still great faith in the Congress of the United States. I am still willing to vindicate its power, even though I know that the power may be abused. There is no power given to Congress in the Constitution that can not be abused; there is no important power conferred upon Congress that can not be so exercised as to change, in the sense used by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], the form of our Government.

I understand perfectly that Congress can invoke the power to regulate commerce among the States in such a manner as seriously to affect the welfare and seriously to disturb the conditions under which we live; but we can not, therefore, deny the power of Congress to regulate commerce. All these powers may be so abused.

The Senator from Connecticut seems to forget that Congress stands between the people and chaos; he seems to assume that Congress will always yield to the temptation to pass legislation that will destroy, instead of construct; that will tear down instead of build up. I have no such fear.

The power to tax may be used so as to destroy the whole fabric of our Government; any other power contained in the Constitution may be used so as to greatly impair the stability and the soundness of our institutions; but Congress will not, we assume, use the power, if it has it, save for the benefit, the advantage, and the welfare of all the people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LANE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut? Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Lest the Senator from Iowa may have misunderstood me, I want to say to him that the remarks he has just made as to my position do not correctly state my position. I make no claim that Congress can not exercise to the limit every power conferred upon it; I agree that the power to tax may be the power to destroy; I agree that the power to regulate includes the power to prohibit for purposes of the regulation of commerce. My contention, of course, as to this bill is that it is not a legitimate exercise of the power to regulate commerce. Hence Congress has no power to touch the subject at all. The Senator, I think, understood that; but he did not make it quite plain in the remarks he has just made.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think I understood the position of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] very well. He says that this is not a legitimate exercise of the power to regulate commerce. What does he mean by the word "legitimate"?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not say "legitimate"; I said it was not an exercise of the power to regulate commerce among the States, in my opinion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I thought the Senator from Connecticut said it was not a legitimate exercise of that power.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I did, I will eliminate the word, because it is superfluous.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not know but that the Senator meant that it was not legitimate because it was not exercised to directly affect transportation or the instrumentalities of transportation—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. Or to enlarge or expand or protect, if you please, the physical aspects of commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, commerce, of course, may consist in many other things besides transportation. I simply meant exactly what I think I said, that the attempt made by this bill to prohibit the channels of interstate commerce to products innocent in themselves, because not manufactured in accordance with the ideas of Congress, is not an attempt to regulate commerce among the States, but is an attempt to prohibit child labor within the States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think there is a great confusion in the argument at that point. The Senator says it is not a regulation of commerce, but it is a regulation of commerce because it is a prohibition against the transportation of certain commodities. That is a regulation of commerce. It may be wise or unwise, it may be valid or invalid, but it is in form and character a regulation of commerce, just as we have regulated commerce in that way in connection with a great variety of subjects.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, if I may be allowed to make a suggestion there, the fact that the bill prohibits commerce among the States in certain articles produced in a certain way does not make it a regulation of commerce. The mere fact that the courts have held that the power to regulate includes the power to prohibit does not enable Congress, by using in a bill the words "We hereby prohibit," to clothe itself with jurisdiction to regulate something that it has no power to regulate under its constitutional authority to regulate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut, I think, confuses the effect of the regulation of commerce with the regulation itself. Any regulation of commerce may have a proximate or remote effect, but the prohibition against the transportation of certain articles is a regulation of commerce. It may be that it is applied to such commodities and under such conditions that the Supreme Court will hold that it is in violation of the fundamental law of the land as expressed in the fifth amendment to the Constitution; but that is quite a different matter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Speaking about the effect of the regulation upon the internal affairs of the State, that same question was presented in a powerful way in the Northern Securities case. There was a State corporation, the members of which had been authorized to do certain things, and the able counsel presenting the matter as against the Government contended that the action of Congress in enacting the Federal statute was in effect undertaking to say under what terms and conditions one could buy stock or transfer stock in a corporation, contending that it was wholly an internal affair, a private affair, and subject alone to regulation of the State.

It was claimed, in other words, that Congress was making an effort to regulate the internal affairs of the States under the guise of regulating commerce; but Justice Harlan said that that is not the purpose of the law; that may be its effect; that may be the result of the regulation of commerce; but what Congress is doing is undertaking to say that these people must conform to certain things, the effect may be to affect the internal affairs of the State. It may have the effect of regulating those things within the State, but that is not the purpose.

So here our legislation may have the effect of controlling production; it may have the effect of substantially affecting production, and the regulation of commerce may often have that effect; but, nevertheless, we come back to the question of whether or not it is not a legitimate exercise of the power granted to Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution, regardless of the fact that it has a most substantial effect upon production.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course I agree to the view that this is a regulation of commerce; but the question is whether it is such a regulation of commerce as can be carried into effect under the clause of the Constitution giving Congress the power to regulate commerce, and whether the question of the hours of labor of children is sufficiently connected with the subject of regulation of commerce to bring it within the power of Congress? That is the point, and the Senator from Iowa understands it, I think.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Connecticut has gone that far, although I assume that has been his attitude all the while. We, then, begin the examination with the admission that this is in form and character a regulation of commerce and is within the power of Congress, unless there are some limitations upon our authority to regulate commerce which will prevent the exercise of the power in this way.

In speaking of the Northern Securities case, I want at this moment, while we have it in mind, to read a sentence from that opinion, because it applies directly to a question which I propounded to the Senator from Connecticut a day or two ago, or possibly yesterday. It is found in the opinion of the court at page 342.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Senator about to read from the hearings or from the volume of Supreme Court Reports?

Mr. CUMMINS. This is the Northern Securities case, found in One hundred and ninety-three United States Reports. The court said:

Is there, then, any escape from the conclusion that, subject only to such restrictions—

That is the fifth amendment—

the power of Congress over interstate and international commerce is as full and complete as is the power of any State over its domestic commerce.

I asked the Senator yesterday whether, in his opinion, the State of Connecticut could pass a law of this character. He instantly and very candidly said that, in his opinion, there was no doubt with regard to the power of the State to pass a law which would prevent the employment of children save under the conditions that are prescribed by this bill. Now, if the Supreme Court is right with regard to that matter, then Congress can accomplish the same purpose through a regulation of commerce, if we can reach beyond the mere body of commerce itself—I can describe it in no other way—and legislate in the form of a regulation of commerce to promote the happiness, the welfare, the comfort, the health, and the morals of the people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think the Congress can do all that the Senator has said it could do, all that the decision from which he is reading says it can do, provided the thing sought to be accomplished is legitimate and within the power of the Congress. I think there is no question about the purpose of this bill. It is not, and does not purport to be, to protect the public from any contagion to be derived from the products of child labor. It purports to try to bring to an end child labor in the States. Now, I say I do not think that purpose, or the standards set up in this bill for manufacture, are so related to the subject of regulating commerce among the States as to clothe Congress with jurisdiction to act upon the subject matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not agree that there need be any relation. There may be the relation of cause and effect; but that is the only relation, so far as the point now suggested is concerned, that need be established. I agree that this bill is proposed for the purpose of suppressing certain child labor throughout the United States—not in any particular State, but throughout the United States. I assert, and the Senator agrees with me, that the instrumentality or the law through which we intend to accomplish that effect is a regulation of commerce. He protests against it because child labor in and of itself is not more directly connected with the business of transportation.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will permit me to make a suggestion to the Senator, inasmuch as he is discussing my position, I will simply say that in every one of the cases decided the subject matter prohibited from commerce is of itself deleterious or injurious either to health or to morals. Child labor is one step further back than any case that has been decided, in my opinion. It is one step further removed. There is nothing which is sought to be prohibited or accomplished that is prohibited from actual transportation in this bill. It is not sought to be prohibited. It is not sought to prohibit the manufacture of legitimate products in the country at all; yet they are the things that are prohibited from interstate transportation.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COLT. I have listened with great pleasure to this argument, and I very much regret that I have not heard the whole argument upon this question. It seems to me it is largely a legal question, and I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he finds any case in the Supreme Court where an act of Congress which forbade the transportation of goods from one State to another under the broad power that Congress has to regulate commerce has been held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court unless it violated some other provision of the Constitution? The power to regulate commerce not being limited in any way, how can the Supreme Court inquire into the motive of Congress in passing an act? It seems to me that if Congress possesses this broad power under the Constitution the Supreme Court must hold it has properly exercised that power, unless the act comes within the prohibition of the fifth amendment to the Constitution or some other provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, answering the inquiry of the Senator from Rhode Island first, I say that there is no opinion of the Supreme Court declaring unconstitutional a law regulating commerce, unless it is found to conflict with the fifth amendment to the Constitution, or with what is synonymous with the fifth amendment to the Constitution—the fundamental law which underlies all compacts of organized society. I have always looked upon the fifth amendment as expressive of that general law upon which all societies are builded. I think it is a fair expression, and it has come to be an accurate expression, of the rights which were demanded and secured long, long ago in Magna Charta.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, right there, referring to the Erdman Act, with which the Senator is very familiar, was not that decided unconstitutional because there was no relation to commerce?

Mr. CUMMINS. It was declared not to be a regulation of interstate commerce in some aspects, just like the railway-liability law; but those decisions were the result simply of a finding that they were not regulations of interstate commerce, but were, in the case of the railway-liability law, regulations of intrastate commerce as well.

Answering the question put by the Senator from Connecticut, he finds difficulty in connecting with commerce the effect of the prohibition against shipments from State to State. It matters not whether it has any effect or not. We employ a regulation of commerce. Now, without asserting that the Lottery case is exactly parallel to this—although I think the principle upon which it is decided controls this—without asserting that the white-slave act is precisely like the act we are now considering, yet it is still true that what Congress attempted to do in the Lottery case was to suppress gambling; that is all. Its only purpose was to suppress gambling. That was the object of the law. Now, it did it through a regulation of commerce, by forbidding all the paraphernalia and all the instrumentalities for carrying on a lottery from entering into the channels of interstate commerce; but its purpose was to suppress gambling, and what has gambling to do with interstate commerce? Is gambling, or the maintenance of a lottery, more nearly related to commerce or the general welfare of the people than the suppression of child labor, where the effect of the child labor prohibited is to impair, if not to destroy, the citizenship of the United States?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the Lottery case the court did not lay stress upon the proposition that it was aiding or augmenting commerce. The court put it in unmistakable terms upon the desirability of getting rid of an evil or wrong which was demoralizing the whole country. It was not because it aided commerce, or because it diminished commerce, or because it in any way affected commerce per se, but because the court said: Here is an institution which is, from a moral standpoint, demoralizing the whole country. Now, when you strip it of everything else, did the court hold anything other than that immoral influences should not use the channels of interstate trade to accomplish their purpose?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is all. There is but one sentence in the lottery-case decision which in any way differentiates that case from the principles we are now attempting to establish, and that is immaterial. That sentence is this—I do not quote it literally—but it is found in that part of the opinion which says that the States into which the lottery tickets or lottery instrumentalities are powerless to prevent the introduction of those things into the State. Just so with the Hoke case. I think the same suggestion is found in that decision, but that was simply describing that particular case, and does not modify in any fashion whatever the principle which is established, namely, that the United States can, through any regulation of commerce, suppress any evil that affects the public morals, health, or welfare. That power has been exercised so often that it can not be successfully controverted at this time.

Mr. WORKS rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it seems to me the fallacy of the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho, and also in the position of the Senator from Iowa, is that in the Lottery-Ticket case and in the White-Slave case there was an attempt to introduce or carry into another State, through transportation, an evil or immoral influence. That was what gave the Government the right to legislate on the subject, and nothing else. Now, that condition of things is totally absent here.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I challenge the proposition so far as the White-Slave case is concerned.

Mr. WORKS. I know the Senator does. He has done so heretofore.

Mr. BORAH. I will demonstrate it, if the Senator will listen for a moment.

Mr. WORKS. I shall be glad to listen.

Mr. BORAH. The case which was before the court, as it transpired, did carry into another State an immoral influence, but that was not the limit of the law. That case does not circumscribe by any means the extent of the law. The person who was carried into that State might have been a perfectly moral influence, might have been a perfectly innocent influence, and yet would have come within the purview of the law.

Mr. WORKS. Not at all. There must be some evil influence carried into another State in order to give Congress the right to legislate on that subject at all. There is where the Senator and I disagree.

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator this question, if the Senator from Iowa will pardon me for a moment. I suggested this the other day.

Suppose that A addresses a letter to B, and asks her to come into the adjoining State, and assigns a perfectly legitimate reason for it, and in response to that B goes and takes up her residence in the adjoining State and remains there until under all the decisions she becomes a part of the personality, or—using the term in a different way—the commodities of the State. Suppose that a month thereafter, or two months thereafter, A induces B to enter into a house of prostitution, he himself never having been in the channels of interstate trade, never having crossed the State line, never having been in commerce at all; is he not guilty under the law, and so is she?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, that does not touch the question that is involved here, to my mind.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator said it was carrying an evil influence into the State. Now, it was not an evil influence when it was carried into the State at all. There was not even an evil intent upon the part of the party that was in interstate commerce.

Mr. WORKS. Then there would be no criminal offense at all, if the Senator is right about it.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but it does not have to be any criminal offense. If the purpose and intent upon the part of the party who was never in interstate commerce, who was never a part of the commercial transaction, was to induce this other party to enter into that condition of affairs, they would be guilty under the law.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, unless there was some ulterior purpose on the part of the man, in the case instanced by the Senator from Idaho, there would be no criminal offense; and unless there was some such intent as that that might have been concealed by securing the transfer of the woman by innocent means, there would be nothing to legislate against. The very fact that some such influence is being used, and is being carried out by transportation or commerce, is what constitutes the offense, and is the only reason for legislating on the subject.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but the Senator took the position that the commodity or the person traveling through the channels of trade must have been an evil or an immoral influence.

Mr. WORKS. No; the Senator did not take that position.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will look at the Record, he will see that that is the position he took.

Mr. WORKS. The Record will speak for itself, Mr. President. My position is that there must be an effort, through transportation, to carry into another State an evil influence.

It may have been done, so far as the record shows, by innocent means, and it may appear that it was done by innocent influences; but there must be behind it all that evil influence that can be legislated against, and that is the only ground upon which it can be done. Now, that does not exist in this case at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from California takes altogether too narrow and illiberal a view both of the Constitution and of the decisions in these two cases. The purpose of the lottery statute was to suppress gambling—not in one State, but in all the States—so far as it could be done. The purpose of the white-slave act was not simply to prevent travel, but it was to help to suppress prostitution; and the Supreme Court so declared in its opinion—that prostitution is an evil preying upon the society of the United States; and if we can affect transportation by a regulation of commerce so as to assist in suppressing that evil throughout the country, we have the constitutional authority to do it, just as we had the constitutional authority to suppress gambling through an interdiction or prohibition against the transportation of the things that made gambling possible.

We want to suppress the employment of children under unfavorable conditions. Now, how do we do it? We can do it by intervening between the employer of the children and his market, if it be beyond the State, and say that you can not perpetuate your business, you can not complete your undertaking through the channels of interstate commerce. It seems to me that so long as we employ an acknowledged power of regulating commerce, so long as the form of the act which we pass is a regulation of commerce, no one can be heard to dispute our power or to dispute the validity of the act unless we have invaded the rights and the privileges of an individual—rights and privileges which are secured to him by the Constitution.

Mr. WORKS. May I ask the Senator a question? Suppose all the negotiations that led to an act of prostitution should have taken place within a State and that the transportation from one place to another had been within the State, and had not gone outside of it, does the Senator pretend that under those conditions Congress would have a right to legislate on that subject?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt about that. I have no doubt that Congress may declare that a prostitute shall not travel on trains at all.

Mr. WORKS. Within a State?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not within the State, but one desiring to enter another State.

Mr. WORKS. I am talking about the whole proceedings taking place within a State.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt Congress can declare that one convicted of crime shall not be permitted to pass from one State to another. I have no doubt that we can reach the purification of the morals of the country through the interdiction or prohibition of the use of interstate instrumentalities wherever the crime or offense is of such a nature that it affects the whole body politic.

Mr. WORKS. It is hardly worth while to argue with the Senator if he has that broad view of the powers of the National Government. That breaks down every barrier and removes all limitations.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has said that many times.

Mr. WORKS. It is the first time I have said it.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the Senator has said a great many times that these views which I think are inseparable from the support of the measure would break down all limitations, destroy our form of government, and turn over to the Federal power the entire police regulation of the State.

I do not assent to that. There is a very large field, a great field, which the States may occupy and which the Federal Government can not enter. I am speaking here of a regulation of commerce, if this is a regulation, and no one doubts that a prohibition is a regulation. That has been determined by the Supreme Court so often that it is folly to even read the decisions which establish it. A hundred years ago, almost, the Supreme Court held that the regulation of commerce could extend to a prohibition, and no one doubts it. If the prohibition against interstate commerce or prohibition against the shipment of these articles is a regulation of commerce, why is it not valid? What does the Senator from California urge against its validity? I agree that there are things that can be urged against its validity; but if it is a regulation of commerce, if we have the power to regulate commerce, why is not this legislation valid?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I challenge the statement of the Senator from Iowa that this is a regulation of commerce. The whole purpose of this bill, disclosed by the terms of the bill, is that it is not to regulate commerce but to prevent something being done within a State.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. WORKS. The claim that it is a regulation of commerce is a mere pretense.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WORKS. I may refer for a moment to what has been said by the Senator from Rhode Island, that the Supreme Court would have no right to inquire into the motive of Congress in enacting legislation of this kind; but in this case the motive is disclosed on the face of the bill, and a certain thing is attempted to be carried out by the provisions of the bill. It is not a question of hunting up the motive of Congress at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. The motive of Congress has nothing to do with it so far as this particular case is concerned. Again we reach the apparently irreconcilable difference. I say it is a regulation of commerce. The Senator from Connecticut says it is in form; the Senator from California says it is not. No matter what the effect may be, there is no pretense about it; there is no subterfuge about it; we are attempting in good faith to regulate commerce, that is, to exclude certain commerce from transportation from one State to another. If that is not a regulation of commerce I am entirely unacquainted with either the phraseology of the decisions or the Constitution. If it stopped right there, if we said nothing more than that John Smith should not transport his goods from one State to another, we would have regulated commerce. If we pass an act of that sort it could be assailed, and successfully assailed, because the fifth amendment to the Constitution which dominates the commerce clause, controls the effect of the commerce clause, would establish the proposition that we were taking the property of John Smith without due process of law, and therefore the regulation would fall. But it is a regulation of commerce just as fully as though it had been sustained.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield again to the Senator from California?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator is right in saying that the prohibition against transporting a certain thing through the channels of interstate commerce is a regulation of commerce. There is not any doubt about that. But in this instance every detail of this bill shows that is not the purpose of it. It goes back to the State and in great detail determines what shall not be done in the State, and as attempting to enforce a penalty against doing that thing the manufacturer is forbidden to transport the thing manufactured through the channels of commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it seems to me the Senator from California is wrong about that. The regulation of commerce is not nominal; it is real. It says that these goods shall not be transported. There is no pretense about that. It is as substantial as it is possible to imagine. But when the person whose goods are thus refused transportation from one State to another comes to the court he must say that Congress had no authority to regulate commerce in this way, because it interferes with my constitutional rights and privileges. That is the only attack that can ever be made upon this bill. There is no man who can ever reach an issue upon the bill unless he alleges that the regulation of commerce which it is now proposed to make violates some other provision of the Federal charter, and he will reach it by alleging that he has a constitutional right under the fifth amendment to hire these children and to transport the products of the factory in which they are employed. When he does that it will be for the court to say whether this is fairly within the police power which attends the commerce clause of the Constitution, whether it is fair and reasonable and not simply an arbitrary exercise of an express power. Now, that must be the issue.

Mr. WORKS. The transparent pretence in the whole business is that while we are prohibiting the transportation of certain goods through interstate commerce we are not, in fact, doing it for the purpose of protecting commerce at all, and everybody knows it.

Mr. CUMMINS. We do not—

Mr. WORKS. Wait a minute. That is not the object and purpose of the bill. The bill discloses the fact on its face that it is not for the purpose of protecting commerce at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, there is nothing in the Constitution that says we must regulate commerce for the purpose of protecting commerce. There is nothing in the Constitution that says we must regulate commerce in order to expand it any more than to limit it. There is nothing whatever, as I see it, in our authority that restricts us to a regulation of commerce in order to benefit commerce in the sense in which the Senator from California evidently uses the word.

Mr. President, the lottery statute was not for the purpose of protecting commerce. The white-slave act was not for the purpose of protecting commerce. The prohibition against transporting a bottle of water and calling it a bottle of medicine was not for the purpose of protecting commerce. All these things are, in my opinion, further removed from what is thought by some here to be a regulation of commerce than the bill under consideration.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator may call it protection of what not, but the only ground upon which Congress can legislate under the commerce clause of the Constitution is for the purpose of preventing the transportation of commerce from working injury to somebody, and it must be some injury that affects more than one of the States. You can not just say arbitrarily we have a right to regulate commerce and do it for any purpose. Now, the Senator does not go that far.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly not.

Mr. CUMMINS. I say that we can enact a statute to regulate—that is, putting rules upon the transportation of certain goods, or prohibiting them entirely to accomplish any purpose that is within what is ordinarily known as the police power of the country, and the police power means all the power of the Government in promoting the general good, if you please, of the people.

Mr. WORKS. Now, the Senator is getting down to something like a solid foundation. He has been away up in the air until the present time. You have got to get down in order to legitimate any legislation of this kind. Now, you put it on the ground of the police power, and unless you carry it into a single State—

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I have said, over and over again, that the only limitation upon our right to regulate commerce or to prohibit transportation of goods from one State to another is found in the fifth amendment of the Constitution.

That is the only limit. When you read the fifth amendment you will find it protects property and persons against an arbitrary invasion of their rights and privileges, that it insists on due process of law, but the police power of a Government, of the Federal Government in this instance, is not forbidden by the fifth amendment to the Constitution. It exists with it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Iowa is just as wrong on that proposition as he has been on the other, namely, that there is no limitation except that contained in the fifth amendment to the Constitution. There is a fundamental right that prevents this sort of legislation that interferes with the rights of individuals in the State, independent of the fifth amendment.

Mr. BORAH. What is that fundamental right?

Mr. WORKS. It is the right to control by the laws of the State and not by the Government.

Mr. BORAH. That all goes back to the proposition whether or not the commerce clause reaches this.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly, but you are appealing now to the police power in Congress.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Iowa takes the position, and I think he is entirely correct in that, that there is a police power attending the regulation of commerce and is an implied power in connection with the regulation of commerce. But I want to ask the Senator a question, if I do not interfere with the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. We will assume that this law has been passed and is controverted in the courts; that an action is brought in the courts and it is presented to the Supreme Court of the United States. The man whose goods have been denied admission in the channels of the interstate trade, the man whose goods have been prohibited, says, "My goods have been prohibited from being shipped in interstate commerce." The court will say, "Upon what ground"; and he will say, "Because I have employed child labor." Then does the Senator contend that that is such an arbitrary exertion of power on the part of the National Government that the man could go further and say, "I am protected under the fifth amendment"?

Mr. WORKS. No; it is not necessary to take any such ground.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I claim that absolutely.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator is right about that; but that is not the only ground.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator said a few moments ago we were getting down to earth. The Senator from Connecticut contends that the denial of these goods to the channels of trade would be such an arbitrary exertion of power on the part of the National Government that the man who had employed child labor could say, I am protected under the fifth amendment; that is, the taking of the goods without due process of law. Suppose the court would say, as Justice Harlan said with reference to the other matter, does the fifth amendment protect him in the employment of child labor under such conditions as to be inimical to the welfare of the United States? Has a man a constitutional right to ship his goods regardless of the fact that their shipment is in aid and furtherance of a system of business in which child labor is an essential factor?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the fifth amendment would protect the property, innocent in itself, in interstate commerce transportation against the prohibitions of this bill just as effectually as it would if the bill attempted to prohibit the putting of a mill in a State or to deprive men from voting. I think it is an utterly unreasonable prohibition. To have so held would be the taking of property without compensation.

Mr. BORAH. That is pretty well covered in the commodities clause, and that, it seems to me, disposes of it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The commodity-clause decision was absolutely related to the question of interstate commerce and the railroad rate bill and the antidiscrimination bill.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator knows perfectly well the object of the commodities clause was not to prohibit the particular articles because they were deleterious, was not the aid of commerce, per se, but it was for the purpose of compelling a corporation not to engage in two kinds of business, because it was thought not to the interest of the community that it should do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; it was not. It was to prevent discrimination in interstate commerce.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. That goes back to the proposition that it was thought to be an evil.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will pardon me, the inquiry was addressed to me, and the Senator from Connecticut seems to have taken it off my hands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yielded for a question to the Senator from Idaho, and I have no objection to yielding for the reply sought to be made by the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Connecticut has not gone quite far enough in my estimation to meet the circumstances suggested by the Senator from Idaho. In the case instanced by the Senator from Idaho all that would be necessary for the manufacturer to do was to set up the fact that there is an effort to prevent the transportation of these goods for the sole reason that he has used child labor in the manufacture. That is not a violation of any Federal law and is not a matter about which Congress has any right or power to legislate. It is wholly a State matter, and if he has committed any offense, it is an offense against the State. That, in my judgment, would be a complete defense independent of any question of the fifth amendment.

Mr. BORAH. That undoubtedly would have been just as complete a defense in the white-slave act.

Mr. WORKS. Not at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator will ignore the apparent distinction between the two cases.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator ignores the apparent distinction between the two cases that seem to exist in the mind of the Senator from California because he thinks the distinction does not exist.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest this consideration to the Senator in further confirmation of what the Senator from California has urged, namely, that whereas the Supreme Court has held that in circumstances Congress may prohibit interstate commerce in articles after they are created, it has never held and will never hold, in my judgment, that Congress has the power to prohibit the creation. After all, is it not the purpose of this bill to prohibit the creation of commodities except under certain conditions?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this bill does not prohibit the creation of articles by child labor. It does not prohibit the manufacture of articles by child labor of any kind, of any age. It simply prohibits the man who is inhuman enough, if that be the proper standard, to employ children under these ages or over these hours from reaching a market for his products through interstate channels. He must be content, if he desires to employ children against the standard proposed in this act, with the markets of his own State, and to them, of course, he has access, and with them we do not interfere in any way.

Congress has constantly employed an express power to accomplish purposes not related to that power in the sense that the word "relation" has been used by those who oppose this bill. I think I asked some Senator what he thought about the tariff law. The tariff law is supposed to be bottomed upon our authority to tax. But whether it is bottomed upon our authority to tax or our authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations, the application I desire to make of the instance is the same. We levy a duty upon an article which is ordinarily imported into the United States not to raise a revenue, but to exclude the article. Why do we do it? We do it in order to benefit the people of this country. We do it in order to create a market in our own country for like goods manufactured upon our own soil.

I assume the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] will not say that could not be done, that that would be a mere pretense and a subterfuge, or that a court would say it was in violation of some fundamental right of the citizen.

I beg to remind him that the party to which he and I and the Senator from California belong have maintained for a hundred years or more that the taxing power or the regulatory power of the United States could be used for precisely that purpose, to accomplish that end. These goods are not in themselves injurious; they are not poisonous; they are not adulterated; they bring with them no influence for evil; but we regulate commerce with other nations in order to promote the welfare of our own people.

Again, take the case of the circulation of State banks. We did not levy a tax upon the State banks' circulation in order to raise a revenue, because we knew it would create no revenue; we levied it in order to destroy the circulation. Within my own time in the Senate there was introduced a bill which seemed to have universal support to tax a certain kind of matches. We did not levy the tax in order to raise a revenue, for we knew that we would receive not a penny from the imposition. We did not levy it because the matches were harmful to those who used them after they were put into the markets of the country, but we levied it solely because in the process of manufacture in some States there were such baleful effects growing out of the handling of the material of which the matches were composed that it was done for the general welfare, to promote the common good.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator have any doubt that we could have denied the right to ship those matches?

Mr. CUMMINS. None whatsoever. I think it was suggested on the floor of the Senate, at least, if not on the floor of the Senate in the committee when that measure was pending, that it could be reached just as well and probably better through a prohibition of such articles from interstate commerce.

Mr. President, we have prohibited the shipment from one State to another of scores and scores of articles that are not in themselves injurious, that are just as harmless and innocent, if not useful or beneficial, as any commodity which passes day after day over our great lines of transportation.

I do not intend to pass through these cases or give references to these statutes, because they are familiar to everyone, but they all establish just one doctrine, that the transportation between the States is within the control of Congress; that we can prohibit transportation to any person whom we may select or any commodities we may describe, provided we are not hindered from so doing by either the fundamental law of the land, which underlies the fifth amendment of the Constitution, or by the fifth amendment itself.

If when we pass this law the general sense of mankind, the civilized conception of the United States, the standards of morality, the ideals of the people have not so fortified the measure as to bring any judicial tribunal to an abiding and conclusive sense that the prohibition of child labor under the provisions of the bill is in harmony with the best standards of civilization and is required by the highest necessities of the Nation, then the court will say that this regulation of commerce invades the fifth amendment of the Constitution, and is therefore invalid; but if it believes that the Nation is deeply concerned in the bodies, the minds, and the hearts of the children of the United States; if the court understands, as we all understand, that the perpetuity of free institutions is dependent upon the character of our citizenship and that the character of our citizenship is involved in the opportunity which the children have to grow and develop and take on the stature mentally and morally and physically of free men and free women, then the court will declare that it is a reasonable regulation of interstate commerce and that it does not invade the rights or the privileges to those who desire to employ labor under the forbidden condition of those who desire to use the facilities of transportation to make their immoral employment profitable in commerce.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate unduly. For now about a week we have been listening to a discussion of this bill, mostly on the constitutional side, and many arguments have been repeated over and over again, some of them by the same Senators. I think it must be pretty clearly understood, at least, what the real constitutional situation is, although learned Senators disagree. I am not going to criticize the position of Senators who oppose this bill on constitutional grounds. I think possibly there is a chance for legitimate discussion of the question, but I am satisfied that the measure will be held constitutional by the courts, first, because I believe it is a just, nation-wide, important measure, and that Congress has the right to determine what matters are considered of sufficient importance to the general welfare to bring them under the wide scope of the commerce provisions of the Constitution. It is perhaps the longest step that has thus far been taken, but I believe it is in the same direction of established precedents.

I notice, however, there is great opposition to this proposed law on other than constitutional grounds, and as a possible explanation of such opposition I will read a little testimony that was taken before the Committee on Labor in the House of Representatives when this matter was being there considered. I shall read from the testimony of Mr. David Clark, of Charlotte, N. C., editor and sole owner of the Southern Textile Bulletin. He states this about himself in order to qualify as a witness:

Mr. CLARK. My position is that I am in close touch with the textile industry of the South, and have been for 16 years, 8 years a cotton manufacturer and 8 years the editor of two publications, and for the last 5 years editor of the present publication, which I own. It has been our desire to have you gentlemen come South and see the mills, so that you will understand the situation; and we hope that you will come. I am here to give you any information that you may desire, openly and frankly, in regard to the conditions in the South.

On page 19 of the hearings this testimony was elicited from Mr. Clark:

Mr. KEATING. All of the pupils—

They were talking then about the schools. I wish to say here, Mr. President, that, so far as I am concerned, one of the things that has attracted me to the support of this measure is the fact that it has for one of its objects the giving to children what belongs to them; giving them an opportunity for an education, without which they can neither serve themselves nor their country, because our country is founded on education, on intelligence, So Mr. KEATING asks:

All of the pupils who expected to go to that school—

That was a night school—worked 12 hours in the factory that day?

Mr. CLARK. Those above the legal age worked on the basis of 10 hours a day. Ten hours a day is the longest that anybody can work.

Mr. KEATING. But the children had worked 10 hours?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. And then they failed to show up at the night school?

It appears that he had stated in his previous testimony that the children did not attend the night school very generally. Hence, Mr. KEATING's question:

And then they failed to show up at the night school?

Mr. CLARK. Well, the night school is not so much for the children as it is for the adults.

Mr. KEATING. Where do the children go?

Mr. CLARK. To the day school.

Mr. KEATING. How can they if they work all day in the mills?

Mr. CLARK. They go when they desire.

Mr. KEATING. How can they go?

Mr. CLARK. The parents send them out.

Mr. KEATING. How can they do that and work 10 hours a day in the mills?

Mr. CLARK. They do not do it above the age of 12 except during the vacation period of the school year. During the rest of the term they should send them to the school.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Do I understand you to say that a child's education should cease at 14?

Mr. CLARK. No, sir; I think it should be optional after that time. I think the parents are pretty well capable of taking care of the children, and they have the right to look after their education. That has been the law of the world.

Mr. SUMNERS. If you leave the question of education to the judgment of the parents after they are 14 years of age, why not leave it to them all the time, and if you do not leave it to them all the time, why leave it to them any time?

Mr. CLARK. When these people come from the mountains they do not believe in education. That is the reason we do not have compulsory education in North Carolina, because the isolated mountain districts would go Republican if we forced compulsory education on them.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think that many of their Republicans are up this way.

Mr. CLARK. We have one.

Mr. NOLAN. In other words, they do not make much of a show in Congress?

Still further, on page 23, in connection with this matter Mr. Clark testifies as follows:

Mr. NOLAN. You state that the question of compulsory education in North Carolina is a political question?

Mr. CLARK. It is optional; yes.

Mr. NOLAN. What do you mean by a political question?

Mr. CLARK. Well, the State is Democratic—most of it—and our western counties are largely isolated communities. Those people are on the balance of power, and if we put on a State-wide system of compulsory education it would swing the balance the other way, because people of the isolated rural sections do not want compulsory education.

Now note the consistency—

Mr. NOLAN. Do you not think you are giving a mighty lot of consideration to the minority down there?

Mr. CLARK. If it will make them the majority; yes, sir. They have been in the majority in our tenth district. We often elect a Republican Congressman from there. We have one in this Congress.

Mr. COOPER. You people in North Carolina blame your condition on the Republicans?

Mr. CLARK. Oh, no; they blame it on a certain class of people who live in the mountains.

Mr. NOLAN. They do not want to educate the Democrats, because they are afraid that they might vote the Republican ticket if they were educated. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. They vote the Democratic ticket now. If you force on them compulsory education, they might change around and vote the other way for spite.

Mr. President, I simply make this statement because I have been at a loss to understand why anyone not actuated by the high notion, and a laudable one, too, that this bill is unconstitutional, could oppose a proposition of giving the children of this country the opportunity, the right which actually belongs to them. Other parts of this testimony, which I shall not read, show conclusively that these children can not possibly obtain an education under the laws of the State where they have no law against child labor. The fact is they do not obtain it. I refer to the children who need it; the children of the poorer classes who, it is thought, are obliged to work.

I submit, Mr. President, it would be better for the State of South Carolina and for any other State to grant a bonus to the manufacturers of the State, if they can not compete with their Northern or other competitors where higher wages are paid—it would be better for them to grant a bonus equal to the difference in cost of production and to give the children a chance for education in those Southern States. The States where universal education is known and enjoyed need no Federal child-labor law. Universal education is the enemy of every species of slavery which thrives on the exploitation of ignorance by greed and cupidity.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not desire to take issue with Mr. Clark, except that I wish to state the fact that the statistics in reference to the matter furnished by the Census Office, which will be found in my speech of yesterday—which I presume the Senator from Michigan heard—

Mr. TOWNSEND. I read what the papers said about the Senator's speech, but I have not read the entire speech to-day. I was necessarily absent during its delivery.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that the statistics furnished by the Census Office show that North Carolina is increasing as to literacy over a majority of the other States. In a majority of the States illiteracy is increasing, while it is decreasing in North Carolina.

I wish further to say that there is not a cotton mill in our State which does not have a school, and that there is not a child who works in the factories who can not read and write, for, under the law, a child can not work in them unless he can read and write. You can not get away from those facts, no matter what anyone may say. Not taking issue with the Senator from Michigan or with Mr. Clark, I ask the Senator to do the State of North Carolina the justice to read the facts as they appear in the official record. While we were a poor State, for a long time we ranked low in literacy; but so far as the facts are concerned, for the last 10 years we have been improving in our percentage of literacy as compared with the other States; and North Carolina to-day, I believe, stands eleventh in that respect. Illiteracy has been decreasing in North Carolina all the time.

We have four-month schools everywhere; and so far as the factories are concerned, I have been trying to get Senators to go down into North Carolina and see them. Every one of them has a schoolhouse, which has been put up by the owners of the factories. I repeat, that children can not work in those factories unless they can read and write. Therefore it is impossible, until they are 12 years old, to work them, because, as I have said, they are not permitted to work unless they can read and write. That is the law, and the law is observed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be very glad to read the Senator's speech. I have no doubt that there is great opportunity for a large improvement in the matter of illiteracy in the State of North Carolina as there is also in other Southern States, and that progress has been comparatively great there can be no question; there has been and is great opportunity and I am glad of it, for I believe that knowledge is the foundation of a State's and of the Republic's perpetuity and greatness—

Mr. OVERMAN. So do I.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The education of its children, and especially of its poor children, who start out somewhat handicapped, is the capital which a State should furnish them. The fundamentals at least of an education are necessary to every boy and girl when they engage in the battle of life. Deny them these and you contribute not alone to illiteracy but to suffering, disease, crime, and degradation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I fully agree with the Senator. We are encouraging education in North Carolina.

I wish to say that our people are opposed to compulsory education, especially the people in the mountain section. That section is now represented in the other House by a Republican—a good man and a strong man—and he represents those people. He is opposed to this bill, and made a speech against it in the other House. He knows that those people have been opposed for a hundred years to compulsory education. All of them are to the "manner born." We can not in my State enforce education on them; but we are doing everything in our power to get their children to go to school. We put up nice schoolhouses on nearly every hill in the State. That shows the remarkable record we have made in the last 10 years—better than that of two-thirds of the other States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I was attracted to this testimony on this bill by this gentleman, who qualified as an expert, who evidently was familiar with southern factory life, who had been operating in it for years, who had been conducting two great newspapers that took special care of these cotton industries. What he said seems to me should be given more than a passing notice when we come to consider this bill in all its bearings.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States has been in force for nearly 130 years. We have also the constitutions of 48 States. As I view the situation to-day, the Constitution of the United States and the constitutions of the 48 States stand substantially unimpaired; in other words, the framework of our Federal form of government still stands complete and unchanged. We must remember, however, that our Federal Constitution is a rigid instrument, and that one of the defects of a rigid instrument is that it does not respond to the changes in the moral sentiment of the people. In other words, we have the example of a rigid body and a moving body—that is, of society, ever moving forward and upward, and the rigid provisions of our Federal Constitution remaining unchanged. How are we to meet that situation? Society is the master. All laws are made for the Nation, and the Constitution itself must be made in some way to conform with true national sentiment.

Fortunately the provisions of the Constitution are in very general terms, as all legislation should be expressed in general terms. Where you have a provision in general terms it becomes elastic, and it can be molded to meet the changes in public sentiment; for, Mr. President, laws must advance toward existing conceptions of right, justice, reason, and public policy. The great forces which control the life of a people are beyond the control of legal rules. The tendency toward popular government, toward the election of the Executive by popular vote, has overridden the constitutional provision with regard to the electoral college. This national tendency has overridden the organic law of the land, and there are other examples which might be cited to the same effect. Therefore, in order to make the law conform to the changed sentiments and conditions of the people in their upward march to a higher civilization, we have added to the Constitution a number of usages, understandings, or conventions which are superior to that instrument itself. That is one way in which the Constitution has been changed. There is also another way. The Constitution may be modified or changed by construction. And this way of modifying the Constitution is illustrated in the history of the commerce clause in that instrument.

The commerce clause contains the broadest power conferred by that instrument on the Federal Government. There are no limitations in the words which are used. The question is not what the word "commerce" meant in the times of Thomas Jefferson, but what does the word "commerce" mean to-day to meet the wants of this great and growing empire; and we all know how the word "commerce" has been enlarged in the last 100 years. Mr. President, if you take a rigid provision of the Constitution, enacted 127 years ago, and do not enlarge it by construction it may break through revolution. The only way we can make this rigid Constitution conform to the great purposes of government is by enlarging its abstract provisions through interpretation in order to meet the sound moral judgment of the people.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COLT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Constitution itself mark out how it shall be changed? I understood the Senator to say that the Constitution could be changed by construction, but does not that instrument by specific provision prescribe how it shall be changed?

Mr. COLT. I will answer the Senator by saying that I am not referring to radical changes such as might need to be brought about by amendment. I am taking, for instance, the general power conferred by the Constitution upon Congress to regulate commerce. I am saying that that provision might have received a comparatively narrow construction 100 years ago; it might have been held, possibly, to relate solely to the regulation of articles transported from one State to another, and yet we know that it has been held by construction to include the instrumentalities of commerce; it has also been held by construction to include the purchase by one corporation of stock in another corporation, when that stock apparently had only the most remote relation to the article that might be produced in a given mill and subsequently become an article of commerce. I do not mean organic changes such as must be brought about by amendment; I mean changes which come fairly within the language or purpose of the constitutional provision.

Now, this bill says—

That no producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any article or commodity the product of any mine or quarry—

And so forth.

Of course, this provision relates to commerce between the States. Its purpose is to regulate or prohibit commerce between the States. We are dealing with the broad power—the broadest power, perhaps, in the Constitution—of regulating commerce in all its forms.

We know that the Supreme Court never holds an act of Congress to be unconstitutional unless it is clearly so on its face. Every doubt is resolved in favor of its constitutionality. If my recollection serves me correctly, I think the Supreme Court has said in several opinions that it would not inquire into the intention or motive of Congress in passing the act. The real question to be determined by the Supreme Court is not what was the ultimate purpose of Congress in passing the act, but had Congress the power to pass the act under the Constitution of the United States? If you are going to inquire into ultimate purposes, you are embarking on an unknown sea with no compass to guide you. Again, if the Supreme Court had given the commerce clause of the Constitution a narrow construction, it never would have fulfilled the great purposes for which it was designed. The commerce clause has probably done more, under the broad construction which has been given to it by the Supreme Court, to maintain and develop our Federal form of government than any other provision in the Constitution.

I want to say, further, that the pending bill appears to me to be an attempt to regulate commerce in the transportation of articles from one State to another; that that power is clearly conferred upon Congress under the Constitution; that the Supreme Court will not inquire into the motive which led Congress to pass the act; and that, unless this proposed statute violates some other provision of the Constitution, such as the fifth amendment, it will be upheld as within the constitutional power of Congress.

Mr. President, we all know that under the fifth amendment the individual right of liberty and property may be encroached upon in a reasonable degree in order to promote the health, the morals, and the welfare of the community. It is impossible to define the exact limits to the exercise of this police power. Upon the face of this bill, however, I do not see that it would come within the prohibition of the fifth amendment.

Mr. President, I want to say one word more. Some Senators seem to be worried about the encroachment of the Federal Constitution upon the rights of the States. I do not think we have any just grounds for any such apprehension. When I look at the temper of the Senate, when I see Senators on one side and the other debating for days in the most able, painstaking, and conscientious manner the constitutionality of this act, I realize that we need have no fear of the safety of our Federal institutions. Why, the whole organic law of Great Britain rests upon the moral sentiment of Parliament. Parliament has the power to pass any law, but the moral sense of Parliament governs, and forbids it to pass any radical legislation. And so, Mr. President, the safety of our Federal institutions, the question whether the National Government will swallow up the rights of the States, rests in a large degree upon the public sentiment and sound judgment of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, there may be a doubt about the constitutionality of this bill, but if it is not manifestly unconstitutional, and if it is just, if it meets the great humanitarian sentiment of the Nation, if it accords with our higher aspirations toward social reform, let us pass it; and then, if subsequently it should be shown, upon very careful investigation, to be clearly in violation of the Constitution of the United States, we have, thank God, under our form of Government, a tribunal which will so declare it to be.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. The Senator stated that so far as the commerce clause of the Constitution was concerned, we would have power to pass this legislation unless prohibited by some other clause of the Constitution. I want to call the Senator's attention to section 2 of Article IV, with which the Senator is, of course, familiar. It reads as follows:

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

I call the Senator's attention to the provision of the bill relating to dealers.

Mr. COLT. May I qualify what I said with regard to the fifth amendment? I should have said, The law is valid unless it is in violation of the fifth amendment or some other provision of the Constitution.

Mr. BRYAN. The provision of the Constitution to which I have referred is found in section 2 of Article IV. There is a provision in this bill that relieves dealers from the requirement to have guarantees that no children have been employed in these factories except in the State of production. Does the Senator think that provision is valid, in view of the constitutional provision which I have just quoted?

Let me give the Senator an illustration of what I have in my mind. We will take Bristol, Tenn., which is on the border line between Tennessee and Virginia. The west side of the street is in Tennessee; the east side of it is in Virginia. Suppose there are two dealers in goods there that come under the terms of this act. The one on the west side is in Tennessee; the one on the east side is in Virginia. They are competitors in business. Now, the dealer on the east side would not be held to the penalties of this act if he did not have the guaranty, while the dealer on the west side, in Tennessee, would be—it being conceded for the purpose of the illustration that the factory is in Tennessee. Does the Senator believe, or not, that that provision violates section 2 of Article IV of the Constitution? That is the question.

Mr. COLT. In reply to the Senator I will state that I have not sufficient knowledge of the subject to answer this particular question. I have already said that I would not undertake to determine whether this statute might not be found to be repugnant to the fifth amendment or some other provision of the Constitution. I must leave that phase of the subject undetermined. When a question of this kind comes up, it can not be argued here as it would be argued before the Supreme Court of the United States.

It is our duty, Mr. President, it seems to me, to go along general lines; and unless the act appears manifestly and clearly unconstitutional, and especially when the act harmonizes with the humanitarian tendencies of the people, it should be allowed to stand, subject, as it will be, to a more critical examination by the Supreme Court.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there are a great many empty seats in the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Nelson	Smoot
Bankhead	Gronna	Norris	Sterling
Beckham	Hitchcock	Oliver	Swanson
Borah	Hughes	Overman	Taggart
Brady	James	Penrose	Thomas
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Thompson
Bryan	Jones	Ransdell	Tillman
Chilton	Keyon	Reed	Townsend
Clapp	Kern	Robinson	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Shafroth	Weeks
Colt	Lane	Sheppard	Works
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Shields
Curtis	Lewis	Smith, Ga.
Fletcher	Lippitt	Smith, S. C.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber on official business of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that Senators SHERMAN, HARDING, WADSWORTH, and DU PONT are engaged on important business. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I merely wish to announce that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has been called from the Chamber on important business.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is unavoidably absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. President, on Monday, July 31, Mr. Hughes, the Republican nominee for President, in his speech of acceptance, criticized the present administration very severely without in any way indicating what he would have done under similar circumstances had he been President.

On Wednesday, August 2, 37 men, representing the independent newspapers and magazines of the country, met and asked Mr. Hughes a series of questions in regard to what he would have done had he been in President Wilson's place. These questions appeared in the prominent newspapers of the United States.

On Monday, August 7, Mr. Hughes made a public political speech in the city of Detroit, Mich., but failed to answer any of the questions propounded by the 37 gentlemen. For fear the questions have not been called to his attention, I desire to read the questions into the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to may be printed in the Record.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THIRTY-SEVEN WRITERS AND EDITORS FRAME A QUIZ FOR HUGHES.

Thirty-seven well-known editors and writers for American magazines and Sunday newspapers met at the Hotel Biltmore yesterday and gave out, through George Creel, the following letter:

To the Hon. CHARLES E. HUGHES:

"The professional writers who sign this letter have small interest in parties but a very deep interest in democracy. It is our hope, through this voluntary association, to assist in the promotion of honest educational discussion in order that fundamental issues may not be decided in prejudices and ignorance.

"Mr. Wilson's beliefs have been expressed in law and in declared policies. He has made an open record, by which he may be judged. Wise choice is not possible unless you yourself make equally specific statement of purposes and convictions.

"Without intent to offend, we feel justified in charging that in no single public utterance have you filed a bona fide bill of particulars nor have you offered a single constructive suggestion.

DEMAND DETAILS.

"Personalities are without value; blanket criticism is worthless. What we desire to know, what it is fair that the electorate should know, are the exact details of your disagreement with President Wilson. What has he done that you would not have done, and what has he failed to do that you would have done or will do? Honesty and patriotism demand that you put yourself upon record in such manner as to permit people to judge you as they are now able to judge President Wilson. For example:

"Would you have filed instant protest against the invasion of Belgium and backed up that protest with the United States Navy?

"It is arrant nonsense to talk about action that would have prevented the Lusitania tragedy. The vague advertisement did not appear until shortly before the hour of sailing. The occurrence was one of those things that civilization has made the world regard as incredible. The only honest question to this: Would you have made the disaster the subject of diplomatic negotiations or would you have broken relations with Germany at once?

"Would you have urged upon Congress an embargo upon the shipment of munitions to the allies?

"Would you urge universal compulsory military service?

"You are frank in stating that Huerta's morals were of no concern to America. Does this mean that you would have recognized Huerta?

FOR OR AGAINST INTERVENTION?

"As matters stand to-day, would you be in favor of intervening in Mexico?

"Does your attack upon the Wilson shipping bill mean that you are in favor of ship subsidies?

"You speak enthusiastically of the fights of the worker. Does this imply that you indorse the Clayton antitrust law and the seaman's bill; or will you urge their repeal?

"What are your specific complaints against the Federal reserve law? As governor of New York, you opposed the income-tax amendment. Does this antagonism persist? Do you or do you not believe in paying for preparedness out of a tax on incomes, inheritances, and munitions?

"We agree with you that it is a 'critical period,' by far too critical, indeed, for candidates to talk in terms of office-seeking rather than in the simple, earnest language of definite Americanism.

Respectfully,

"Samuel Hopkins Adams, Ray Stannard Baker, Ellis Parker Butler, L. Ames Brown, Dante Barton, Irvin S. Cobb, Wadsworth Camp, J. O'Hara Cosgrave, Stoughton Cooley, William L. Cheney, George Creel, James Forbes, Frederick C. Howe, Gilson Gardner, Frederick Stuart Greene, Oliver Herford, Prof. Lewis Johnson, Richard Lloyd Jones, Peter B. Kyne, Percy Mackaye, A. J. McKelway, Basil Naylor, Meredith Nicholson, Albert Jay Nock, Harvey J. O'Higgins, Charles Johnson Poe, Eugene Manlove Rhodes, William McLead Raine, Boardman Robinson, John Reed, Ople Reed, Edgar Selwyn, William Leavitt Stoddard, Lincoln Steffens, Augustus Thomas, Frank Vrooman, and George West."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I had intended to address myself at some length to this proposed legislation, but, on account of circumstances over which I have no control, during the early stages of this debate I was absent. The ground has been thoroughly covered from a constitutional standpoint by those who by their professions are, or should be, qualified to view this matter from the legal standpoint as related to the National and the State government. There is a difference of opinion amongst the legal profession as to its constitutionality. There have been arguments brought to bear to prove that it is unconstitutional, aside from any merit that may be in the bill. Taking the dual form of our Government, the rights of the people and the powers delegated to the National Government, and arguing the matter abstractly, without pretending to enter into the merits of the particular bill before us, there are those who contend that it is an invasion of the reserved powers of the States. There are those who likewise contend, without any regard to the merits of the bill, that it is clearly within the power of the Federal Government to enact this legislation. I shall not attempt to enter a field that I have not prepared myself to enter, as these others have, but desire to address myself to why I shall oppose this bill.

The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] the other day, as I read in the Record, made a reference to my section that I hardly think the facts justify, and one that is scarcely worthy of the splendid character and attainments of that Senator, when he said that the South was willing to forego a strict interpretation of the Constitution, providing the price was big enough.

Mr. President, my State, South Carolina, is second to Massachusetts alone, if indeed she is second, in textile manufacture. For the last decade or two an influx of capital from abroad, as well as home capital, has built up a wonderful manufacturing industry in South Carolina. Without any threat of Federal intervention, without any menace of Federal intervention, my State holds the proud distinction of having perhaps the best law in reference to the manufacture of cotton goods by child labor in the Union. In South Carolina it is a family affair. The officers and the operatives in the mills are largely South Carolinians. These families are our own blood and bone, taken from less gainful occupations, put into the mill villages, and under the terms of our law they are furnished schools, the hours of labor are restricted, sanitary conditions are required, and a creditable supervision is maintained. In every State in the Union, according to tables submitted, there are laws more or less progressive in reference to this matter of child labor.

Now, there is not a man on this floor—I will not draw that comparison; I have heard it so much that I am nauseated with it—but every right-minded and rightly constituted white American citizen wants to give the children of this country the right to enjoy the kingdom of childhood, which never comes but once—the playgrounds, the little innocent pleasures that can be enjoyed with the budding imagination of childhood, which never comes but once. When an individual passes from the kingdom of childhood and enters the kingdom of manhood without the joys and pleasures that constitute the kingdom of childhood, he has lost a part of his life that may never be substituted.

Therefore every American citizen wants to see a condition where the children of all the people may enjoy the leisure and the happiness that release from toil alone can bring to children. But a higher law than you or me, a higher law than ever will be enacted in this body or in any State capital, has decreed that circumstances shall come when the child shall be called upon to make a sacrifice for those that brought him into the world and for those that are dependent upon him.

These are intimate and local conditions. As I go about in South Carolina and meet my acquaintances whom disaster has brought to poverty, and see them, as is notoriously true through the country, dependent upon their daily labor for their sustenance, upon wages that are not sufficient to enable the earnings of the adult members of the family to supply the common necessities of life to those about them, it is obvious that there must be some exception to your general law. Do you think it is fair and right to take a little orphan, whose mother and father both have been taken by the hand of Providence, and say that he must work, that he shall be denied the beauties of the kingdom of childhood, while the child of a little less unfortunate parents is to be protected? Why make the distinction?

This bill simply provides that children under a given age may not engage in these occupations. It does not say that when they are denied this opportunity under certain restrictions within the State you have offered them anything else. I believe that the State of South Carolina has risen to the occasion and is solving the problem; and I do not claim for my State any greater love for children, any greater love for the welfare of the coming generations, than any other State.

I believe that the intimate local knowledge that the employer has of the employee and that the legislators of a State have of both makes them more competent to grapple with these questions than anyone else can be; and I believe that local knowledge is more important than a mere question of uniformity—all that the Federal Government can grant.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I am not asking the question that I want to ask in any spirit of criticism at all, but rather to get more light on the law of South Carolina. Of course, I know the situation in a general way. But does that law make any exception where the parents are dependent upon the earnings of the child?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it does. I am not very sure as to that. It was modified in January, 1915, raising the age limit to a point where, in my opinion, the bill in respect to those that may labor and the hours of labor, both as to night and day, is superior to the bill now under discussion; and I think the distinction is made that children may be or are exempted from certain restrictions where the parents are totally dependent upon them. I think that is the case.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator another question along the line of comparison. Has the operation of this law in South Carolina involved any noticeable increase in public preparation for the care of those who are unable to take care of themselves financially?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know that I am prepared to answer that question. I see the Senator is indicating this query: As we have these restrictive laws in our State, has the State made any preparation to take care of those to whom it denies the opportunity to labor?

Mr. CLAPP. Not so much as to whether it has, but whether this legislation has resulted in the necessity for any additional or unusual care of the children?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think perhaps I can answer that by saying that now there is quite a sentiment, that has become a plank in the local platforms of different aspirants for office, as to compulsory education—that is, they take the ground that the first essential for the proper discharge of the functions of citizenship is to be educated—and if the Senator will allow me, right in that connection, while I think of it, in comparing this law—because I take it one illustration is worth an hour's argument—to illustrate:

There is not a Senator who will not agree that education, the training of the mind to think logically, truthfully, and consecutively, to be acquainted with the progress of the race, the dangers that have been avoided and how they were avoided, politically and socially and nationally, are essential to the proper discharge of the functions of a citizen. Yet with the glaring illiteracy of certain States, the glaring indifference as to the educational facilities of different States, we have found no one to advocate that there should be a Federal law compelling the States to see that the children of all the States shall be educated according to a rule laid down by National Government or as a penalty forbid the citizens of such States as fail to comply the privilege and rights of citizens of America.

Yet when you come to the question which lies underneath the question of education and upon which education is dependent you are attempting to force upon the State your idea of the hours of labor and who shall labor. Buckle, in his History of Civilization, never said a truer thing than when he said there are but three elements in the civilizing process and you never can divorce them—wealth, leisure, and learning. Deny the child the privilege of making a modicum of wealth and you deny to him the possibility of having something of wealth with leisure, and without the wealth and the leisure you can not have learning.

Now, to get back to the question before us, as I said in the beginning—

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption here?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator comes from a State that has gone a long ways in this matter. In what way would the passage of this law interfere with the law in South Carolina? Would it go as far as the South Carolina law goes, or would it not go as far?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not concerned with that at all. I am concerned with the Federal Government interfering with my domestic affairs while I am working out the problem as the Constitution gives me the right to do. I will answer the Senator in this way. What I am opposed to in this bill is its hypocritical plea that it is for the child. I would go as far as you go, and further than this bill goes, in helping these children; but I do not propose to jeopardize State rights by opening this Pandora's box and allowing the Federal Government to say who shall work and under what conditions they shall work, provided the product of that work enters interstate commerce, under the pain of being deprived the common carriers of the country.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the Senator misunderstood my inquiry, and yet I can readily see that he might have drawn the inference from it that he did. It was not asked in the spirit in which the Senator, I think, thought, and he is excusable from the form of the question in placing that construction on it. What I meant more particularly is this: We are all fairly familiar with this bill and I was seeking more to get a general broad comparison between the bill and the law of South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Specifically I think the law of South Carolina is infinitely superior to this. This simply denies the child the right to work and does not propose a single thing in lieu thereof. It gives him no alternative. It does not say we deny you the right to work, but we are going to see that you are educated, and we will put up the money to see it done. We are going to see that you have a vocational education, so that when you arrive at the age of responsibility, after you pass your immature period, you will be equipped to go into some gainful occupation. You simply say that the child shall not work, and then leave it to whom to say whether or not he shall be educated? You can not deny the fact here on the floor of the Senate that there are not children who with a good, honest mother and father who are as dependent upon their own efforts as though the mother and father were dead. It is a notorious fact that the poor families are the larger, and therefore are more or less dependent upon the wages of their children as soon as they are large enough to help support the family.

I state the further fact that under modern conditions, such as are in my State, and I will not speak for any other, in our mill villages, in our mill schoolhouses and churches, under the restrictions of our law as to the hours of labor and the age, 90 per cent of the children there have an infinitely better opportunity than they have from the vocation in which they have come.

Surely we have not arrived at the period in our national and State life when every industry that seeks the channel of interstate commerce will be subject to the penalizing power of Congress if that industry happens not to be conducted along lines that do not appeal to certain individuals removed far from the State or place where the work is being done.

In my State and in every other State there are local conditions that justify a thing which in another State would be wholly unjustifiable. In my State the climate the year round is mild and there is no suffering to go to work at any hour.

With the climate in some of the Northern and Western States it would be absolutely cruel to make an adult, much less a child, at certain hours go through the snow and the rigid cold to work. Under those climatic influences longer hours may be sustained.

In the South practically the year around the windows of the factories are open, and it is as if the operatives were working in the open air; while in the North the buildings must be closed and artificially heated. This naturally poisons the air and makes long hours impossible. These conditions necessarily give advantage to the southern manufacturer over the northern manufacturer. Therefore, you are attempting by the act of Congress to destroy this advantage and make equal and uniform what by nature is not equal and uniform. I suppose that this is one of the causes for the so insistent demand for the passage of this bill.

Why do you not prescribe the textbooks, the qualification of the teachers, the hours that they shall teach, or penalize the State that does not come up to the ideas of Congress?

I am not objecting nor did I rise to object to child-labor legislation. I have not attempted to say nor can anyone put it in my mouth that I am opposed to all beneficial legislation guaranteeing to rich and poor the kingdom of childhood and the right to enjoy it. I believe my State is better qualified to give to its citizens and its own children those privileges than is Congress; but you want to invoke a principle which once sustained by the Supreme Court, quibble as you may, split hairs as you have done, will destroy the independence and sovereignty of the State. The principle of this legislation is that Congress has the right to prohibit the channels of commerce to every commodity manufactured under conditions that do not meet its sweet will.

It does not define the channels of commerce. With the facilities for transportation and communication and the marvelous divisions of labor incident to the progress of manufacture, what is it that does not enter into interstate commerce? The children that laugh in the fields as they gather the grain or pick cotton are an essential part of the process that finally produces finished product that finds its way into the channels of commerce. The child that prepares itself in our technical schools to work the loom or to repair machinery is an essential part of the manufacturing process. The mother that cuts the garment in the poor home, and turns the machine that stitches the seams, to clothe the child or the man, to enable him to go out to work, producing the raw material, is a concomitant and essential part of the machinery that produces the manufactured article that enters into commerce.

Your argument is that this is for a specific case. The case may be specific, but the principle invoked is as universal as human endeavor; and what is the need for it? It is not like the lottery case, where the States were totally incompetent to grapple with it. In that case we invoked this principle in behalf of humanity and civilization, and denied the right to use the mails, as the States were incompetent to grapple with it. It was the province of the Federal Government to stop the channels of trade to a thing that was detrimental to every person who touched it.

The same is true in the white-slave trade. I heard the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] drawing a nice comparison between a child coming in conjunction with or touching the article of commerce, in the eyes of the law polluting the commerce, and the innocent victim transported for immoral purposes coming in contact with the one who would degrade her. One was wholly within the jurisdiction of the State and the other was wholly within the jurisdiction of the State. The analogy is far-fetched and unworthy of a legislator. It is a poor attempt to compare the incomparable. The poor victim contaminated by seduction is a firebrand forever and is at liberty to travel where she may. The child located within the State does not even, under this bill, become a thing of commerce or a polluted and degraded object that is transmitted from one State to the other. You claim there is a kind of moral miasma or malaria produced by child labor in factory that somehow is mysteriously borne to far distant States affecting them disastrously. No sensible man takes any such view of it.

But we do know that a poor unfortunate prostitute, traveling from State to State, is a firebrand. We do know that lottery tickets awakes and intensifies the gambling spirit. Transmitted from one State to the other produce a disastrous effect. We do know that a misbranded article in interstate commerce that deceives the purchaser is disastrous in its effect. But in the name of reason and common sense who will claim that a man in the State of Washington buying a shirt made out of South Carolina manufactured cotton is morally debased because a child carried water in the factory where it was made?

Now, what is the use for us to be so absurd? But I will admit that this bill should stand if the States in the Union had no power to correct the evil if, as has been said by some, the quivering flesh and bones of the children were being ground in order to squeeze out dividends for some southern stockholder. There is not a word of it true I say; but if it was true, and if my State aided and abetted this fictitious demon who was grinding the flesh and bones of children under the guise of law, I do not know but what I would forego any fear I might have for the application of this principle to the State. But it is not so. The proponent of this bill, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], read into the Record the fact that every State in this Union has a child-labor law except only two or three.

Have we gotten to the pass that in our own domestic affairs in the States the moral sense of the State as a unit is not more than the moral sense of unit representation here? Let the gentlemen who are so loud mouthed in their advocacy of a remedy for poor suffering childhood, which is not invoked in this bill, go back home and start a crusade within their State which would remove the necessity of such legislation.

I shall not pretend to say what the conditions are in some States, for I do not know. I can only speak for my State, and I state here positively that it has been progressive. From the time manufacture started in South Carolina step by step we have kept pace with the manifestation of a necessity for legislation to protect children. What I claim for my State is I believe true of every State, but the final plea that I am making before this body is this: I will grant you that a fire in a chimney is a good thing, it is necessary for the warmth and comfort of the inhabitants, but I have very little respect for the judgment of a man who will set his house on fire and burn it down in order to get warm.

We have every facility under the State law to protect the children of that State, and we are doing it. The thing that I fear and dread is, if you have the right to divorce manufacture from its local and domestic qualities and to connect it up with the finished article when it enters interstate commerce, and then by invoking the power of this Government to prohibit, and through prohibition to penalize the industries of a State, until it shall do as Congress says it shall do, then all incentive to local protection has been removed and State rights destroyed.

In conclusion I say it is a mere matter of theory, but there is not a Senator on the floor of the Senate who believes that the Constitution, as we now love it and revere it, would ever have become the organic law of the land if those who framed it dreamed that the carefully guarded delegated power granted to it would have been so misinterpreted, and the false ideas of some humanitarians be invoked, to the undoing of the State in its rights. It never would have been ratified.

I would infinitely rather see the children of my State suffer some of these evils that have been portrayed than to see their rights as citizens of the State destroyed. I do not want some Federal officer poking his nose in the domestic affairs of my State.

I repeat, I am in favor of child-labor legislation, but I predict that the passage of this bill in the year 1916 will mark that turning point in the dual form of our government, which means the absolute undoing of the splendid system upon which has been built up the wonderful civilization, progress, and power that we now have.

Mr. LANE obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Before the Senator from South Carolina takes his seat I wish to ask him one question in reference to a statement I understood him to make. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] asked the Senator from South Carolina whether there were any exemptions in the South Carolina statutes as to the work of orphan children.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I said I was not familiar with it; that my attention had not been called to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. My information is that there are no such exemptions. Furthermore, the statute of South Carolina has a 60-hour limitation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to state, if the Senator from Oregon will allow me, that I think it is to the credit of my State that it really makes no such exemption. I think those children are entitled to every consideration that other children are entitled to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the Senator from South Carolina, and that is the reason why I asked him the question.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, the last remark made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] before he was questioned by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] interested me. He said in a general way that if this bill became a law the year 1916 would mark an epoch and the parting of the ways; that the interference of the General Government in the affairs of the States in this matter would be in the nature of a calamity. I do not know just what crisis the Senator had in mind when he made that remark. When we look over the country, however, we find such a condition to exist that if this bill were in any way to ameliorate or change it it would indeed mark an epoch and the parting of the ways, and it would be a good and profitable parting of some of the ways for the people of this country.

Sixty-five per cent of the people of this country, it is said, do not own one inch of the earth's surface. They are without means, they are without any financial or landed interest in the Government. By our method of government, under the Constitution then we have arrived at a condition of affairs where the majority of the people have no more tangible interest in the welfare of this country than a Chinaman; they have a sentimental attachment, perhaps, to the place wherein they were born, a kindly feeling for their neighbors, but they have no material interest whatever. A government which was conducted in the interests of its people, if it was a good government, would so manage its affairs that a fair majority at least of the people would be reasonably successful and not homeless or landless.

I do not think we would have anything to regret if we parted the ways, if the parting betters bad conditions.

So far as the Constitution is concerned, if under the Constitution which was handed down to us by our forefathers, if the general condition of the people and of the country has not benefited and it is never to go on in a way which will be of benefit to the majority of the people under its terms the Constitution is anything but a sacred document, and fails to appeal to me.

I have this much respect for it. So long as it answers the needs of the people and guards and protects the general interest and welfare of the people of the country who have to live under it, it is a good Constitution, a good organic act, and I am willing to live under it. But the minute and just as soon and as long as it stands in the way of and is an interference with the prosperity and happiness of the people of the country, then that soon would I alter it to the extent that was necessary to make it meet the needs of the people of the country.

In respect to child labor, if it was found that with the methods of working children, the children of the poor between the tender ages, say, of 3 or 4 years and the ages of 14 or 16, if such employment acts to deteriorate the child's health and impinge upon his or her physical condition or lowers his vitality, either mentally, morally, or physically, such employment is an evil, nor do I care what State tolerates it nor whether it is or is not confined to one State alone. If it causes children to become weak in their constitutions to the extent that they do not grow into good, healthy, vigorous men and women, prepared to carry on functions of the race or the affairs of the Nation to the best interests of the Nation; if the girls are unfitted to become ideal mothers, if you please, not just plain ordinary mothers, but good, healthy, vigorous mothers of healthy, vigorous children; and if it lowers the vitality of the future fathers of children yet unborn so that the general average of the health of the people of this country becomes lowered below a fair and reasonable standard, it affects the interest of every other State in the Union. It is not confined to that State, and no State has the right to rear back on its heels and demand its State rights privilege of continuing a course which will prove a blight on the Nation, brought on, if you please, upon other States where they have a higher sense of responsibility to the Nation at large and adopt and follow better standards.

Personally, I do not care what the Constitution says about it. The arguments indulged here regarding the difference which exists between tweedledee and tweedledum in respect to the powers of the Constitution when a condition exists where children are called upon to render up in their youth the vitality which they will need in other years, in old age, in mature age, to the general disadvantage of the entire Nation, do not interest me. If the States are not big enough and brave enough and honest enough to the Nation and with themselves to make that change, then the General Government, as a matter of self-defense, should, as a duty, step in and say to them, "Here, we will take this over for the general benefit of the entire community." The individual sacrifices his personal rights and for sake of peace allows the law to rule over him; he no longer takes his six-shooter or his bowie knife, as they did in the good old days, and settle it with you on the street corner, and the man who was quickest with his gun or who was handiest with his bowie knife, although he may not have been the better man, won the battle. There is a higher sense of duty to society than settling private wrongs in that way.

There is no question of doubt that the driving of children at a time in their lives when their bones are soft hampers them for life. No boy or girl who is 16 years old as a matter of physical fact, as a matter of scientific truth, has become fully formed physically; they have not developed into manhood or womanhood. There are certain portions of his or her bony system which have not become hardened, which are still cartilaginous; and the younger he or she may be the less is their osseous system hardened, the softer it is, and the less are they able to stand up under hard labor; they can not do it. It was not intended by nature or nature's God that they should stand it; and we are flying right in the face of and contrary to the laws governing the formation of the human body and its maturing processes when we put upon a child, boy or girl, the labor which requires the hardened tissues and the firmness of the bony system of maturity to bear up under its strain. Every anatomist who has ever dissected a human body knows that from the day men are born until the day they die their bony system, their osseous system, becomes harder year by year. In the earliest stages of growth it is too soft to stand the strain of heavy weights, or its own weight, for that matter, or laborious work; in old age it becomes so hard that it is brittle and may break like glass; but there is a period after 21 years of age, or about that time, when the tissues are fully formed and able to bear up under a remarkable amount of strain. Until a person arrives at the age of 45 the human system remains in about that condition. After that it begins to harden rapidly and to go down, finally becoming too hard to be of use for laborious toll.

The law of nature controverts and disproves any theory of any State or any lover of State rights or any constitutional lawyer that the child should have the privilege and the freedom of breaking down its tissues before it arrives at maturity. I do not see from a humanitarian or from a physical standpoint or view of the question how there can be any dispute of this proposition.

Only a few years ago I read in the newspapers a story—and it might have been exaggerated—to the effect that little children in a canning factory in New York—little children 3 and 4 years of age—were put to stringing beans, peeling tomatoes, or plucking the stems from some fruit or vegetable, whose little fingers became raw and bleeding in the process and who had to be whipped to keep them to their tasks. That is no way to treat a child; it is no way to treat, as some one said here the other day, a horse, or an ox, or an ass, or any other young living organism.

It will not work even with machinery. Take a piece of machinery and set it to hard work the day after it has been built—every machinist and every mechanic knows that if a locomotive or an engine of any sort is started off under full headway it will burn out its bearings or "rack" itself to pieces and will not run smoothly until it becomes "set" to its place, to its proper relation of one part to another, but will burn out and destroy itself if not carefully nursed along; but you can help it along gently until it gets its gait, until it is lined up and accommodates itself, one piece to another. After it has done that you may have a piece of machinery, like the steamboat engine of the old days, that you can with reasonable care run a lifetime if you keep the bearings well oiled and in line or, as the engineers call it, "running true." It is the same with the human being. There is no escape from the fact; there is no exception to it in all nature—none—and there never will be.

That State which plumes itself on its State rights, if it does not recognize this principle, will go down in the race with the other States which see further and see clearer and know better.

One Senator was asked the question as to whether, if this bill passed and became a law, it would interfere with the boys who carry water in the coal mines, and he with great glee accepted the answer that it would do so. It would interfere with boys carrying water in a coal mine, and it ought to interfere and prevent boys from working hundreds of feet underground in a tunnel. The Senator said he had never worked in a tunnel. When I was a young fellow I never worked on a farm, but I did work for one season in a mine, part of the time in a tunnel. The ventilation is bad; it is wet underfoot and it is damp overhead. It is a place to put a child 14, 15, or 16 years old. You can not develop a child into a healthy, grown human being under such conditions. Children need plenty of food, but as much as they need that they need fresh air and sunshine and a chance to grow into normal human beings, with a fair, decent, just chance to acquire strength to resist the invasion of disease in later life.

The trouble with the mills—although I have had but little experience with them—is that the child does not get sunshine; it does not get enough vital outdoor air. The other trouble is that in its formative stage of life, when it is tender and its resisting powers are low, the child comes in contact with the exhalations of and the diseases of older persons or of some diseased person among them, and it inhales them and incorporates them into its system at the very time when it is least able to resist them.

So long as the Constitution of the United States acts and is able to work in the general interests and for the general benefit of the people of the country, it is a good ordinance, it is a beneficial ordinance, and I am willing to burn incense and pour oil before its altar and kow-tow to it; but just the minute that it interferes with the welfare of the general community and the general interests of the people of the country, and causes them to suffer or to deteriorate, to go down, to descend to a lower and a lower degree of health and prosperity, and one which will eventually wipe them out, if you please, then I am not for the Constitution. I am willing to vote for anything that will put this evil influence off the people and lift them out from under its shade. I am ready and willing to go further than that. I am willing to say unpleasant things about it and to question it, if you please, and the authority of any court of justice which would fasten that condition onto the backs of the people of this country.

I do not think we need worry about the Constitution. The courts have always been very tender of the constitutional rights behind which special interests hide. The Constitution has been a bulwark, not at all times for the general benefit of the people of this country, but more for the benefit of the few who have been extremely reverent of it and very active in making profit out of conditions which it has allowed to prevail and bear down upon the mass of the people.

The other day, for instance—Saturday, I think it was—the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] called up a bill from the calendar which provided that the Indians in his State might have the power of referendum in the appointment of the superintendents who manage their affairs. It was objected to, I believe, by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and he placed in the Record a letter from one of our eminent citizens, a certain Joseph H. Choate, of Massachusetts, which criticized such legislation.

I also introduced a bill for the protection of the Indians, allowing them the right, if you please, to manage their own affairs. I did that for the reason that the Indians have no right to go into a court of law or to employ an attorney to protect their property; they have no voice in the selection of their superintendents.

They are not allowed to sell their property or a cow or a calf or a steer or a horse without the consent of their superintendent; and if somebody steals such an animal from them they have no right to bring a writ of recovery, or whatever you attorneys call it, to get possession of it again. Their condition has become deplorable. Some of us thought if we could relieve them from these supervisors, this sort of management of their affairs, now permitted under the Constitution, under whose gentle guidance they are dying like flies and losing their property as fast as it can be taken from them, that we would be doing a good, humane, kind thing, without prejudice to anyone, except, perhaps, to those who are preying upon them. When those bills were introduced, however, this eminent attorney, who, I think, is the president—the honorary president—of the Indians' rights or some such association, who has been holding that position and doing nothing much while the property and the health and the lives of the Indians have been squandered, saw fit to protest against it as unwise and vicious legislation.

A short time ago one of the physicians on one of the reservations sent in a report to the Indian Bureau here calling attention to the condition of some of those Indians. It should have been, and no doubt was, or it ought to have been, brought to the attention of this gentleman who was the honorary president of an association which purported to look out for their rights. I want to incorporate this report in the RECORD as part of my remarks. The writer shows—and he is an intelligent, capable man, and I know enough about medicine and the facts to know that he tells the truth, for I was upon this reservation myself—that if the methods now employed are not done away with, if they are not radically changed, the end is in sight, and within a few years every one of these wards of the Government will be dead from some disease which he never should have contracted and would not have contracted under anything like an honest and intelligent management of himself and his affairs. Members of Indian families, some of them worth $200,000 in their tribal holdings I am informed, are eating out of swill barrels, eating aborted calves, if you please—calves whose mothers incidentally or accidentally have fed upon "spurred" or ergoted rye—and eating cattle which have perished in swamps. They are glad to get even such things for food. Such are the conditions in some instances which happen to people "constitutionally" governed, who are worth thousands of dollars each in lands and other property and to others whose money has been used to the extent of millions of dollars, perhaps, for irrigation schemes that are of no benefit to them at all but are undertaken for the benefit of the white man.

Now, let us take our own white children. The Indians are far removed. There are but few Indians who have an opportunity to say anything to the Members of this body; but every Indian who has consumption, every Indian who dies of tuberculosis, every Indian boy and every Indian girl who has trachoma—an almost incurable disease of the membranes of the eyelids—is a source of infection to his white brother, to his paleface brother, yea, even to the children and grandchildren of the Great White Father who resides in Washington and who is supposed to preside over their affairs. It may come home to any of us here, if not directly, at least indirectly, for the disease is easily carried into other communities, to lower the vitality, or kill thousands of people who are blameless, who are innocent, who do not even know that such conditions exist. And the little children in the cotton mill, black or white, with their little faces pressed, as I have seen them, against the bars of the cotton mill, peering out at you in idle curiosity as you go by, with their soft bones and their unformed tissues, are contracting a tendency to tuberculosis and living under conditions which lower their vitality and resisting powers. Through these children the elements of disease may come home to your children and your grandchildren, or to mine. I say we have no right, constitutional or otherwise, to permit children to labor under such conditions. It is a crime to do so; it is wrong; and it is our duty to stop it.

So far as the Constitution goes it is just as good as it is and not one whit better than it works out to be. I have no veneration for any ordinance that prevents a great government from doing what is right by its people, or respect for any man's theories as to how unfortunate it would be if we should go ahead despite it and do that thing which we were chosen to do for the people. If it is right, I would do it regardless of constitutions or the constitutional cavilings of anybody. The general health and well-being of the community at large are of greater importance than any constitution or any author of any constitution, for that matter.

If we hark back to the days when the Constitution was drafted and adopted, we will find that the gentlemen who were talking most about freedom in this country and about making this into a great free nation, were slaveholders, buying human beings off the block as cheaply as they could get them; and later along they and their descendants breeding them and to them and selling the crossbreeds into slavery and standing pat upon their constitutional right to do so.

The Constitution and its limitations is a good thing to argue about, but the general welfare of the people of this country is a greater thing and more imminent, and if this body does not take cognizance of general conditions as they exist in this country and take note how far it is being injured and by what it is being injured, and undertake to cure it of the economic diseases which afflict it, cure its ulcers and remedy its defects and build it into a Nation of men and women who can fairly acquire a reasonable living and home-owning interest in it, who are strong physically, who can think clearly and honestly, and be above self-interest, it will go down; it will be whipped by the Japs or by the Germans or anybody else except perhaps the Fiji Islanders, and it will deserve its fate.

There is a larger and broader aspect to this question than constitutional rights and interference with the dicta of some court and fine whittlings of law points here and the interpretation of somebody of long ago who knew not what the country was coming to or what this day would bring forth.

I now ask that the report to which I have referred be printed entire in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
BLACKFEET AGENCY,
Browning, Mont., January 21, 1916.

COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I beg to submit the following report on medical conditions of the natives of the Blackfeet Reservation with suitable recommendation:

During my year's work with the natives I have traveled approximately 1,800 miles by horse, visiting the various homes and administering the sick, and have had occasion to furnish 4,000 separate treatments during this time. My trips have taken me to practically all portions of the reservation, both in summer and in winter. The portion of the reservation north of Browning is inhabited mostly by mixed bloods. The reserve to the south of Browning includes the major portion of the full bloods. The full-blood population of this reservation for 1915 is estimated at 1,224, and those more than one-half blood at 1,147.

I had the pleasure to accompany Inspector F. B. Linnen and Supt. C. L. Ellis to the native full-blood cabins on their recent tour of inspection. From that trip and my year's experience I conclude that 90 per cent of the full bloods are suffering from trachoma and perhaps 75 per cent are suffering from various stages of tuberculosis. This estimate at first seemed impossible or unfair, but when considering how those suffering from these highly infectious diseases congregate like cattle, men, women, and children, young and old, in mostly one-room cabins without sanitary provisions of any kind, using the same towels, breathing the same vitiated atmosphere, sleeping in the same beds, using the same bed clothing without change, and eating from interchangeable utensils year after year, is it any wonder that we should find a wholesale infection amongst this class of inhabitants?

I am sincere in my endeavors to put these conditions before you in a proper light, for unless something substantial, something adequate, is done for their welfare that will fully meet the needs, what is the use of planning for their future welfare, for without the tenant we will have no need for the house.

How long can this wholesale infection last? How long will it be before all of the full bloods are entirely blind or hopelessly tubercular? The question that naturally rises is, What shall we do and how can we remedy this deplorable condition?

We have erected here a hospital building to accommodate 10 females and 10 male tubercular patients, and imperfectly equipped. It is but a drop as it were in a bucket. Who will we select to put in there out of this vast reserve of patients? Shall it be the young and tender or the old and infirm? The incipient, middle, advanced or those in the last stages—the disseminators of contagion? And after we have filled our 20 beds and made our selection, what are we to do with the balance of the tubercular and trachoma cases? Then we have, due to their manner of living and weakened condition, many acute and chronic medical diseases and surgical complaints, which can not be handled at their homes. These cases must have daily, constant supervision to win the battle over disease. Under our present system the doctors and nurses can do little but relieve cursory symptoms, and the calls are so many that it is difficult to do even that.

There are two plans which appear for handling these conditions, one is a staff of field doctors and nurses to visit daily their reconstructed homes and their occupants; and the other plan is to have the cases under daily supervision in proximity to the hospital. I should say that the first plan is highly inadequate. It is expensive. Due to the vast distances to travel it would require a large staff and then constant medical supervision would not be maintained.

As to the hospital plan, I would respectfully suggest that a surgical and medical addition be added to the present tubercular unit and that the whole be modernly and adequately equipped. That no more additions be added to the present capacity of the tubercular hospital building until the needs of the service be developed, but that 30 or 40 cabins be erected separately in conjunction with the hospital building, and the grounds to be used by entire families for the different stages of tuberculosis or for individual needs. These cabins should be erected under suitable plans by the medical officer, expressly for handling invalids under the unit system.

The children at the boarding school showing signs of tuberculosis need not be robbed of their educative facilities; they could be furnished suitable quarters and attendants and so treated while living at the school, while the hospital and cabin would be used by those not of school age and those over school age.

The school should be continuous; that is, pupils should be kept there until they finish their education, so as they are not subjected to reinfection by returning to the old hovels and conditions to live. Taking for granted that these recommendations can be complied with, what are we going to do with those homes which are unsuitable for habitation? Amongst the full bloods, say, we have 300 cabins of one room and which are so poorly constructed and such hotbeds of contagion that reinfection is certain. I should say that they should be destroyed by the sure cleanser, fire, and that includes the time-ridden and loathsome bed furnishings. If they should rebuild on their individual ranches, this would mean new cabins and bed clothing, at least.

Conclusions:

I most heartily recommend that these school children at the boarding school be continuously retained and that suitable arrangement to take care of tubercular children be arranged.

That a surgical and medical addition be erected in connection with the tubercular hospital with 20 beds. That 30 or 40 individual cabins be erected in connection with the hospital for families of married invalids and dangerous or other cases and the whole be planned by the medical officer and modernly equipped.

As the patients at the hospital will need many nurses, I suggest that a training school with a three-year course be provided, not only furnishing nurses in an inexpensive manner, but at the same time educating many adolescents in the higher medical knowledge.

That new cabins be erected for full bloods and bed clothing supplied to take the place of those needing immediate destruction by fire. That the physicians receive the pay and recognition accorded them in the United States Public Health Service, so that competent surgeons and medical officers can be obtained and induced to remain.

Very respectfully,

CLIFTON MEARS ROSIN,
Agency Physician.

Mr. TILLMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the Senator from South Carolina proceeds, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a question before he leaves the Chamber.

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator from Oregon a question before he retires. When the bill to which the Senator called attention was before the Senate the other day I introduced the letter from Hon. Joseph H. Choate which is found in the Record of that day's proceedings. Mr. Choate, as I understand, is connected with an organization which is supposed to care for the Indians, or at least to inquire into their condition and recommend methods of amelioration.

Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon paints a terrible picture of the horrible condition and suffering of at least a portion of the Indians who are supposed to be wards of the Federal Government. I will ask the Senator if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the two committees of Congress are not inquiring into and looking after those conditions with a view of making them better? It seems to me almost incredible that the conditions the Senator has painted can be true. If they are true, certainly we owe the Indians a duty that we ought not to shirk, but that we ought to perform without fear and without hesitation.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say, in reply to the Senator, that if the detail were made to me singly to alleviate and cure the condition of the Indians of this country, I would not want a better helper than the Senator from New Hampshire, if once he saw the conditions which exist.

I know the Senator did not introduce the letter to which reference has been made with any design to discredit anyone, but the conditions to which I have alluded have continued to exist for years and years under all administrations. The present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and his predecessors no doubt, have been kept submerged by a mass of detail. With thousands of employees under him the commissioner is unable to supervise the Indians individually, and is fed upon talk from his subordinates of the great improvement that is going on and that he is making; he gets the bighead, and therefore, I think, does not realize or discover the actual conditions. I do not believe that the majority of those controlling Indian affairs are dishonest, but I think the system is wrong. The system which they have inherited and adopted and hug to their bosoms proclaims that the Indian must learn to be self-supporting, and then handles his affairs in such a way that he can not do it. Their theory is right and proper on the face of it. It sounds all right to say when an Indian appeals for something to eat, "Go to work and earn it," "In the sweat of your brow," and so forth, but he can get no work; he has not a hoe nor a pick, nor a 10-cent piece to buy one with, nor does he get even a package of congressional garden seed to raise a crop of turnips as a food supply in order that he may live during the winter.

That condition has gone on year after year. Members of the Senate and of the other House are submerged with a vast mass of work, and, as in connection with this bill, by considerations of constitutionality. Long arguments and speeches, many of them, lasting hours, have been made, with no two Senators agreeing upon the issue, until we are buried in details, immaterial, if you please, in the long run, to the people of this country, in my opinion. In the meantime little children are working, their little fingers bleeding, stringing beans in the canning factories in the sweltering heat under which we are suffering now, a heat that melts our collars; they are working in the cotton factories, North and South, wherever they are located, while our attention is distracted.

The condition has gone on. I have called attention to it many times since I have been here, and tried to butt a hole in the stone wall, but have probably failed to make much impression on it, but in a way have bruised my head a bit and brought on myself criticisms from lachrymose officials and bogus philanthropists.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not mean to ask the Senator a question about the pending bill, but what I was solicitous about was why it happens that this great, rich, powerful Government permits conditions to exist so far as the Indian wards of the country are concerned, such as the Senator has pictured. It does seem to me that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, aided, as he is, by the committees of Congress, ought to be able to provide some relief that would meet the circumstances which the Senator claims to exist. Of course, I suppose that that applies only to a small portion of the Indians. I have been told that very many of the Indians are exceedingly rich and that they do not need the benefactions of the Government, but even if a small proportion of them are in the condition the Senator has pictured there certainly ought to be some remedy for it.

We of New England know but little about the Indian question. When the late Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, was connected with the Committee on Indian Affairs he took a very deep interest in the subject; and when the late Senator Platt, of Connecticut, was connected with the Committee on Indian Affairs, he likewise took a deep interest in the subject; but I do not know really very much about it myself, and I think the people of my section of the country know so little about it that they would like to be informed.

The Senator, I think, introduced a bill to abolish the Office of Indian Affairs. Is that because the Senator thinks the present commissioner is incompetent—

Mr. LANE. No; no more or less than others who preceded him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or is not attending to his duties? Or does the Senator think there is a better way of administering the affairs of those poor people?

Mr. LANE. I think there is a better way of administering their affairs. The system is wrong. The present commissioner, I think, is doing probably about as well and about the same as any who has preceded him, and is doing probably as well as anyone who will succeed him, but the system has grown into an institution and is an expensive and heartless humbug.

Now, let me read a few brief extracts from a report by an intelligent and competent physician connected with the Indian Service, to which I have already referred. He says:

During my year's work with the natives I have traveled approximately 1,800 miles—

This report is dated January 21, 1916.

Mr. CLAPP. From what reservation is it written?

Mr. LANE. It is written from Browning, Mont., the Blackfeet Agency. I will say, in passing, that anyone familiar with the conditions could have truthfully written such a report as this at any time during the last 20 years, perhaps, but 50 years ago the same condition did not exist. I know the history of the Blackfeet Indians. My people mined in the Blackfeet country. They were then buffalo-eating Indians; they were mountain Indians, and were healthy, sound, able-bodied men and women. Now, then, the writer says:

I have traveled approximately 1,800 miles by horse, visiting the various homes—

I would not be surprised, I will interject here, if the publication of this report may lose this physician his job. Publicity given to a report of this kind is not relished by the Indian Bureau, and it may lose the physician his place; but if there is any move of that kind made, however, I am going to ask the Senate, and I am going to ask the Senator from New Hampshire especially, to help protect this man and to see to it that he is not removed for telling these truths.

During my year's work with the natives I have traveled approximately 1,800 miles by horse, visiting the various homes and administering to the sick, and have had occasion to furnish 4,000 separate treatments during this time. My trips have taken me to practically all portions of the reservation, both in summer and in winter. The portion of the reservation north of Browning is inhabited mostly by mixed bloods. The reserve to the south of Browning includes the major portion of the full bloods. The full-blood population of this reservation for 1915 is estimated at 1,224 and those more than one-half blood at 1,147.

I had the pleasure to accompany Insp. F. B. Linnen and Supt. C. L. Ellis to the native full-blood cabins on their recent tour of inspection. From that trip and my year's experience I conclude that 90 per cent of the full bloods are suffering from trachoma—

An incurable eye disease—and perhaps 75 per cent are suffering from various stages of tuberculosis.

Due, if you please, in large part to a lack of sufficient nourishing food and fresh air to enable them to repel it.

This estimate at first seemed impossible or unfair, but when, considering how those suffering from these highly infectious diseases congregate like cattle—men, women, and children, young and old—in mostly one-room cabins, without sanitary provisions of any kind, using the same towels, breathing the same vitiated atmosphere, sleeping in the same beds, using the same bed clothing, without change, and eating from interchangeable utensils year after year, is it any wonder that we should find a wholesale infection amongst this class of inhabitants.

I interject here the remark that they are doing that from necessity and not from choice; that they have not the means wherewith to buy a pair of blankets, to build a house, or to buy a towel, if you please. Many of them sleep, not on blankets but on a pile of rags, herded into one-room cabins for the reason that they have not the money to build a two-room cabin, herded together for the reason they are cold when it is many degrees below zero in the winter, and they congregate to keep from freezing.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LANE. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon to what tribe of Indians that applies?

Mr. LANE. I am talking now of the Piegans, commonly called Blackfeet.

Mr. STERLING. Then the letter from which the Senator reads does not refer to conditions generally among the Indians?

Mr. LANE. No; but I say it is rather characteristic, and you will find the same condition elsewhere in many places—some worse and some better.

Mr. STERLING. I just want to say, Mr. President, that I think the picture is a little bit overdrawn so far as the Indians in South Dakota are concerned. We have about 20,000 Indians in that State; and while perhaps their condition is not of the best, and it might be greatly improved, yet it is not so deplorable as has been pictured by the Senator's correspondent.

Mr. LANE. No; I think it is not. He is not reporting on South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Let me say further that as to poverty among the Indians, no such condition exists as is there described. They have their allotments of land, and in addition to that, of course, nearly every Indian has his interest or share in the tribal funds, and these are allotted to him from time to time; so that there is comparatively little poverty. You rarely hear of an Indian that is deprived of the necessities of life, either in the way of food or of clothing, because of lack of means to purchase them.

Mr. LANE. I am quite willing to concede that their condition is better in the State in part represented by the Senator; but his colleague I think will inform him, if he will inquire of him, that those Indians have been swindled and robbed out of their property in many different ways. I was calling attention to a condition which can exist under the Constitution. I was merely quoting this instance—a true one—for the reason that the bill of mine, which in part was for the relief of these people, was criticized by Mr. Choate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator from Oregon, and also to the Senator from New Hampshire, that we have a large number of Chippewa Indians in the northern part of our State. They occupy a reservation there known as the White Earth Reservation, which consists of some of the finest agricultural lands in the State. They have large allotments made to them of 160 acres each, but they do not get along, for the reason that they will not work. Instead of working and improving their allotments and cultivating them, they lease them out to the white settlers there, and they are landlords. They will not do any work, but they hang around and do a little hunting and trapping and wait for their annuities every year. You will find very few of them that have taken hold to improve their farms or to do any real work. The misfortune of those Indians is that they are utterly unwilling to work. What little work they do is done by the women, not by the men.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in response to the Senator I will say that the male Indian never did work. He was never taught to work. He was a hunter. He was a warrior. He considered it beneath him to work. Now, the wise gentlemen who have managed the affairs of this country and have managed the affairs of the Indian, not recognizing that fact, overlooking the fact that the Indian for thousands of years has been a communist, that he never worked, that he lived by the chase and by war, slapped him on a farm and told him to get busy and make a living, when he did not know how to do it, and they did not teach him or furnish him seed; they did not even give him a hoe.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will yield for just one word there. In our State they gave the Indians oxen with which to cultivate their lands, and they butchered the oxen and ate them.

Mr. LANE. To be sure. Any Indian would do it, and they might have known it. If they had given him a span of deer or buffalo, he would have eaten them quicker if he was hungry, because that is what he had always lived on. He had not raised potatoes and corn and other vegetables and knew nothing about farming; yet they put him to farming and gave him oxen and turned him loose on the raw soil, the handling of which he knew nothing about. The majority of the white farmers of this country make but a bare living farming, and an Indian with no experience, never having been a farmer, naturally would fail when you put him right up against the one thing which he is sure to fail at and at which many others fail; and he did fail.

Just the other day you passed, and to-day you confirmed, the conference report on the bill raising a lot of troops to protect the Mexican border, militia from all over the country, some going to the front without proper shoes, I am told, and with all kinds of inefficient preparation.

If the Government had understood the Indian, and had taken him and put him in the Cavalry, a roving cavalry similar to the Arabs, you would have had a body of men that are born fighters, that can live off the country, and that would have been able to protect this country from any Mexican invasion or any other, without drafting one white man, and we would have had a healthy race of people. You would have had people whose families would have been healthy, and incidentally you could have given him some sort of education; you could have rented his land out to the whites who do know how to use it, and have some sort of a property left for him when he returned from protecting the country against invasion. But you have put him to farming; and if you had put me to farming at the same time you did the Indian, I would have eaten your oxen, too, and I would have quit your farm. I would have preferred to do something else. I would not have made a success of it, and most people do not.

Now, I will go on and read further from this report. It does not refer to Minnesota or South Dakota. I think the condition is not any too good in Minnesota. The Chippewas have been here, and also I have a lot of correspondence from them. If the Senator is interested in knowing what the Chippewas think of the management of their affairs, I will read some of these letters into the Record; but I am not on that subject now. I am reading about one set of poor people and there are others equally unfortunate, and I can bring the evidence here to prove it. This is the report of a physician on one special reservation. It is a truthful report, and I can verify it and stand ready to do it, for I have been on that reservation. I have not been upon the Chippewa Reservation.

He says:

I am sincere in my endeavors to put these conditions before you in a proper light, for unless something substantial, something adequate is done for their welfare that will fully meet the needs what is the use of planning for their future welfare, for without the tenant we will have no need for the house.

How long can this wholesale infection last? How long will it be before all of the full bloods are entirely blind or hopelessly tubercular? The question that naturally arises is what shall we do and how can we remedy this deplorable condition?

And then he goes on to give his idea of what that shall be.

I have merely called attention to this as an illustration of the manner in which the Government, under the Constitution, has managed the affairs of a helpless people who are deprived of their rights and even their lives under it, and are forbidden to employ an attorney to go into court to defend them. What will they do to the white children if it means a profit to treat them in the same way? We are deteriorating and destroying, and, in fact, we have deteriorated and have nearly destroyed the Indians of this country—a hardy native race—and we will do the same to the children of the white race and to the colored race if the General Government is denied the power to step in at any time that it is necessary to do so and stop the deadly work and lift off the blight that bears down on their young lives and makes them inefficient and defective when they come to the age of maturity. I have no great amount of patience with the mincing of words as to whether or not the lives of children can be measured and parceled out under the terms of the Constitution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, has not the General Government control over these poor Indians?

Mr. LANE. Oh, yes; the General Government has control over them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who is to blame for all this, then?

Mr. LANE. Oh, Congress is to blame—the Senator himself, and myself, and the rest of us.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not on the Indian Affairs Committee.

Mr. LANE. We make laws here, and bureaus flout the laws we make. The bureaus are running this Government. Congress is not running it. Congress gets up and talks bravely about its functions and privileges, and then a little bureau official down town somewhere says what really shall be done, and it is done as he prescribes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator. The Senator has been on the Indian Affairs Committee, however. I am not on it.

Mr. LANE. Well, I have been busy since I have been on that committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. And I think the Senator ought to find the remedy to take care of these blind children.

Mr. LANE. I put in a bill to remedy it, and I brought down criticism upon the remedy I presented, which I thought was a fairly good one, and that is why I have discussed the subject at this time.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, before I begin my speech, I want to say I am glad the Senator from Oregon has found something new to excite the sympathies of Senators besides the poor children in the southern cotton mills.

Mr. President, during the last few days I have received numerous letters and telegrams from cotton-mill owners in South Carolina, all asking me to defeat the Keating bill, if possible, and if not, that I get an amendment added making the bill inoperative for three years. I have stated before that I was opposed to this bill and have given the reason for my opposition, but I want the cotton-mill owners specially and the public generally to understand that if I believed that Congress had the right to legislate on the subject of child labor, I would heartily favor its doing so.

My position is this: Congress has no power to legislate on child labor unless it usurps it; but if it determines to act regardless of constitutional limitations, it ought to act effectively. The quibbling and selfishness of cotton-mill owners make me almost willing to vote for the Keating bill despite my honest conviction of its unconstitutionality—and I have so told them in my replies to their letters. The reasons they advance against the measure lead me to think that they oppose it, not because it sets a bad and dangerous precedent but because it reduces their dividends. I have been shocked to see men in South Carolina—rich, intelligent, well-educated men—who were willing to swell their dividends at the expense of little children. The veil of sophistry in their letters could not hide their heartlessness. Their plea, stripped of verbiage, is "Let the children toll that we may live in luxury." And yet we wonder at the spread of socialism and the increasing hostility of labor toward capital.

The greed and inhumanity of capital on the one hand and the blind, unreasoning hatred of labor on the other is the one dangerously significant fact of the twentieth century. What it will finally lead to no man can tell, but it looks like we are traveling toward socialism—if not anarchy. Latter-day politicians are not meeting the problem like statesmen. Their cowardice and selfishness are lamentable. They are as subservient to organized labor as the leaders of 20 years ago were to concentrated wealth. We have repudiated the leadership of the representatives of capital only to accept that of the representatives of organized labor. The Congress of the United States trembles every time the labor unions frown. The average politician of to-day is more afraid of an adverse vote than a real man is of a grizzly bear. I believe in organized labor because the alliance of big business and the Republican Party made necessary some power to combat it, but unless labor is restrained by real leaders and persuaded to act reasonably and justly instead of being fondled and slobbered over by vote seekers and demagogues, as is being done now, I shudder to think what may happen. We need statesmen with minds and hearts capable of showing to the people that labor and capital are not enemies but allies, and should be friends, and that each must be just to the other lest both suffer. Capital, with its brutal, cynical disregard for humanity, started the conflict, and labor, in self-defense, organized for the struggle. Where is the leader broad enough to bring about a lasting peace, founded on righteousness and justice and mutual understanding? However, if the fight must go on, I am for labor because capital started the trouble.

But to get back to the Keating bill. I shall advance no new reasons why it should not become law, because the arguments against it are trite, and have been presented time and again by able lawyers. I am no lawyer, but I have common sense, and good common sense is so often good law that I used to be known by the self-given title of "The cornfield lawyer of the Senate." My objection to it is based on constitutional grounds only, and therefore, if Congress legislates at all on the subject it should, in my opinion—since such action would set the precedent—do it thoroughly. Any national child-labor law, although it accomplished nothing, would still be notice to the world that the United States Government had assumed the right to enter the homes of the people and tell them how they must rear their children, and how, when, and where they must work them. That right once established all the evils of centralization would inevitably follow.

The Prussianizing of our free Republic will have begun. Little by little the Central Government would finally assume all the powers of Government, the States would sink to the level of mere counties, and Washington's control over the remainder of the country would be not less complete than Berlin's over all of Germany. Give the sentimentalists free rein, and they will make a despotism of this country. The present-day professional "uplifters of humanity" are the counterparts of the old abolitionists. Those fanatics, honest and well-meaning as they were, declared the Constitution was "a league with death and a covenant with hell," and their twentieth century successors indorse the statement by acts if not in words. The fanaticism of the abolitionists at last resulted in the Civil War, which drenched the country with blood—a result which ought to warn those who to-day lightly disregard constitutional limitations.

But, as I have said, if we are going to tear up the Constitution, making it a "mere scrap of paper," let us at least have the act produce some good results. For my part, I shall vote against the final passage of the bill, but I shall do all I can by way of amendments to make it really effective should it become a law. With this end in view, I introduced some time ago an amendment to deny interstate shipment to goods manufactured by children under 16 years of age who could not read and write. A provision of this kind would force parents to give their children at least the rudiments of an education by the time they were 16 years of age and put them in school instead of in the cotton mills.

It is not easy for me to oppose a bill which proposes to abolish child labor, and I want to put in the RECORD the reasons that impel me to do it. I am simply old-fashioned enough to believe that the United States Government is one of delegated powers, and that what it can and can not legally do is laid down in the Constitution. I am aware that this belief is fast becoming obsolete—in practice if not in theory—but I still cling to it, believing that the future happiness of the people of this Republic depends on the Central Government staying within its own sphere.

The Keating bill is unconstitutional because it invades the police powers of the States. That the ordinary police powers inherent in government are left to the States by the Constitution is elementary law, and, since they are, they are denied to the Central Government. In the very nature of things they are not subjects of concurrent jurisdiction. Being left to the States and not granted either expressly or impliedly to the United States Congress has no power to legislate with regard to them. Now, the advocates of the Keating bill openly vaunt their purpose of regulating the common, ordinary affairs of the citizens of the States. They ask support solely on the ground that under the terms of their bill Congress is to enter the homes of the people and prescribe the methods by which children must be reared, which is to say they acknowledge that their object is one which can be attained only by the exercise of police powers by Congress; that is, by the exercise of unconstitutional powers.

The supporters of the bill soon saw the logical cul-de-sac into which their zeal had led them, and at once sought to justify their program by appealing to the interstate-commerce powers of Congress. But, to use a homely but expressive phrase, "they jumped from the frying pan into the fire." It is true that Congress alone has power to regulate interstate commerce, but it is not less true that what a legislative body can not do directly it can not do indirectly. It will not be permitted to "whip the devil around the stump." In plain English, the Keating bill would utilize the interstate powers of Congress to accomplish a result not only entirely foreign to the purposes for which the powers were granted, but also a result which the advocates of the bill themselves tacitly admit to be unconstitutional. Let government by indirection be upheld by the Supreme Court, and there is no subject under heaven on which Congress can not legislate. The American Congress, like the English Parliament, will then be able to do anything "except make it rain," and the States will soon sink into mere administrative departments of the central Government—which God forbid! Better that each State should become a separate political entity, working out its own destiny alone, than that all should be governed with despotic sway from Washington. Better that the centrifugal forces should have conquered in 1865 than that the centripetal tendencies should prevail now. Better disunion than absorption. Did we escape the Scylla of separation only to rush headlong into the Charybdis of centralization?

I could view the proposed action of Congress with much more ease of mind if I had more confidence in the Supreme Court. But the Federal justices early learned the lesson that the "true office of a good judge is to enlarge his own jurisdiction." Ever since the Government was founded, the Supreme Court, hour after hour, day after day, slowly but surely has been adding to the powers of Congress at the expense of the States. Thomas Jefferson saw the trend of events: "The judiciary branch is the instrument which, working like gravity, without intermission, is to press us at last into one consolidated mass." Again:

"The judiciary of the United States is the subtle corps of sappers and miners constantly working underground to undermine the foundations of our confederated fabric." If Congress passes the bill, I have no doubt that the Supreme Court will declare it constitutional, for the "sappers and miners" will never refuse to profit by the attack of the infantry.

The Constitution has been so closely invested by the insidious work of the "pioneers" that a frontal assault by all the forces of centralization may well be successful. The Supreme Court alone, in my opinion, will finally "press us into one consolidated mass," but I want to put off what looks like the inevitable as long as possible, so I shall vote against the Keating bill. The courts may at last reach the treasurers of our liberties by the use of skeleton keys, but Congress ought not to go to their aid with a crowbar and burst in the doors.

Some Senators who feel like I do on this subject say they will give the children the benefit of the doubt, but my conscience will not permit me to do that, as much as I would like to. It is not a matter of expediency or wisdom or unwisdom, but constitutional law is involved. For the life of me, I can not see how anyone who can read the English language and understand it can for a moment argue that the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution gives Congress the power necessary to enact this bill into law. If Congressmen and Senators continue to yield to organized labor and play politics in dealing with it, being afraid of their political scalps, heaven only knows what this country will come to in time.

We have ceased to legislate in the way we know to be right and have become panderers to public opinion, or rather are making a cowardly surrender to those who vote and demand these things. I predict in time that a law will be passed making it unlawful for anything to enter interstate commerce that is not desired by the vote of labor unions. Not in these exact words, but the idea I mean to convey. If Congress can determine that goods made by children can not be shipped between States, then Congress can pass a law to the effect that goods shall not be shipped between States if they are made by blind people; and equally other absurd provisions will grow up. I am only speaking of these two as the most absurd I can think of, and each Senator for himself will find illustrations just as unreasonable and unjust as these would be.

I wish we could stop the insidious process now, but we can not. But I shall at least have the satisfaction of knowing that I had nothing to do with furthering the surrender of our constitutional rights and liberties.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] assumes that the chief interest behind this bill is the demand of labor. I think he has entirely misjudged the public sentiment of the United States in reaching that conclusion. It is true that labor naturally objects to the competition of little children, underpaid and overworked, and I believe that labor has a legitimate right to make that objection. But there is in this country a much larger sentiment, a much more disinterested sentiment, which has resolved to put a stop forever to the abuse of children in the United States by abolishing the conditions which have forced them into the factories and mines of industry.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the evil of child labor in factories is one which can reasonably be said to be beyond the power of a State to remedy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why so?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will proceed to tell the Senator. Whenever a legislature undertakes by legislation to protect the children in its factories or in its mines, it is met with the objections of powerful interests within that State—

Mr. TILLMAN. And the politicians are cowardly enough to surrender in the States, like they are going to do here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And in many cases those interests have been able, in coming before the legislature, to show that if child labor is legislated against in that particular State the industries of that State would suffer by reason of the cheaper competition from other States where child labor is permitted and tolerated. That argument has in many cases, in many States, prevented the better sentiment from passing laws for the protection of children and for the limitation of hours of work.

Mr. President, it seems to me that here in Congress, where all the States are represented, is the place where humanity should raise its voice and enter its decree that the manufactures of the United States shall be carried on not by the labor of little children but by the labor of adults or those who are approaching adult age.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will introduce a bill, and get anybody to vote for it, to do that directly by Congress, instead of indirectly and in a cowardly way, I will vote for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, it is true that this is an indirect method; but, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] pointed out this morning, and as we all know, many of the very best acts of Congress—acts which the Senator from South Carolina has, I think, voted for in some cases—have been indirect legislation, because only in that way, under the strict terms of our Constitution, could they be enacted. Moreover, the fact that this legislation is indirect is no argument against its enactment. The question is, Is it right? The question is, Is it in accordance with the popular sentiment of the United States? The question is whether it is in the interests of humanity. The question is whether it is for the good of the coming generations that little children should be permitted to ruin their lives by working in the factories overhours and under adverse conditions.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is the old higher-law doctrine which we heard in the fifties and which brought on the war.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And it will probably be heard a good deal hereafter. The people of the United States have a great respect for the Constitution. The people of the United States have not hesitated, however, to amend the Constitution when it became necessary to do so. If the Supreme Court in this case shall decide that this law is unconstitutional, I think it is a fair guess that the people will amend the Constitution so as to bring it within the power of Congress.

The evil of child labor in factories, Mr. President, is a great one. It is not an evil which is confined to the United States. It is an evil which has been grappled with by the legislatures of all civilized nations. The States are not the only authority which should have an interest in this matter. Every one of these children is not only a citizen of the State, but is to be a citizen of the United States. The Nation has an interest in his growth and in his mental and physical development.

Mr. President, it was a sad commentary on the destructive tendency of life in our industrial centers that when recruiting stations were recently opened for the Army of the United States it was found necessary to reject three out of every four men who offered to enlist. A physical examination proved them to be defective and unfit for military service, although they were young men.

England, in her experience, found that in her industrial centers there had been a great deterioration of human life as the result of life in the factory centers, largely the result of child labor. The people of the United States have made up their minds, the people of all parties have made up their minds, that if it is possible to put a stop to destructive child labor it shall be done. The people of the United States have made up their minds that the making of healthy citizens is more valuable than the manufacture of cotton, more important than the manufacture of woolen goods, and more to be desired than the prosperity of our industries. They have made up their minds to throw around the children of the United States the best conditions that are possible, and I believe that it is the response to this demand which has led Congress to undertake this rather extraordinary legislation.

I am glad, Mr. President, that the result of the consideration of the committee to which this bill was referred was that a majority of the committee reached the conclusion that the bill was constitutional. I am glad that the measure as finally reported by the committee contains such amendments to the original House bill as largely to increase the chance of its constitutionality.

I feel myself, I have felt all the time, in strong sympathy with the purposes of the legislation, and I rejoice that the discussion here has developed the fact that the very best lawyers in public life, the best lawyers in Congress, have given their opinions that this act of Congress will be held constitutional by the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this act, if passed by the present Congress, will be a fitting climax to the record made by this administration in constructive legislation and in legislation for the social good.

Mr. President, permit me in closing to recite some of the things that have already been accomplished, a remarkable record of legislative achievements under the present administration.

When this administration came into power it found a customs tariff upon the books which was not only condemned as excessive by the Democratic Party and its adherents, but it was condemned also by a large portion of the Republican Party. Within a few months that problem was grappled with and a new tariff was passed reducing the taxes in hundreds of schedules, and yet giving to the country a revenue-producing tariff.

When this administration came into power it found the country complaining because the vast revenues of the United States were raised almost entirely by taxation upon consumption, which fell heavily upon the masses of the people, and it found no tax upon the wealth of the country. An income tax provision was included in the tariff law, and that complaint was remedied and that reform was completed.

When this administration came into power it found that for years the people of the country had been complaining because of the confusion in banking and currency matters, because of the frequent recurrence of bank panics and currency stringency. To remedy this the Federal Reserve act was passed, which may be called the greatest constructive act of this generation, which I believe has for all time put an end to bank panics and money stringency.

The new administration found that there was in the business world a confusion because of the uncertainty about the provisions of the antitrust law, and because of the uncertainty as to the rights and duties of business. To remedy that the Federal Trade Commission was created, and it is already in successful operation smoothing out the uncertainties and bringing order into the business world for the protection of the legitimate business interests and the restraint of unfair methods.

When this administration came into power it was upon the heels of an administration in which there had grown up the coal-land frauds in Alaska, a scandal due to an organized effort to seize the great coal deposits of Alaska. It was a conspiracy to take them from the people and turn them over to a great syndicate. One of the early acts under this administration was to pass a law which decreed that the coal lands of Alaska shall forever remain the property of all the people of the United States and be merely leased to those who desire to operate the mines, the royalties derived from that operation to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Following that, there was enacted a law providing for the construction of Government railroads in Alaska, for the development of that vast possession of the people.

Then came the Clayton Act. When this administration came into power it was at a time when for years there had been serious complaints from the labor of the United States that the powers of the courts had been abused by the issuance of injunctions which exceeded the legitimate powers of the courts and which were used unfairly to the injury of the labor of the country. The Clayton Act not only strengthened the antitrust law of the United States but provided that court injunctions shall no longer be used to oppress and intimidate the labor of the country.

More recently, Mr. President, Congress has grappled with the great problem of rural credits. For many years we have realized that the agricultural interests of the United States lacked the power which commercial interests have to secure adequate capital regularly and easily at low rates of interest—the capital necessary for the development of agriculture. That problem was attacked, and last month the President signed an act which Congress passed, establishing a rural-credit system for the benefit of the agricultural interests of the country.

For many years the complaint has been that in our country there has been a neglect of the development of good roads to the detriment of the country districts. Congress at this session has taken the step to remedy this neglect. It has entered upon a policy to encourage the construction of good roads by going into partnership with the States and the localities for the construction of roads, furnishing a portion of the money and providing the conditions under which I believe the good-roads system will spread all over the United States.

It is only within a few years that the Department of Labor was established for the benefit of the labor interests of the country in order that those great interests might have a fair representation here in the city of Washington.

It is only within a few years that Congress passed the corrupt-practice act for the protection of our elections and for the ending of scandals which have disgraced not only presidential but congressional and senatorial elections in the past.

And so, Mr. President, I say that this bill, providing in an indirect way, it is true, but providing effectually nevertheless, for the abolition of child labor under 14 years of age and for the regulation of the labor of children under 16 years of age will be a fair culmination of the program of legislation that has already been enacted.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For a question?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. The Senator has enumerated the various benefits that have come to the country, as he alleges, through the last and the present Congress with its Democratic majority. I notice he failed to enumerate putting back the tax on sugar. I should like to have the Senator go a little further and state whether that was a good move to make, and whether it has been beneficial—the restoration of customs duty on sugar—and what he and his party propose to do to provide further revenue? Will his party propose the imposition of other customs duties in order to provide the money necessary to run the Government?

We see in the newspapers some account of a proposed revenue bill based largely upon the war, munitions of war, and so forth. I am sure the Senator believes and certainly hopes, as I do, that the European war will soon close, and hence manufacture of war munitions will cease, or practically so. The Senator knows, because he serves on a committee that has the revenues, or rather, certain appropriations of the country under its jurisdiction, that we have launched out generally into a field of many hundred millions of dollars more of expenses than we have appropriated for heretofore, more than we have received revenues for, and hence we must have enlarged and constant sources of revenue.

I would be glad if the Senator would pursue that a little further, starting back to the time of taking the tariff off sugar and putting it back again, and tell us what he proposes to do during the next four years to raise funds sufficient to run the Government with.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am not upon the committee that has charge of the revenue legislation. I think the Senator from Wyoming will have an ample opportunity to hear at a very early date from responsible representatives of the committee on this subject as to what we propose. I have no doubt that that measure proposed will raise an adequate amount of revenue to meet the program of preparedness which has been undertaken and which I think has the approval of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it does have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say this to the Senator from Wyoming: He may be assured that when that revenue bill is brought in he will find that it is not an unjust measure placed upon the consumption of the country entirely, but it will be a measure which will distribute fairly the burden of taxation and will provide an adequate part of that burden from the wealth of the country, which was never done until this Democratic administration came into power.

Mr. WARREN. Nevertheless, the Senator has not answered the question whether it was, in his opinion, right to remove the tariff on sugar; and if that was done, why it was returned, and thus place an unjust measure upon consumption of the country, as the Senator might term it. I can understand from the lack of funds why the tax should again be put upon sugar. There are many other commodities that enter into consumption as sugar does which could as well return a considerable revenue.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not urge that question now. I think he will have ample opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. WARREN. Of course I should like to hear from some Senator about that, because I have not been permitted to see, and I presume no other Republican Senator has yet been permitted to see, the proposed legislation that is to provide the revenue and what it may be based on. It seems to me, as I said before, to be largely based on the present prosperity of the country, caused by the foreign war, and upon the condition of war, which must in the nature of things be transitory and fleeting—the tax on manufactures of munitions of war, and so forth.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I trust the Senator will not interrupt me further. I am about to conclude.

Mr. WARREN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will not further intrude.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not charge of the revenue bill, and do not know any more than the Senator or any more than I can gather from the papers. I am confident, however, that when the bill emerges from the committee the Senator will find it will provide ample revenue to meet the program of Congress that has been laid out. I am confident, furthermore, that the taxes will be laid in such a way as to appeal to the judgment of the country as being fair.

In conclusion let me repeat that this child-labor bill in the interest of humanity, in the interest of the welfare of society, in the interest of fair play for children who are not given fair play now in many States, will be a fitting climax to the great program of legislation which has been carried out under the present administration.

It is a fitting addition to those measures which have provided that Government work shall be limited to eight hours.

It is a fitting addition to those acts which provide that those having Government contracts shall not work their men more than eight hours a day.

It is a fitting addition to the provision which Congress recently enacted that female labor here in the District shall not be employed for more than eight hours a day.

It is a fitting addition to the Children's Bureau, established under this administration, and which has done much to coordinate the reforms in the country in the interest of children.

It is a fitting addition to the act of Congress which was passed under this administration putting an end to the manufacture of poisonous matches in factories, in which the labor suffered most untold agonies and was exposed to the most distressing diseases.

It is a fitting addition to the agricultural-education law which was passed by Congress and which is for the benefit of the agricultural classes of this country.

It is, Mr. President, I say a fitting climax to the efforts which have been legitimately and conscientiously made by Congress in the last two or three years to improve the condition of society and to make life more tolerable to those classes which are not able to protect themselves.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question? The Senator does not claim that all the acts he enumerated were passed during the administration of President Wilson?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They have all been passed while the House and Senate were Democratic, and, as I recall, most of them in the last four years.

Mr. NORRIS. The House and Senate were not Democratic under President Roosevelt.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If I am mistaken in any particular I will be glad to have my colleague make any exception.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not in mind all the acts the Senator mentioned. He mentioned, for instance, the establishment of the Department of Labor. That act was passed during President Taft's administration. He then mentioned the law passed in regard to matches, and that was passed, as I remember, when either President Taft or President Roosevelt was President. Several of the other measures which the Senator mentioned I remember voting for when I was a Member of the House of Representatives, and that was before President Wilson became President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very glad to have my colleague make any exception to the list which I have given. I will merely say to my colleague that I jotted them from memory as I sat here while the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] was speaking. My recollection is that all I cited were enacted since the Democrats assumed the responsibility of government. Some of them may have originated in the House of Representatives when it became Democratic, which was two years before President Wilson took office, but certainly most of this great program I have recited has been due to Democratic initiative.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything in regard to the pending bill but the debate has taken a certain direction which impels me to submit some suggestions for the Record. Recognizing the fact that the evening is sultry and the Senate has listened to this debate for some days I shall try at least to be very brief.

The matter that has caused me to give most consideration to the bill has been as to the practical effect of the bill. I realize, sir, that it is a great step for the National Government to take.

It has been charged here on the one hand that support of the bill is the mere result or effect of sentiment; it has been charged that those who favor this bill are impelled to do so by certain outside forces. It strikes me, sir, that the question of sentiment and influence is practically eliminated in this case by reason of the fact that already a large number of the States of this Union have enacted child-labor legislation. I think it also relieves us of the necessity of presenting any reason in support of so-called child-labor legislation.

I have been much impressed during the last three days, sitting here in the Chamber and in a certain way conjuring up and bringing back into the Chamber forms from the land of shadows. The very arguments that are made to-day against extending the power of the General Government have been made time and again upon this floor by great men in the past, and time and again it has been predicted that for the General Government to do this or to do that meant the striking down of the sovereign States and the bringing of a condition in this country so at variance with the original purpose of the founders of the Government as to amount to a revolution against the Constitution itself.

There never was and there never will be on this earth sufficient wisdom to frame a government, cut and dried, that without change in the spirit and purpose can fit succeeding generations. I yield to no man in my respect for the patriotism and the wisdom of the men who founded this Government, but this Government would have proved a miserable failure had not those men placed in the Constitution directly, and again indirectly, the instruments by which the American people, advancing in their mission, could change the Constitution itself. It is no reflection on their wisdom, and yet it does seem to me that those Senators who stand here to-day and base their sole argument against this proposed law upon the proposition that it violates the Constitution, ought to get some wisdom from the history of this Republic.

It is no reflection upon the wisdom of the men who framed our Constitution to say that we have already found it necessary to absolutely and acutely reverse their position, not upon mere administrative features of the Constitution but upon great fundamentals of government. It is borne out by the history of the Constitutional Convention that our forefathers were so fearful of the very name of a nation that on the second draft of that instrument coming before the assembly the word "nation" was stricken out, I think, where it occurred some 12 times, and that before the final draft was submitted to the people for ratification by one sweeping resolution the word "nation" was stricken from that instrument wherever it occurred. You will look through that great instrument to-day in vain to find the word "nation."

So jealous were they of this that when the amendments came afterwards, in the one relating to the freedom of religious thought and exercise the word "nation" had inadvertently crept into the amendment it was promptly stricken out; it was not the thought or purpose to found a nation, but rather to found a union of States.

But no people ever had worked out and no people ever can work out a great destiny under a federation of united States. They must have that concrete organization which is known as a nation, and the first step that a people take is the same first step of childhood itself, and that is to grow. When this Nation began to grow it had to have territory; and it will ever stand as a splendid monument to Thomas Jefferson that, notwithstanding his adhesion to a narrow construction of the Constitution, he could place himself above that and favor the Louisiana purchase, although Mr. Jefferson proposed that they make the purchase, and then ratify the purchase by a constitutional amendment. The American people, however, had begun their career, not as a union of confederated States but as a nation, and they never stopped to make an amendment to their Constitution to ratify that purchase.

The great struggle between State and national thought went on until John Marshall, from that great tribunal which he adorned, and which, fortunately, as I shall show, our fathers created, without intending that it should serve that purpose, however, and clothed with the power to amend this Constitution by construction—John Marshall decided that although the National Government was a Government of granted powers, it was for that Government to determine what the grant was and where the limitations lay. You could not have a confederation of States with some power above them that could pass upon the question of the extent of the grant or the limitation; such a power must be national. While it was some way around, it made, so far as judicial construction could make, a nation of this Republic.

But, sir, you can not make nations by judicial decrees. It was not until the wasted squadrons of Lee melted away at Appomattox that the American people forever tore the word "federation" from the spirit of their Constitution and wrote the word "Nation" in its stead; and we have gone on so grandly in the pursuit of a great career that no man to-day can dream of the grandeur of its fruition.

Again, our fathers believed from the experience that was then back of them that the great governing body in government should be the legislative body; and while they created the Supreme Court, they twice refused to give that court the authority to declare an act of the legislative department of the Government void as in contravention of the constitutional limitations. There never was, however, and there never can be on this earth for any length of time, such a thing as three coordinate human agencies when the basis of the association is power and authority. Somewhere there must be a power to decide the limitations of the one with reference to the other. That power has to be, of course, a separate authority, or one of the three branches must arrogate to itself that function. The Supreme Court wisely took the latter course, and from the day when Marshall made his great decision down to this hour there never has been seriously questioned the right and power and duty of the judiciary to set aside an act of the legislature when, in the opinion of the judiciary, it was in contravention of the limitations of the written Constitution. The men who provided for that court in the Constitution never in general dreamed, in my judgment—and the fact that they twice refused to give it that power confirms my position—that that tribunal should ever arrogate to itself the function of placing a limitation upon the legislative authority of government; those who believed the court possessed that power were the exception. To their day and generation the bulwark of the liberty which had then been secured by the vanguard of humanity rested not in courts, but it rested in the legislature.

To them the legislature was the great popular branch of government; but, fortunately, they did put that provision creating the court in the Constitution, and thus equipped the American people with the means of molding, modifying, and developing this Constitution to meet the growing wants and needs of a growing people by the judicial construction of the Constitution. To have met those wants—not in the terminology but in the spirit of the Constitution—solely by constitutional amendment would have been too cumbersome and too slow.

They also put in the instrument another provision that, next to a call to arms, is going to do more to make a nation of this people than any other one provision of the Constitution, and that was that clause relating to interstate commerce.

Senators have stood here day after day and, I believe, seriously and honestly and candidly, have deplored the tendency toward nationalization as destructive of State rights and State sovereignty; but they should read the history of our Republic. I do not believe there is a Senator to-day on the floor of this Chamber who regrets that in the end, so far as we have gone, we have made a nation of this Republic; but at every step it was against the protests of those who opposed it; it was against the prophecy of dire disaster on the part of those who opposed it; and it represents and stands for the fact of the possibility of the change of American sentiment.

In 1859 the legislature of the State now so ably represented by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], passed a resolution indorsing the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions. It seems to-day incredible that that Northern State should have done that as late as 1859, but two years later—

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator will pardon me just a moment. I think 11 Northern States did the same thing that same year.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but the others were, I think, what might be called the border States in the North.

Mr. HARDWICK. But there were 11 of them in the North.

Mr. CLAPP. But carrying this advanced thought and purpose, that pioneer State, not as later in legislative reform and policy, was still embodying the pioneer spirit and yet two years later the boys from the farms of Wisconsin and the boys from the woods of Wisconsin, aye, the boys in whose veins flowed the mingled blood of the white father and the red mother, were reversing that resolution, and forever eliminated it as a factor in American policies by the crimson tide poured out upon Southern battlefields.

Mr. President, with this history of change, we need not be alarmed at the mere thought of change. With these two great instrumentalities placed in the Constitution, through which and by which the American people may modify and alter their Constitution, we need not be deterred from the exercise of the power thus conferred upon us.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CLAPP. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. LEWIS. The philosophic discussion of the Senator from Minnesota is interesting me very much. Would it be regarded as a diversion if I asked him if he felt it was reserved in the foundation of our Government in the making of the Constitution that there should be privilege in the courts to declare the acts of legislative bodies unconstitutional?

Mr. CLAPP. No; I believe generally just the reverse of that. The history of the convention shows that twice the matter was submitted to the convention and rejected, and, if my memory serves me now—although I am speaking from memory of the matter and have not investigated it for some time—it was overwhelmingly defeated; and John Marshall, a year before he took his seat as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, as a lawyer, of course, and not as a judge, in a brief in the case known as the Ware case asserted that the Supreme Court did not have the power to set aside an act of the legislature as in contravention of the Constitution. True, that was the act of the lawyer, but it was the act of a great lawyer and a great patriot, and a man who carried in his thought and in his purpose and in his patriotism an association with the birth of the Constitution itself.

This power became lodged in the court—I may perhaps say something that will not meet with universal approval—but, to my mind, in considering the constitutionality of a law it is not what has been, but what is and what will be, which should be considered. A truth, to my mind, gains no force because it has been uttered by some man, great man though he be. When you analyze it you will usually find he is great because he utters truths. Cooley, who has been so often cited in this debate, owes, I was going to say, his immortality to the truths that he uttered, rather than the truths that he uttered owing their validity to the fact that they were uttered by Mr. Cooley.

Under this policy and system of government, in the last analysis, we can only say that that is constitutional or unconstitutional which that great tribunal decides to be constitutional or unconstitutional; and that being true, we have got to measure the probability of their decision not so much by what has been said fifty or a hundred years ago, as by the trend of public purpose, public sentiment, and public thought to-day.

Now, what is there sacred about a State? There is but one excuse for the existence of the State; and that is that the American people in the conduct of their concrete affairs, dealing with all their problems, can accomplish some purposes better through a State government than through the Federal Government. Take that away and there would be no excuse for a State, and no more excuse for the authority of a State than there would be for the raising of a county to the dignity of a State or the reduction of the State in power to the level of an ordinary county.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the same principle would apply just as well to the Federal Government, would it not?

Mr. CLAPP. Absolutely.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Federal Government is established for certain Federal purposes, certain express purposes.

Mr. CLAPP. There, I differ with the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Government does not carry out those purposes for the good of the people of the United States, it might just as well not exist at all.

Mr. CLAPP. The latter is true. The Government was not created for certain Federal purposes. The Government proved to have been created for national purposes. Now, there is no excuse on earth for this National Government except the fact that the people who live under it and who compose it can gain morally and materially by the association. Take that away, and there is no excuse for either government.

Now, that being true, where would the line be drawn between the State and the National Government? We may admit that it was drawn at one point in the creation of this Government; but much of that division, much of that line of demarcation, has already disappeared. When the founders of our Government put the commerce clause in the Constitution, they put it there to free commerce. They put it there to prevent one State imposing duties and burdens against another State. They never dreamed that it would be invoked for a safety-appliance device, because they never dreamed of the railroad. They never dreamed that it would be invoked as the basis for a power to regulate rates, because they never dreamed of a railroad that would have any rates to regulate. They saw an evil; they saw a danger, and it was, that one State might impose unfair, unequal burdens against the other States. To obviate that, and to open the avenues of commerce, that clause was put in the Constitution. But putting in the same Constitution this tribunal that was to construe the Constitution, that tribunal naturally, as the industries of this country developed, as the complexities of our lives developed and increased, extended this power, wisely, of course, to cover things that never had been dreamed of by the founders of this Government. So, with this power in hand, and this tribunal to determine it, we must, living under this form of government, recognize in the last analysis that that is constitutional which that great tribunal sustains as within the power of Congress. When it comes to the invasion of the State, it is a mere question, primarily, what purpose can be best served by the State and what can be best served by the Federal Government?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CLAPP. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota, in his view of the matter, what would become of the rights of the States if that great tribunal should be composed of men thinking as he does?

Mr. CLAPP. It would depend in its effect upon the American people upon whether I was wise or correct in determining what functions the State should retain and what functions the General Government should exercise. Whatever may be said of it, there is no escape from the fact that in the last analysis what five men, a majority of the Supreme Court, there say is the constitutional law of this land until five men of the same tribunal reverse the decision and the ruling.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to ask my friend, entertaining the view that he does of the relative functions of the State and the Federal Governments, if he has no concern whatever for the practical consideration that Congress would have neither the inclination nor the time to enact all local legislation, and therefore, if he cares nothing for the States for any sentimental reason, if he has not some practical regard for our dual system because of the fact I have just mentioned?

Mr. CLAPP. Why, I am basing the line of demarcation upon the practical, and not the sentimental.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is not drawing any line at all.

Mr. CLAPP. I had not reached it.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right.

Mr. CLAPP. What I was arguing was that if everyone of the Members of this Senate had been in the Constitutional Convention when the Constitution was adopted, in determining what things we would grant to the Federal Government and what we would reserve to the States, we would reserve to the States those things that we believed it was better for the American people to have functionized through the State instead of the Federal Government. It is a practical question—nothing more, nothing less. It was not a sentiment; it can not be a sentiment to-day. If it ever was a sentiment, then that sentiment has been rudely shaken not only by judicial decision but by the result of war itself.

This being true, I undertake to say that the question is, Which can best serve the purpose of the American people with reference to the restriction upon child labor? Now, a large number of the States have enacted restrictive child-labor legislation. We have there, then, a fixed purpose and policy of the American people. Now, the trouble about leaving it to the State is just what the Senator from Nebraska hinted at. He hardly went as far, I think, as he might have gone.

That is this, and it is a principle that every lawmaker ought always to bear in mind in framing legislation: You have to recognize the frailty of human nature. You have to recognize the element of greed as well as the element of humanity, and when you leave this matter entirely to the States you throw in the balance the element of greed in its effect upon a State refraining from restrictive legislation, to the end that it may give its citizens an advantage over the citizens of the State that does have restrictive legislation. You avoid that, in a measure, by bringing it to the broader equation of a Congress that represents the people of all the States.

Then, there is another reason why it should be done by the Federal Government. This Government was created to serve the purposes of the American people, to advance their moral and material welfare; and unless it does that, and wherever it fails to do it, it fails short of its high mission. Now, this broad, equated authority was given to the Union subsequently, and to the Nation when it became a Nation, to the end that the broader and higher thought and purpose, where the broader and higher thought was strong, might reach out its strong arm where it was weakest throughout this great Republic.

When you say that the people who live in the shadow of a great factory, where they tremble like leaves at the thought of the cessation of the operation of that factory, with their children around them, with the problem of bread and butter ever staring them in the face, must work out their own salvation, it seems to me it falls far short of that great mission which can be worked out by taking the broader equation of right throughout the length and breadth of this Union.

For this reason, while I recognize that this is a new step, while I recognize that it is not entirely free from its difficulties, while I recognize that it may present some problems we have not yet had to face, it does seem to me that taking this broad course, this equated power of right, we should reach out into those communities, into those States—if there be States—where the condition is such that the people themselves are absolutely unable to work out their own redemption.

A form of government is nothing. It is the spirit which surrounds people; and to say that they, operating in the great industrial centers, with the bread and butter of wife and child depending upon the continuation of that industry and their relation to it, shall work out their freedom, it does seem to me falls little short of being a hard if not a brutal proposition to present to them.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. WORKS. Under the Senator's construction of the Constitution, why might not the National Government do this thing directly by legislating respecting the treatment of children in the factories? Why is it necessary to do it indirectly by attempting to control commerce?

Mr. CLAPP. I thought I made that plain. I will briefly review it, however.

As I said at the outset, no group of men ever were wise enough, and there never will be a group wise enough to make a government that will be a cut-and-dried government, that will fit changing conditions.

But fortunately our forefathers, meeting only from their viewpoint, as I believe, a then present exigency, put in the Constitution this commerce clause, and at the same time, without intending—although some of them may have thought that it would come to pass—that this tribunal would take upon itself the authority to determine the limitations of the Constitution, they put the Supreme Court in the Constitution. Without those two there would be, in the first place, no power to lay a hand of check upon the construction of the Constitution by the legislative power, and either that power would have frankly to violate the language of the Constitution or it could not reach the many things which it has reached through the commerce clause of the Constitution.

I shall not enumerate the progress we have made under that. It is familiar to every Member of this body. Year after year we have gone into realms undreamed of by virtue of the commerce clause in our Constitution; and I believe that the Supreme Court in the case of this act will say that it is valid as a part of the exercise by Congress of its constitutional power under the commerce clause. I have no doubt at all that they will. If they do, then under the very spirit and philosophy of our Government, unless we fear that final repository of power, we must accept the wisdom and the justice of its decision and the wisdom of its construction of our Constitution.

Somewhere in human government that power must exist. They fortunately, without intending, as I believe, placed it in that tribunal, and we must submit to the wisdom of that tribunal. Especially where it is a mere question of the comparative exercise of power we need not be alarmed at their construction, because, after all, the whole question of the relation of the State to the Nation was in the first instance the mere judgment of men meeting a then present condition, and subsequently construed by Chief Justice Marshall, worked out through war, and worked out since more elaborately by judicial construction.

Taking this view of it, believing that we can reach this result better through the Federal Government, believing that we can get away from the rivalries of the States and from the danger of one State withholding restrictive legislation to the end that it may cheapen the production within its borders, and thus gain an advantage over the State that does impose restrictive legislation, I certainly have no scruples whatever in casting my vote in behalf of the pending bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was somewhat startled a few moments ago to hear the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] enumerate the great legislative triumphs of the present administration; and when his colleague, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], challenged certain statements that he made, the senior Senator still insisted that he thought the list he had given was a correct one.

Mr. President, the Senator claimed that the Children's Bureau had been established during this administration; that the legislation suppressing the manufacture of white phosphorus matches was a Democratic achievement; that the Department of Labor had been created; and that the eight-hour law governing the operation of the workshops of the Government had also been enacted during this administration. I have taken the trouble to look up the statutes, and I find that the bill establishing the Department of Labor was approved March 4, 1913, before Prof. Wilson became President of the United States. The law creating the Children's Bureau was approved April 9, 1912, and the legislation in regard to white phosphorus matches was likewise approved April 9, 1912, both of them during a Republican administration.

The Senator also claimed that the law relating to political contributions was a Democratic measure. The truth is that on August 19, 1911, the law on that subject was amended by a Republican Congress, a statute having been previously passed by a Republican Congress. Again, the law was further extended on August 23, 1912. So that the Senator from Nebraska certainly can not truthfully claim credit for the laws that are on the statute books relating to political contributions and their method of expenditure.

The Senator from Nebraska likewise claimed that the present administration had done a great deal for Alaska, a Territory that had been neglected. Why, Mr. President, the Republican Party purchased Alaska. The Republican Party created a legislative assembly for Alaska on August 24, 1912; and the statutes will show that many other laws were passed when the Republicans were in power designed to protect and safeguard the interests of the people in that Territory.

The Senator from Nebraska also claimed that the Democratic Party during this administration enacted the eight-hour law for Government employees. The fact is that that law, then on the statute books, was extended on March 3, 1913, before the present administration came into power, the Republican Party being responsible for that legislation. I hope that the senior Senator from Nebraska, before he sends his speech out over the country as showing the wonderful achievements of the Democratic administration, will make the corrections that the statutes show ought to be made.

Mr. President, I have a word to say on the bill that is now under consideration. I shall not occupy many minutes.

I have always believed in State legislation for the protection of children engaged in industrial occupations.

My own State has a law on the subject—not as good a law as it ought to be, but nevertheless a law that is in the right direction, and which beyond a doubt will be strengthened in the near future. As a Member of the Senate and as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I took an interest in child-labor legislation in this District years ago. In the Fifty-eighth Congress I introduced a bill, Senate bill 6386, which did not become a law. In the Fifty-ninth Congress I again introduced a bill, Senate bill 50, which also failed of enactment. In the Sixtieth Congress I introduced a bill, Senate bill 4812, which became the law for the District of Columbia, and which I feel sure every Senator who will examine it will say is a very good and effective piece of legislation.

The Senator from Georgia called attention—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the Senator leaves that point, I was out of the Chamber at the time he criticized some statement of mine. I listed something like a dozen acts.

Mr. GALLINGER. Among them was the act which created the Department of Labor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I find that the Department of Labor bill was signed on the last day of Mr. Taft's administration.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think I am correct in saying that it originated in the House of Representatives, which was Democratic.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was passed by a Republican Senate and signed by a Republican President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am also correct in the statement that the phosphorus bill originated in the House of Representatives and was signed April 9, 1912.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator would not claim that as a Democratic measure?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My impression is that it originated in the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. No matter where it originated, it was passed by a Republican Senate and signed by a Republican President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There were, of course, a great many bills that originated in that Democratic House which received favor.

Mr. GALLINGER. They did some things fairly well in the House, but the claim of the Senator that the statutes enumerated were passed during the present administration is not correct.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is also true that the dozen bills which are listed here are achievements of the Democratic administration. It is also true that those acts received when they passed many Republican votes. One received the support of one group of Republicans and another the support of another group of Republicans. There is hardly a Republican who has not indorsed directly or indirectly one or more of these great acts of the Democratic administration. But the Senator will not question the fact that the initiative of these acts was Democratic, and that with the exception of the two or three that he names they were actually passed when the Democrats were in full control of the administration.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Children's Bureau act was approved April 9, 1912. Does the Senator claim that that was a Democratic achievement?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There were three exceptions to the long list which I gave. I was misled in relation to the Department of Labor act having been passed under this administration by the fact that the first Secretary of Labor was appointed under this administration, and it was the last day of President Taft's administration upon which he signed the act which created that department.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator claims that the eight-hour law for Government employees was a Democratic achievement. That was extended March 3, 1913, there having been a previous law on the statute book. So it surely could not be regarded as a Democratic measure.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have some personal recollection of the eight-hour provisions. They were all engrafted as I recall it upon appropriation bills at different times on the initiative of Democrats in the House of Representatives, and in most cases those amendments were placed on the bills in the face of considerable opposition from the Republican administration leaders.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we will give the Democratic House of Representatives credit for anything which belongs to it, but the Senator is surely minimizing the work of this body when he gives credit to the Democratic House for initiating all the beneficent legislation of the last four or five years. The facts do not sustain that contention. The Senator also said that the Democracy deserves credit for the legislation relating to political contributions and the expenditure of money for political purposes. I did not notice that the Senator was absent when I called attention to the fact that in August, 1911, a bill was passed which is a very strict bill, which is in the volume before me, governing that matter, and it was extended August 23, 1912.

The title of the bill, if the Senator will take the trouble to look at it, shows what kind of legislation it was, and if he will read the bill itself he will see that while it may not be quite as radical as the bill we are threatened with during this session, nevertheless it was a very rigid bill requiring everything almost that could possibly be thought of in governing elections.

Now, Mr. President, I leave the matter right there. The Senator claims great credit for the fiscal legislation of the Democratic Party, but the truth is that the National Monetary Commission laid the foundation for all that legislation, and the Aldrich-Vreeland law was actually the basis upon which that legislation was built.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, does the Senator now forget that he and other Republican Senators voted against the legislation?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not forget it at all, and I have no apologies to make for doing so. I believed then, as I believe now, that the Aldrich-Vreeland bill was sufficient to meet all emergencies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yet it was founded on the National Monetary Commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. There is time yet to demonstrate the wisdom of that legislation, as there is of some other matters that the Senator called attention to, and they will be tested in the crucible of time. The Senator may be right about them and I may be wrong about them. Time will tell whether the legislation was good or bad—necessary or unnecessary.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that the national convention which recently adjourned did not venture to criticize it in any way.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It maintained a profound silence on the subject of this great act of Democratic legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. My public work and my vote as a public servant have never been shaped or governed by political platforms, whether they were Republican or Democratic. If the Senator had gauged his public actions by political platforms, he would certainly have been in a sorry plight during the last three years, so far as the Baltimore platform is concerned.

Now, Mr. President, I will proceed—

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I thought perhaps the Senator was through.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I am not. I am only going to take two or three minutes, and I have been interrupted so that I scarcely know where I left off.

I suggested that I had always believed in child-labor legislation. I had encouraged it in my own State. I had not only encouraged it in the District of Columbia, but had introduced three bills, the last one of which became a law under a Republican administration, the excellent bill that is on the statute books to-day.

I was about to remark that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] called attention to a remark I made during a debate on this subject some time ago, in which I expressed doubt as to the constitutionality of the law, but stated that notwithstanding that I proposed to vote for the bill. My doubt as to the constitutionality of the law did not arise from any legal knowledge that I had on the subject or any presumption on my part that I could interpret the constitutionality of a question of this kind. It arose from what very prominent lawyers in this body, in whose legal knowledge I had great confidence, some of them on this side of the Chamber and some on the other side of the Chamber, had suggested to me when a similar bill was under consideration and was being so ably advocated by the then Senator from Indiana, Mr. Beveridge.

I absorbed the idea at that time from what I was told that the measure was in all human probability unconstitutional, but I have since had occasion to consult some of those same Senators and they have told me that they have changed their views, as the President of the United States has changed his views, and that they now believe the legislation to be constitutional. For that reason, having a strong inclination to support this kind of legislation, I have no hesitancy to-day in voting for the bill, assuming that it will go to the Supreme Court of the United States for interpretation and decision. I am not presumptuous enough as a layman to make any suggestion as to what I think the final fate of the bill will be if the Supreme Court is called on to pass upon it.

On a former occasion when a bill of this kind was under debate I occupied a minute or two to say this:

I am not in the habit of alluding to myself or my early struggles, but it would have been a blessing to me, Mr. President, if I had been kept in school until the age of 14 years. All through my life I have felt and realized that fact. I do think that the best disposition we can make of children until they are 14 years of age is to keep them in school.

Now, Mr. President, upon that utterance, made some years ago, I stand to-day. I believe this is beneficent legislation, and I assume that it will pass the Senate and become a law at this session of Congress. The Democratic Party will doubtless claim credit for the legislation, but it will be remembered that when we were informed by the majority that the child-labor bill was not to be a part of the Democratic program of legislation the minority of this body called attention to that fact and insisted that it should receive consideration at this session. The Republican minority is certainly entitled to much credit for the part it played in the matter.

I will not detain the Senate longer, simply repeating the hope that the bill may pass by a substantial majority, as I believe it will.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not think that this debate could be better closed than by having read an extract from a speech delivered by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] on the power of the National Government, and which was made a Senate document and presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for that purpose. As the junior Senator is looked upon by his colleagues as being a diligent student of the Constitution and a very ardent supporter of the rights and privileges of the two powers recognized in our form of government touching this very identical point, I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to begin reading at the paragraph marked 2 in Roman, on page 10, and to read from that point down to the conclusion of it. I think the Senator expressed himself clearly and evidenced his clear knowledge of the Constitution, and coming from the other side, as it does, I hope it will have some effect upon those who have some doubt on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before it is read I want to say that I have full authority to say that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is in the same category as the President of the United States. He has changed his view as to the constitutionality of the proposed legislation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. When it is read I think his colleagues will see how radical has been the change.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not more radical than that of the President of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did not draw any comparison. I said "how radical." I might have drawn the comparison under other circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

While maintaining the power of the General Government to adequately meet and deal with every external situation which affects the general welfare of the United States, it is no less essential to maintain the supreme power of the State governments to deal with every question which affects only the domestic welfare of the several States. As happily expressed by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 195):

"The genius and character of the whole Government seem to be that its action is to be applied to all the external concerns of the Nation, and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally; but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect other States, and with which it is not necessary to interfere, for the purpose of executing some of the general powers of the Government."

There is a growing tendency on the part of many of our people to insist that because an evil has become great or widespread, and the several States do not deal with it as it should be dealt with, either from lack of desire or lack of ability, the General Government as a sort of overlord should assume the responsibility of correcting it. Reduced to the last analysis, this is the argument of the advocates of the Federal child-labor law. That the employment of immature children is a monstrous evil no properly constituted mind can for a moment doubt, but when existing in a State it is an evil the supervision, regulation, or suppression of which belongs wholly and exclusively to the State, and not to the General Government. It is purely a domestic matter. The General Government has been given no authority to legislate respecting the domestic evils which exist within the limits of a State simply because they are monstrous evils any more than if they existed in France or England. To do so would constitute a clear invasion of the reserved powers of the States, and in its ultimate effect would prove more harmful than the failure of the State to cure its own evils. Once break over the line which separates the State and Federal powers because the exigency is great or thought to be great, and the way has been opened for the gradual and insidious, though certain, breaking down of the barrier of separation altogether. If we begin to legislate in such matters upon the ground of exigency, we shall end by legislating upon the ground of expediency. If we enter the domain of State control to abolish evils because the States do not act at all, we shall remain to regulate and correct because the States do not act as we think they should. Of course no one who has considered the matter insists that Congress has authority to legislate directly to forbid the employment of child labor in the domestic industries of a State, but it is sought to do so indirectly by declaring that any article manufactured in whole or in part by child labor shall be denied the right of interstate transportation. In other words, if a manufacturer of woolen goods in Massachusetts employs a thousand operatives, one of whom is a child of tender years, the employment of that one child (whether sanctioned by the law of the State or not) taints the entire output of the factory, and none of it can be transported into another State. The authority for such legislation is supposed to be found in the commerce clause of the Constitution giving Congress power to regulate commerce among the several States. No power is given Congress to regulate the relation of master and servant, or to say who shall or who shall not be employed, to prescribe the hours of labor, or to regulate in any way the manufacture of commodities within the limits of a State. The power is to regulate commerce, and if under this power, which seems precise and clear, Congress may control the employment of child labor in a State, there would seem to be no phase of the business of domestic manufacture which it could not in the same way control. It could with equal authority forbid the interstate shipment of goods where the manufacturer employs his servants more than eight hours, where he employs nonunion labor or where he does not employ nonunion labor, where he employs any Chinese labor or where he declines to employ such labor, or, indeed, where he does anything which Congress does not approve or fails to do anything which Congress does approve. Thus a power to regulate interstate commerce would be transformed into a power to regulate domestic manufacture, and a power to regulate commerce into a power to prohibit commerce altogether.

It is far better to leave to the people of each State their constitutional right and their constitutional duty to deal with their own problems in their own way. To the extent that the General Government would assume the responsibility of correcting the evils in a State, the State government would quite likely shirk its own responsibility. With the gradual abridgment of local action would come the gradual loss of local ability. The people of the State would lean more and more upon the National Government which is remote from the locus of the evil, instead of relying upon themselves who are in close touch with it. Their power would become atrophied from disuse as the muscles of the body become atrophied from lack of exercise. Such a process would inevitably, to a great extent, sap the feeling of local responsibility, and in time the nation itself would become unable to bear up under the multiplicity of duties which it would be compelled to assume. The States are politically as well as geographically parts of one great governmental organism. To destroy or reduce the vitality of one of these parts would in the end reduce the strength of the whole, as the vigor of the human body is lessened by the loss or weakening of one of its limbs. By leaving local evils to the State and national evils to the Nation we shall preserve the harmonious balance contemplated by the Constitution, and in the end solve the problems of society much more effectually than we can ever do by devolving upon one the responsibilities clearly intended for the other.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to remark that if we can find any greater right about face on a bill, in common parlance we have any flopper to beat that, he is surely some flopper.

I should like to have read into the RECORD right at this point, as there seems to be some discussion as to the power of the court to interpret the Constitution according to their will, from the Federalist, No. 78, reading from the point marked on page 541—

Mr. CLAPP. That is from Hamilton?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes. Down to page 544.

Of course this was during the time of the formative period, and it gives some idea as to what they were discussing and what conclusions were reached.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the article from the Federalist, and was interrupted by—

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I inquire what the Secretary is reading?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Secretary is reading an article from the Federalist in reference to the power of the Supreme Court to declare void acts of Congress.

Mr. CLAPP. It is an argument of Alexander Hamilton in favor of the adoption of the Constitution.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I thought it was; but I desired to be sure.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is ancient history.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the article, which is as follows:

The complete independence of the courts of justice is peculiarly essential in a limited Constitution. By a limited Constitution, I understand one which contains certain specified exceptions to the legislative authority; such, for instance, as that it shall pass no bills of attainder, no ex post facto laws, and the like. Limitations of this kind can be preserved in practice no other way than through the medium of the courts of justice, whose duty it must be to declare all acts contrary to the manifest tenor of the Constitution void. Without this, all the reservations of particular rights or privileges would amount to nothing.

Some perplexity respecting the rights of the courts to pronounce legislative acts void, because contrary to the Constitution, has arisen from an imagination that the doctrine would imply a superiority of the judiciary to the legislative power. It is urged that the authority which can declare the acts of another void must necessarily be superior to the one whose acts may be declared void. As this doctrine is of great importance in all the American Constitutions, a brief discussion of the ground on which it rests can not be unacceptable.

There is no position which depends on clearer principles than that every act of a delegated authority, contrary to the tenor of the commission under which it is exercised, is void. No legislative act, therefore, contrary to the Constitution, can be valid. To deny this would be to affirm that the deputy is greater than his principal; that the servant is above his master; that the representatives of the people are superior to the people themselves; that men acting by virtue of powers, may do not only what their powers do not authorize, but what they forbid.

If it be said that the legislative body are themselves the constitutional judges of their own powers, and that the construction they put upon them is conclusive upon the other departments, it may be answered, that this can not be the natural presumption, where it is not to be collected from any particular provisions in the Constitution. It is not otherwise to be supposed that the Constitution could intend to enable the representatives of the people to substitute their will for that of their constituents. It is far more rational to suppose that the courts were designed to be an intermediate body between the people and the legislature, in order, among other things, to keep the latter within the limits assigned to their authority. The interpretation of the laws is the proper and peculiar province of the courts. A Constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges, as a fundamental law. It therefore belongs to them to ascertain its meaning, as well as the meaning of any particular act proceeding from the legislative body. If there should happen to be an irreconcilable variance between the two, that which has the superior obligation and validity ought, of course, to be preferred; or, in other words, the Constitution ought to be preferred to the statute; the intention of the people to the intention of their agents.

Nor does this conclusion by any means suppose a superiority of the judicial to the legislative power. It only supposes that the power of the people is superior to both and that where the will of the legislature, declared in its statutes, stands in opposition to that of the people, declared in the Constitution, the judges ought to be governed by the latter rather than the former. They ought to regulate their decisions by the fundamental laws rather than by those which are not fundamental.

This exercise of judicial discretion in determining between two contradictory laws is exemplified in a familiar instance. It not uncommonly happens that there are two statutes existing at one time, clashing in whole or in part with each other, and neither of them containing any repealing clause or expression. In such a case it is the province of the courts to liquidate and fix their meaning and operation; so far as they can, by any fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done; where this is impracticable it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other. The rule which has obtained in the courts for determining their relative validity is that the last in order of time shall be preferred to the first. But this is a mere rule of construction, not derived from any positive law, but from the nature and reason of the thing. It is a rule not enjoined upon the courts by legislative provision, but adopted by themselves, as consonant to truth and propriety, for the direction of their conduct as interpreters of the law. They thought it reasonable that between the interfering acts of an equal authority that which was the last indication of its will should have the preference.

But in regard to the interfering acts of a superior and subordinate authority, of an original and derivative power, the nature and reason of the thing indicate the converse of that rule as proper to be followed. They teach us that the prior act of a superior ought to be preferred to the subsequent act of an inferior and subordinate authority, and that, accordingly, whenever a particular statute contravenes the Constitution, it will be the duty of the judicial tribunals to adhere to the latter and disregard the former.

It can be of no weight to say that the courts, on the pretense of a repugnancy, may substitute their own pleasure to the constitutional intentions of the legislature. This might as well happen in the case of two contradictory statutes, or it might as well happen in every adjudication upon any single statute. The courts must declare the sense of the law; and if they should be disposed to exercise will instead of judgment, the consequence would equally be the substitution of their pleasure to that of the legislative body. The observation, if it proved anything, would prove that there ought to be no judges distinct from that body.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, notwithstanding that which has just been read from the Secretary's desk was the language of Hamilton urging support of the Constitution—and I stated in my remarks that there were men who took the other view—the great fact remains that Mr. Marshall did not take that view until he became a judge. John Jay, to whom the Chief Justiceship was offered before it was offered to Marshall, declined it on the ground that the court had not sufficient authority under the Constitution to either maintain its own dignity or to serve the American people, and it was questioned in the court when Marshall took the Chief Justiceship. Mr. Marshall made a very labored, and yet a very logical and correct, argument in support of it, but the proposition was twice rejected in the assembly. I do not hesitate to say that the general sentiment and thought at the time was that the court would never set aside an act of the legislative department of the Government.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I shall take but a moment of the time of the Senate, for I know the desire of the Senate to vote on this bill; and I believe I can render better service to the country, and especially to the children of the country, by aiding in bringing about a speedy vote than by attempting to talk. I wish, however, to express my hearty approval of the legislation and my belief in its constitutionality, after a thorough study of the question as a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, which considered this bill, and also after hearing the arguments and reading all of the authorities presented on both sides of the question in the Senate during the consideration of the measure. The merits of the subject of the measure are acknowledged by all, even those opposing the bill. Commercialism has exacted a great deal from the people in this country, but I am glad we have now reached a point when the tears, blood, brain, and life of the children of this Nation shall no longer contribute to its profits.

In order, however, Mr. President, that we may have the benefit of the legal authorities and discussions on this question from the earliest period when bills of this character were first considered down to the present time, I desire to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, and in the regular RECORD type, an article written by Edwin Maxey, of Lincoln, Nebr., in April, 1907, on "The constitutionality of the Beveridge child-labor law," published in the Green Bag for May, 1907; also an editorial written by Robert B. Troutman, of the Columbia Law Review, published in April, 1914, on "The constitutionality of a Federal child-labor law." I should also like to have printed in the RECORD a criticism of the Adair and Copeage cases, the two cases principally relied upon by those opposed to this bill, appearing in an article written by Mr. Justice Brandeis on the subject of "The living law," published in February, 1916, on page 467 in the Illinois Law Review. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read these articles, but I would like to have them printed in the RECORD in the type I have already stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE BEVERIDGE CHILD-LABOR BILL.

[Edwin Maxey in the Green Bag, May, 1907, pp. 290-292.]

The bill introduced in the Senate by Mr. Beveridge for the purpose of regulating child labor is a most interesting project of legislation in more ways than one. Not only is it an evidence of the growing influence of labor in politics, but it raises the whole question of the extent of police power possessed by the General Government. It may be safely said that there is no other question which is to-day of more vital interest in the field of American jurisprudence, and none more perplexing.

The bill provides that "no carrier of interstate commerce shall transport or accept for transportation the products of any factory or mine in which children under 14 years of age are employed or permitted to work, which products are offered to said interstate carriers by the firm, person, or corporation operating said factory or mine, or any officer or agent or servant thereof, for transportation into any other State or Territory than the one in which said factory or mine is located."

Owners of factories and mines are required to file every six months an affidavit, the form of which shall be prescribed by the Department of Commerce and Labor, but which shall in substance state that said factory or mine employs no child under 14 years of age. A penalty of $10,000 or imprisonment for six months, or both, is provided in case any interstate carrier fails to require such affidavit, and double that penalty for each violation of the act by the owner of mine or factory.

As, therefore, the bill proposes to regulate child labor through an exercise of the powers of the Federal Government, derived from the interstate-commerce clause, it is necessary that we examine carefully the extent of powers conferred by that clause, in order to determine whether or not the Constitution confers any such powers upon the Federal Government as are necessary to the enforcement of the provisions of this bill.

As against the States, the Federal Government no doubt possesses the exclusive power to regulate interstate commerce. This was decided in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1), and that decision has never been reversed. The regulation provided by the bill is, therefore, no infringement upon the rights of the States, unless, instead of being a regulation of interstate commerce, it is a police regulation under the guise of regulating commerce. If it is a police regulation, its constitutionality is open to dispute.

If this can be sustained as a regulation of commerce, it becomes very difficult to see what limit there is to the power of the Federal Government to control the productive processes heretofore controlled under the police power of the States. If the Federal Government has the power to forbid interstate carriers to accept goods produced by child labor, would not the same power warrant the exclusion of goods produced in factories or mines in which men are permitted to work more than eight hours per day? Would not the same power enable it to forbid interstate carriers to accept goods from concerns employing foreigners or Mormons or union laborers or nonunion laborers? In short, if this is a legitimate exercise of the power of Congress over commerce, the extent of control which Congress may exercise over production becomes almost entirely a question of expediency, not of law. A large part of the police power now exercised by the States will have disappeared, and a considerable portion of what remains will be held by them as tenants at will.

That this is not a regulation of commerce would seem to appear from the fact that it is not commerce but manufacture and mining that is regulated. The processes upon which the regulation operates have ended before commerce begins. If there is any distinction at all between production and distribution, and it has always been considered that there is, the power to regulate the latter does not necessarily include the power to regulate the former. It is thus a new doctrine, which teaches that because Congress has power to regulate commerce it has power to regulate manufacturing and mining, which are parts of production.

One would not be surprised if, under its power to regulate commerce, the Federal Government should claim the right to prohibit interstate carriers from employing children under 14 years of age. While this would in reality be a police regulation, it would on the face of it be a regulation of commerce. But this is a very different proposition from making the regulation apply to a process which has ended before commerce begins, and calling it a regulation of commerce rather than of manufacture or mining. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden defined commerce as "intercourse." And in the case of the County of Mobile v. Kimball (102 U. S., 691) it supplemented the above general definition with one much more explicit: "Commerce with foreign nations and among the States, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and transportation of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." And in the case of Kidd v. Pearson (128 U. S., 1) it was said that "manufacture is transportation—the fashioning of raw material into a change of form for use. The functions of commerce are different. The buying and selling and the transportation incidental thereto constitute commerce. * * * If it be held that the term includes the regulation of all such manufactures as are intended to be the subject of commercial transactions in the future, it is impossible to deny that it would also include all productive industries that contemplate the same thing. Any movement toward the establishment of rules of production in this vast country, with its many different climates and opportunities, could only be at the sacrifice of the advantages of a large part of the localities in it, if not of every one of them. A situation more puzzling to the State governments, and more provocative of conflicts between the General Government and the States, and less likely to have been what the framers of the Constitution intended, it would be difficult to imagine."

And in United States v. E. C. Knight Co. (156 U. S., 1) the court said: "That which belongs to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State. Commerce succeeds to manufacture and is not a part of it. The power to regulate commerce is the power to prescribe the rule by which commerce shall be governed."

It is therefore clear that unless the Supreme Court changes its view as to what constitutes commerce it would not hold the act we are considering to be a regulation of commerce. May it be sustained as a legitimate exercise of the police power of the Federal Government?

We often hear it stated that the Federal Government possesses no police power; that it possesses simply delegated powers, and that there is no delegation of police powers. True, no police power, eo nomine, was conferred upon the Federal Government by the framers of the Constitution. The phrase "police power" was not used until 40 years after the Constitutional Convention, it being first used by Chief Justice Marshall in his opinion in the case of Brown v. Maryland, 1827.

But whether in theory the Federal Government possesses any police power, the fact is that it exercises police powers. The exclusion of lottery tickets from interstate commerce by prohibiting interstate carriers from carrying them can not be considered a regulation for the purpose of securing the safety of commerce, but is clearly for the purpose of protecting the public morals. As was said by the court: "What clause of the Constitution can be cited which, in any degree, countenances the suggestion that one may, of right, carry or cause to be carried from one State to another that which will harm the public morals?" (Champion v. Ames, 188 U. S., 357.) But legislation by the Government for the purpose of protecting the public morals is unquestionably an exercise of the police power.

The recent pure-food bill passed by Congress is in the interest of public health and not for the purpose of rendering commerce less dangerous. Though it may theoretically serve the latter purpose, its real purpose is well understood to be the former, and a law must be judged by its real purpose, not by its remote or incidental effects. This principle has been recognized by the Supreme Court in Minnesota v. Barber (136 U. S., 313); New York v. Miles (11 Peters, 103); Passenger cases (7 How., 283); Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S., 356). That governmental action for the protection of the public health is an exercise of the police power is too clear to admit of doubt.

The employers' liability act, which is a regulation for promoting public safety, is also an exercise of the police power by the Federal Government. Like the pure-food law, its constitutionality has not yet been passed upon by the Supreme Court, but until then the presumption is in favor of their constitutionality.

As to the fact of the exercise of police power by the Federal Government, we find the following in Freund's very able work on the police power: "It is impossible to deny that the Federal Government exercises a considerable police power of its own. This police power rests chiefly upon the constitutional power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, but not exclusively so. It must now be regarded as firmly established that the power over commerce, while primarily intended to be exercised in behalf of economic interests, may be used for the protection of safety, order, and morals." (Police Power, p. 63.)

Relative to the right of the General Government to exercise police powers, Judge Cooley says in his Constitutional Limitations, page 723: "Congress may establish police regulations, as well as the States, confining their operation to the subjects over which it is given control by the Constitution."

In view of the position taken by the Supreme Court in the Lottery case, it would not be surprising if it would sustain as constitutional a regulation by the General Government for the purpose of protecting the public health and promoting the public intelligence. This exact question has not yet been presented to that court for decision, so that it is impossible to say at present what its decision would be. Considered in connection with other questions closely allied to it, the question presented by this proposed legislation becomes one of intense interest, whether we consider it from the standpoint of its legality or of its expediency.

LINCOLN, NEBR., April, 1907.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF A FEDERAL CHILD-LABOR LAW.

[Robert B. Troutman, of the editorial staff of the Columbia Law Review, in the Green Bag, April, 1914, pp. 154-160.]

On January 26 Representative A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania, introduced into Congress a bill which, if it is made a law, will present to the courts a problem of constitutional law which is by no means easy to solve. The essential features of Mr. Palmer's bill are: That no person, corporation, etc., "manufacturing, producing, or dealing in the products of any mine or quarry in which children under 16 years of age are employed or permitted to work at any time, or of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment in which children under 14 years of age are employed or permitted to work at any time, or in which children between the ages of 14 and 16 years are employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in a day or more than six days in a week, or after the hour of 7 p. m. or before the hour of 7 a. m. of any day, shall ship or offer or deliver for shipment such products in interstate commerce." That a board composed of the Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of Labor, and Attorney General shall from time to time make and amend rules for enforcing the law. And that the Secretary of Labor or his authorized agent shall be allowed to inspect the mines and factories which are producing goods for interstate commerce. That a violation of the act shall be a misdemeanor, with a punishment of a fine or imprisonment or both. (Senator Beveridge's child-labor bill, which was never adopted, was somewhat different in its provisions. It was directed expressly against the receipt by the carrier of goods for interstate commerce when such goods were manufactured by child labor. And it compelled the owners of factories and mines periodically to give certain affidavits that the goods which they tendered for shipment were not made by the use of child labor. For a discussion of the constitutionality of that bill by Edwin Maxey, see 19 Green Bag, 290.)

The validity of a statute directed against the use of child labor in certain industries depends upon the extent to which the power of Congress under the commerce clause may be used to exclude certain articles from transportation between the States. It can not now be doubted that Congress under its power to regulate interstate commerce can prohibit the shipment of certain "outlawed" goods (2 Willoughby, Constitutional Law of the United States, sec. 347; Goodnow, Social Reform and the Constitution, 80); but the extent of this power is by no means settled. For the purpose of argument on this question let us at the outset assume that Congress can not arbitrarily exercise this right of exclusion, and that this can only be done either to promote commerce itself or to enforce a police regulation, which is hereinafter discussed. It may be that this assumption can be correctly based on the ground that in order to avoid a violation of the due-process provision in the fifth amendment Congress must exercise its control of commerce among the several States within the bounds of reason. At any rate this assumption avoids an entry into that field of debate which began with Hamilton and Madison, namely, Are the citizens of the United States entitled to enjoy the facilities of interstate commerce as a matter of right or merely as a privilege to be enjoyed so long as Congress does not interfere? It may be conceded that the Federal Government has no power to regulate by direct legislation the manufacture of goods where that production is carried on wholly within the borders of a State. It has been repeatedly held that manufacturing and production do not of themselves involve interstate commerce, even though the goods made or produced are intended for use by shipment and sale in another State. (Diamond Glue Co. v. U. S. Glue Co. (1903), 187 U. S., 611; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. (1895), 156 U. S., 1; cf. 10 Columbia Law Review, 704, where in an article on "The antitrust act" Mr. Morawetz expresses the belief that the Knight case can not be reconciled with subsequent decisions on that act in the Supreme Court.) Although the production of the goods may not fall within the control of Congress, the distribution, in so far as interstate transportation is used, is subject to direct Federal regulation. In the exercise of this jurisdiction over transportation the cases which have sustained the prohibitory legislation of Congress excluding certain goods from carriage between the States may be classified as follows:

First. Statutes which have the effect of directly promoting the business of carriers as public servants; that is, laws which render the transportation of passengers and goods more safe or the service rendered more efficient. Thus, the shipment of articles dangerous, per se, as dynamite and other explosives, is a proper subject of such legislation. And another example is found in the commodities clause of the Hepburn Act, which prohibited interstate carriers from hauling commodities produced in other businesses owned by the carrier. (United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co. (1909), 213 U. S., 366; United States v. Lehigh Valley R. R. (1911), 220 U. S., 257; see Lewis, "Commodities clause of the Hepburn Act," 21 Harvard Law Rev., 595.) And this can be done by Congress, although the States creating the carrier corporations had expressly authorized them to produce and ship those commodities. But all this legislation, like the employers' liability act (1908, 207 U. S., 463), directly affects the promotion of the business of the carrier by prohibiting it from engaging in practices which tend to lessen its transporting efficiency as a public servant; and the fact that these laws have been sustained by the Supreme Court would form no precedent for a statement that the court would uphold a Federal law prohibiting the transportation of the products of child labor, for it can not be said that articles manufactured by child labor render in any manner the transportation facilities less safe or efficient.

Second. Statutes which impose police regulations. Under this division of its power over interstate commerce Congress has enacted laws for the protection of public morals, health, and for the prevention of frauds perpetrated through interstate shipments. And from the nature of the goods prohibited by these laws it is obvious that the goods themselves are not dangerous or harmful to the business of interstate transportation. From the earliest history of our Federal Government it has been recognized that the States have a police power by which they are permitted to legislate for the protection of the general public health, morals, and safety. But it was doubtful, until the decision of the Lottery case (1903, 188 U. S., 321), whether Congress had such a power. (Edwin Maxey, "Beveridge child-labor bill," 19 Green Bag, 290.) In that case, and those which have been subsequently adjudicated in the Supreme Court, this doubt was removed. And it may now be regarded as settled law that Congress can enact police regulations as a means of exercising its control over interstate commerce. (Paul Fuller, "Is there a Federal police power?" 4 Columbia Law Rev., 563.) In fact, the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice McKenna, in a unanimous opinion upholding the white-slave act, has expressly recognized the existence of this Federal power. The statement is as follows: "The principle established by the cases is the simple one, when rid of confusing and distracting considerations, that Congress has power over transportation 'among the several States'; that the power is complete in itself; and that Congress, as an incident to it, may adopt not only means necessary but convenient to its exercise, and the means may have the quality of police regulations." (Hoke v. United States (1913), 227 U. S., 308, at page 323.) If the child-labor law is to be upheld, it is obvious that the decision must be on the theory that it is a valid police regulation of Congress under the commerce clause. Therefore it will be necessary to examine the instances in which the exercise of this power by Congress has been sustained and discover if this law may properly be placed within the principles already decided.

The first case, generally known as the Lottery case (prior to this was a statute prohibiting the shipment of diseased cattle. This was upheld in Reid v. Colorado (1902), 187 U. S., 137. Although this was an exercise of the Federal power to prohibit certain goods from interstate commerce, it is not as closely connected with our discussion as the later cases), upheld a statute making it a crime to ship lottery tickets from one State to another. It may be noted that at the time this Federal law was enacted it was recognized by practically all of the States that this form of gambling was an evil to be eradicated; and this desire on the part of the States had been expressed in the form of legislation against lotteries. (1903, 188 U. S., 321.) Then came the pure-food law, which made it a misdemeanor to ship or deliver for shipment in interstate commerce uninspected adulterated foods and drugs. This was declared to be constitutional in the Hipolite Egg case. (Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States (1911), 220 U. S., 45.) And lastly, the Supreme Court sustained the white-slave act in 1913; this law made it a felony against the United States to transport or aid in the transportation of women for immoral purposes. How can these laws be distinguished in principles of police regulations from a law which makes it a crime to ship or offer for shipment an article manufactured by employers of children under a certain age?

It has been ably argued that there is a clear-cut distinction between production and distribution, and that while Congress has plenary power to control distribution, it can not without an invasion of the rights reserved by the States indirectly control production. (2 Willoughby, Constitutional Law of the United States, sec. 348.) There is, however, as wide a difference between consumption and distribution as between production and distribution; and if Congress can indirectly protect the consumers by the exercise of its police power to exclude harmful articles from interstate commerce, there seems to be no reason for saying that the same power can not be invoked to protect the producers. It is obvious that the practical effect of the administration of the laws in the Lottery, Pure Food, and White Slave cases is not merely to free "commerce among the several States" from articles which are injurious to commerce, for these articles were not injurious to commerce, as in no sense did they "render transportation less safe or efficient." (The Supreme Court clearly recognizes that Congress has the power to pass laws which protect the public health, morals, and safety, but which do not regulate the efficiency of the transportation business of the carriers. This is well illustrated by the construction very recently given to the intention of Congress in the white-slave act. The defense was that the prosecution had not made out its case, since there was nothing to show "that the defendants either directed or knew how the girls" were to be transported, "whether in a private vehicle or through the instrumentality of a common carrier." To this contention the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Pitney, gave the following answer: "But, in our opinion, in order to constitute an offense under the act it is not essential that the transportation be by common carrier. * * * The prohibition is not in terms confined to transportation by common carrier, nor need such limitation be implied in order to sustain the constitutionality of the enactment. As has already been decided, it has the quality of a police regulation, although enacted in the exercise of the power to regulate interstate commerce (citing cases); and since this power is complete in itself, it was discretionary with Congress whether the prohibition should be extended to transportation by others than common carriers." Wilson v. United States, Nos. 168 and 169, October term, 1913, decided Feb. 24, 1914.) But these goods were outlawed because they were shipped for the purpose of inflicting injury on the members of the public after the carriage has terminated. And it would seem that in no case ought the court to rely on the mere wording of the statute in the determination of this validity, but will look into the practical effect and administration of the law. (This principle should follow from the attitude which the Supreme Court has always taken in examinations of State legislation under the fourteenth amendment. See Yick Wo v. Hopkins (1886), 118 U. S., 356.) It can not be doubted that this was done in each of the cases considered, and although the object and effect of the laws were to protect the public from injuries which could be inflicted only after transportation had ceased, the court nevertheless determined that they were well within the power of Congress. And of course these laws were intended to aid in the eradication of these evils altogether, and such must necessarily be their tendency, for, if in these pernicious enterprises a large part of the business is done through interstate commerce—a domain beyond the reach of State legislation—when the gates of this fertile field are closed to the promoters of such enterprises there is a decided disadvantage in a continuance of their operation. And even if this action on the part of Congress does not actually eradicate the evil, it has so limited the scope of their operations as to bring them entirely within State control. The child-labor law would have the same object and effect. And since the producers of the articles are as much a part of the public as those who may be harmed by them after their transportation, it would seem that the health of the producers constitutes as valid a basis for the denial of the use of interstate commerce as does the protection of the consumers.

There is no denial of the fact that if there should be a preconceived notion that this police power of Congress has been carried far enough and must not be further extended, there is a ground upon which the child-labor statute can be distinguished from the other laws which have been properly held to be within the control of Congress over interstate commerce. In the Lottery, Pure Food, and White Slave cases the harm from which the public is protected can be inflicted only after transportation. Therefore it may be said that Congress is merely refusing to permit the facilities of interstate commerce to be made the connecting link between the producer and the object of his wrong. But in the absence of such a desire to scour the field of adjudicated cases to find distinctions whereby the scope of Federal legislation may be limited to the conditions and circumstances of laws already upheld, there seems to be no reason for declaring a law invalid which denies to a producer employing child labor the facilities of interstate commerce. And assuming that the use of such labor is an evil detrimental to the public health, as I have already pointed out in reference to the other Federal prohibitory laws, this law would greatly discourage the employment of such labor, for it would close the gates to a large field of operation of these enterprises. And therefore as a police regulation, following logically the lines which have been developed by the preceding cases, it seems that this statute would fall within the power of Congress, although it can not properly be said to directly regulate interstate commerce.

Another apparent distinction between this case and the Lottery, Pure Food, and White Slave cases may be found in the fact that since a majority of the States have not enacted a child-labor law, there seems to be no such universal concurrence in the idea that child labor is an evil which deserves eradication, as was the fact in each of the other laws. But, of course, this argument, based on a theory that the States could in some manner consent to an interference by Congress, can not be approved. Congress, by virtue of its delegated powers in the Constitution, either has or has not the power to pass such a law, and the consent of the States, except by constitutional amendment, has nothing to do with the exercise of this power by Congress. And it is submitted that this is an answer to any attempted distinction between the nature of this law and of the other statutes discussed based on the competency of the machinery of the several States to obliterate these evils without the aid of Congress. The fact that the States were powerless from a practical point of view to prevent, by an adequate enforcement of their statutes, the gambling in lotteries or the perpetration of frauds by use of adulterated foods or the traffic in women for immoral purposes forms no basis for a legal argument that Congress has the power to interfere to help the States. And it is equally true that the fact that child labor used in production is a local matter and that the States could ably enforce any laws directed against this evil, and that, therefore, there is no need for Federal aid, can not be used as an argument for a denial that Congress has the power under the Constitution to pass such a law. This would be an argument as to whether Congress should deem it advisable to exercise its power, but it can not be used to question the existence of that power. And, again, this argument may have great weight in determining whether Congress is acting within the due process of law requirement as prescribed by the fifth amendment. And it must be noted that the control over interstate commerce can not be exerted in violation of the other provisions of the Constitution. (It would seem that the same liberality of construction should be given to the police regulations of Congress under the due-process clause as the court has always accorded to the State laws enacted for the protection of public morals, health, and safety. Lewis, "Commodities Clause of the Hepburn Act," 21 Harvard Law Rev., 595, 610.) It is on this point that Senator Beveridge, when arguing the constitutionality of his child-labor bill in the Senate in 1907, seems to have fallen into serious error. His position was that Congress has the absolute and therefore arbitrary power to exclude any article from interstate commerce. But he contended that the distinction must be observed between the power of Congress and the policy of exercising this power in an arbitrary manner. His argument is an attempt to prove more than is necessary to uphold the law, and the more conservative Senators refused to sanction so radical a doctrine. It can hardly be doubted in this age, when interstate transportation and shipment constitute so great a factor in our commercial life, that the right to ship through this medium is one which can not be taken away from the public without due process of law. In other words, it would seem that the Supreme Court must hold that the fifth amendment is an inhibition on the arbitrary power of Congress to deny to a shipper the right to transport his goods in interstate commerce without some reason, either based upon the conservation of public health, safety, or morals, or in furtherance of a reasonable plan to render interstate transportation more efficient. To sustain this Federal child-labor statute it is only necessary to prove to the satisfaction of the Supreme Court that this is a reasonable means of enforcing the power of Congress to enact police regulations in its control over interstate commerce. But this does not warrant the conclusion of Mr. Beveridge that Congress may exercise its power in an arbitrary manner.

This brings us to a discussion of the case of Adair v. United States (1908, 208 U. S., 161, 179), which is, of the recent cases, the most unfavorable to the position taken in this article. In that case the court decided that a law making it a crime for an agent of an interstate carrier to discriminate against an employee because he was a member of a labor organization was violative of the due-process clause. The decision really turned on a question of fact, namely, that there was not a sufficiently close connection between the end sought and the means adopted by Congress. This is shown by the opinion of the court, where Mr. Justice Harlan used the following language: We "hold that there is no such connection between interstate commerce and membership in a labor organization as to authorize Congress to make it a crime against the United States for an agent of an interstate commerce carrier to discharge an employee because of such membership on his part." Both Justices Holmes and McKenna dissented. And since that decision was rendered the Pure Food and White Slave cases, embracing a much broader field of Federal control, have been decided by the court with unanimous concurrence. And in each of these cases Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion, and the broad language in which he expressed the court's views could well be applied to sustain a law excluding the products of child labor from the benefit of interstate commerce.

But the determination of the validity of the law must rest upon a question of fact, which only the Supreme Court can decide: Is the evil of child labor which is sought to be remedied by the statute of such substantial connection to the protection of public morals and health and safety as touched by interstate commerce as to warrant an interference by Congress? It may be that the court will repudiate what seems to be the natural and reasonable inference to be drawn from the Pure Food and White Slave cases, and the expression already quoted from the Adair case might be used to answer this question in the negative. But certainly the present tendency of the court is to view with favor the arguments presented by Mr. Justice

McKenna. It is submitted that this tendency is to be commended and that it should lead the court to sustain the child-labor law. And although the article manufactured by child labor, when offered to the carrier, may be perfectly innocuous in regard to its capacity or incapacity to inflict any future injury to the public health or morals, the facilities of interstate commerce should be denied the producer as a forceful incentive to forbear from a repetition from his malevolent practices. Certainly this indirect method of exterminating an evil is as justifiable in bearing a sufficiently close connection to interstate commerce as is the denial of the use of transportation facilities to the shippers of certain articles on the ground that these goods are designed to or may do harm to the public after the transportation has ceased.

NEW YORK CITY.

THE STRUGGLE CONTINUES.

The court reawakened to the truth of the old maxim of the civilians ex factor oritur jus. It realized that no law, written or unwritten, can be understood without a full knowledge of the facts out of which it arises, and to which it is to be applied. But the struggle for the living law has not been fully won. The Lochner case has not been expressly overruled. Within six weeks the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, in supposed obedience to its authority, held invalid a nine-hour law for certain railroad employees. (Commonwealth v. B. & M. R. R. (Mass.), 110 N. E. R., 264.) The Supreme Court of the United States, which by many decisions had made possible in other fields the harmonizing of legal rights with contemporary conceptions of social justice, showed by its recent decision in the Coppage case (Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S., 1) the potency of mental prepossessions. Long before it had recognized (see 219 U. S., 570) that employers "and their operatives do not stand upon an equality," that "the legislature, being familiar with local conditions, is primarily the judge of the necessity of such enactments" (see 219 U. S., 569); and that unless a "prohibition is palpably unreasonable and arbitrary we are not at liberty to say that it passes beyond the limitation of a State's protective authority" (see 238 U. S., 452). And in the application of these principles it had repeatedly upheld legislation limiting the right of free contract between employer and employee. But in the Adair case (Adair v. U. S., 208 U. S., 161), and again in the Coppage case (supra), it declared unconstitutional a statute which prohibited an employer from requiring as a condition of his securing or retaining employment that the workman should not be a member of a labor union. Without considering that Congress or the Kansas Legislature might have had good cause to believe that such prohibition was essential to the maintenance of trade-unionism, and that trade-unionism was essential to securing equality between employer and employee, our Supreme Court of the United States declared that the enactment of the antidiscrimination law was an arbitrary and unreasonable interference with the right of contract. (Louis D. Brandeis in Illinois Law Review, February, 1916, pp. 467, 468.)

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there was an amendment to the Senate substitute offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was not offered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then I withdraw the suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair called the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that he had not offered the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I gave notice that I would offer an amendment to the bill, and stated my reasons for it. I think that there are other Senators interested in the subject who ought to be here, and therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Norris	Sterling
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Oliver	Swanson
Brandege	Husting	Overman	Taggart
Bryan	James	Penrose	Thompson
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Ransdell	Tillman
Clapp	Kenyon	Robinson	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Sheppard	Underwood
Culberson	La Follette	Shields	Vardaman
Cummins	Lane	Simmons	Warren
Curtis	Lewis	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Fletcher	Lippitt	Smith, Ga.	Works
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Gronna	Nelson	Smoot

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is unavoidably absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I gave notice during the course of my remarks yesterday that I would offer an amendment. I then stated some reasons for the amendment, which I will not now repeat.

As will be observed, section 7 of the substitute reported by the Senate committee reads:

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect from and after one year from the date of its passage.

I now offer an amendment to strike out the words "one year," in line 2, page 10, and insert in lieu thereof the words "two years," postponing the time of the taking effect of this bill until two years after its passage. Similar action has been taken in connection with nearly all legislation passed by Congress affecting the status of existing institutions. In the case of the excise law passed for the District of Columbia, as I recall, two years, and perhaps longer, were given to barroom owners in which to close out their business. In the case of the car-coupler legislation three years were given to the railroads in which to adjust themselves to the new conditions, and in the Clayton Act two years were given to the railroads to rearrange their affairs in accordance with the provisions of that bill.

I want to say, Mr. President, that if the pending bill goes into effect within one year it will work a great hardship upon the cotton factories in my State. Those factories have three great departments, namely, the carding room, the weaving room, and the spinning room. In the carding room and in the weaving room only adults are employed. The children are employed in the spinning room. If this bill goes into effect one year hence, it will reduce the output of the factories 20 per cent, because the employees of those factories now work 10 hours a day, and a reduction of the hours of labor by 2 will necessarily effect that reduction. Those factories have contracted ahead for a year, and in order to reorganize their plants so that they may have an adjustment which will apply evenly in all the various departments they will have to secure new equipment and machinery for the spinning room, and in many instances they will have to build new additions to the factory.

I am told that they can not now contract for new machinery for delivery under two years; and, unless some such provision as I have offered is added to the bill, their output will be lessened, as I have said, 20 per cent; and not only will it lessen the output but the adult labor will not be able to work over eight hours a day, because the carding rooms and the weaving rooms are dependent upon the output of the spinning room, and under this bill those under 16 years of age will not be allowed to work more than eight hours. If, however, the factories are allowed two years in which to adjust their affairs, they can secure new machinery to meet the new conditions. They could do it earlier if they could get the machinery; but, as I am informed, it will be impossible for them to do that. In addition, as I have said, they will in many instances have to build additions in which to house the new machinery.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 10, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "one year," and in lieu thereof to insert the words "two years," so as to read:

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect from and after two years from the date of its passage.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it seems to me this amendment should not be agreed to. The provision in the pending committee amendment postpones the act going into effect for one year. I believe that the readjustments of which the Senator from North Carolina has spoken, and which he says will become necessary if the bill is passed, have been greatly exaggerated in their importance. It seems to me one year would afford ample time to obtain such additional machinery, if any is required, as may be made necessary by the passage of this legislation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me—

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course that is the very point involved in this amendment. The Senator from North Carolina has just stated—and I confess I have no information upon the subject, and I want to find out about it—that they can not do it in one year; that they can not get the machinery in one year; that it will be impossible, unless you are going to work great hardship on these people, to put this legislation into effect under two years. Has the committee made any investigation of that question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir. I was just about to state, when the Senator from Georgia interrupted me, that that suggestion was made by some representatives of those who opposed this legislation, and the matter was gone into quite at length by the committee, either in the hearings or in the discussions before the committee itself when the bill was under consideration. The committee reached the conclusion that there was an attempt to magnify the effect upon the industry which would be wrought by the provisions of this bill. I am utterly unable to understand how it will become necessary, if this bill is passed, that any great amount of machinery shall be purchased by these manufacturers, and I do not think this provision is necessary.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to say to the Senator that the only thing I know about it is that they do contend that there will have to be considerable machinery readjustment in order to coordinate all the branches and departments of these factories. Now, what I want to know is not what the Senator or his colleagues think, just on principle, but did you have any investigation to see whether they can buy this machinery or not?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; we investigated the subject, in so far as we thought it necessary to investigate it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let us see the extent of the investigation. Did you ask them whether they could get this machinery in a year or not?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know that I asked them that specific question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Did anybody ask them that question? Do the hearings show that?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the hearings disclose, at least to the satisfaction of the committee that heard the matter, that no great readjustment is required. I think the proposition on its face is an unreasonable one. To come into the Senate of the United States and say, merely because a law has been passed which will in effect compel these manufacturers to shorten the hours of labor of the few children they employ, that that fact makes it necessary for them to have two years in order to reorganize their plants and their industry, is on its face an unreasonable proposition.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. HARDWICK obtained the floor.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. HARDWICK. We are not going to vote just yet. Senators will get a vote a good deal sooner by not crying "Vote!" when we are not ready to vote. We are not going to vote until I discuss the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas had given us any facts, or if he had any real information about this question, I would be willing to follow him—

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Just a moment; let me finish the sentence. I am going to yield to the Senator fully before I take my seat, and I will tell you why: Because the sooner we get this delectable law, or whatever you please to call it—I do not know how to characterize it—to the Supreme Court of the United States, where I am confident it will be overturned, and where I am confident that at last a check will be put on attempts at this sort of legislation, the better pleased I will be. Therefore, if I thought that the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina was not a meritorious one, and was a mere effort to secure delay, I would myself vote against it, because I want it to be decided at the earliest possible moment whether or not the Congress of the United States can enact legislation of this character. But I am informed that there is substantial merit in the Senator's contention and that it will work a real hardship for these people to make, within one year, the adjustments of machinery—in spite of the cavalier way in which the Senator from Arkansas seeks to dismiss it—that will be required by the provisions of this bill.

Now, that is a question of fact. What the truth is I do not know. I do not profess to know. But when the Senator from Arkansas, for the committee, just simply says that "we have concluded that there is no reason for any such thing as this," and it is perfectly apparent that there has been no particular investigation of the facts along that line, I do not think the Senate has the information that it ought to have.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to ask the Senator a question for information on this particular point. I do not understand just what readjustment will be necessary, and I should like to have the Senator explain it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will try to explain it. As I say, my own knowledge of it is very limited, and I will yield to my friend from South Carolina to explain it exactly. There is some way in which the different departments of these factories are coordinated that makes it impossible to make changes of the kind required by this legislation in any one department without affecting them all. I do not know the details of it; but, anyhow, it is claimed that if you enact this child-labor law and it affects one of their departments, the others can not be run, under the present conditions, without readjustment. Whether it is true or not I do not even profess to know.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me yield to my friend from South Carolina. I do not know a thing about the details of this business.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I just wanted to enlarge the question a little, which perhaps will reduce the time required to answer it. I can not see, really, why putting mature labor instead of child labor on certain machinery would involve the difficulty which the Senator mentions.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I tried to explain that. In one room, which is called the card room, they work adult labor.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; and in the third room they work adult labor.

Mr. OVERMAN. And they work 10 hours a day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And in the center room they work child labor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Now, I can not see—

Mr. OVERMAN. If these machines stop at the end of eight hours, does not the Senator see that there is a 20 per cent reduction in the output?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly; but it means that if they are working all the time now in the three departments—

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; they do work all the time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And if you cut the hours to eight, you reduce the product that much.

Mr. OVERMAN. Twenty per cent; yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the question as to whether you are employing child labor or not does not enter into that, as I understand it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator will understand that the hours of labor of children are affected by this legislation—not only the character of the labor, but the hours of labor.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I know; but if you substitute other labor for child labor I can not see why it makes any difference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina rose.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from South Carolina will explain why it makes a difference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The idea is this: As everyone knows who is familiar with the situation in North Carolina and South Carolina, the amount of labor for these mills is limited. They have divided it up. Here is a diagram showing it. In the card room they employ adult labor. In the spinning room—the middle room—they employ child labor. In the weaving room—the finishing room—they employ adult labor. The number of hours that the children work is exactly adjusted to the output from the card room. The product goes through the spinning room and into the weaving room. Now, if you reduce the time of your middle force by three hours, you have got one of two things to do—you have either got to stop your machinery until you get enough adults from around about in the country and elsewhere, who may or may not be trained to this work, and have still further expense, or you have got to cut down the number of hours of the adults on both sides to conform to the reduction of hours at full time and full labor of the children intermediary.

The manufacturers claim that if you will allow them time to change their machinery so as to adjust themselves to this, they can get enough children to perform that light, not arduous, labor. It does not require adults. If you will give them time to adjust their plants to the new conditions they can do it. They will have to add more machinery than when the children work but 8 hours. They will have to have enough to take care of the 10 hours of labor of the adults.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, Mr. President, if my friend from South Carolina will pardon the suggestion—

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; in just a moment. Let me ask one question first, if the Senator pleases. Did these people make any representations to the Senator from South Carolina as to how long it would take them to alter their equipment, and to get the necessary machinery to comply with this law?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think practically every mill in my State has asked for the two years. Some of them have asked for as much as three years. They say it is practically impossible to get the machinery and install it now on account of the great demand and scarcity.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Georgia that the question to which this amendment relates has been settled in New England on three or four different occasions. We have had laws of this kind passed, first reducing the hours of labor from 11 to 10, and then from 10 hours a day to 56 hours a week, I think it was, and then from 56 to 54 hours a week; and all the conditions that these gentlemen from the South are calling attention to existed there. There was no particular trouble about meeting that situation. There will be no particular trouble in the South. It will put them to a little expense.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me ask the Senator a question, because I really do not profess to have any knowledge about this thing.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am trying to tell the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad to hear from the Senator what the fact is. Will it require a change in equipment?

Mr. LIPPITT. No; it will require the employment of—

Mr. HARDWICK. More people?

Mr. LIPPITT. Not more people.

Mr. HARDWICK. But a different kind of people?

Mr. LIPPITT. It will require the employment of labor over 14 years of age, and so far as they are now employing young children at cheap rates, it will prevent them from doing that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, I quite understand that; but I mean, as a practical business proposition, is there any reason why these men ought to have a delay for the purpose of equipping their plants and factories so as to meet the requirements of this bill?

Mr. LIPPITT. I will say to the Senator that on the occasions to which I have referred in New England no such opportunity was given to us. I do not think any mill in New England ever thought it necessary to ask for the opportunity; and I must say—

Mr. HARDWICK. I hardly think that answers the question, because we have had child-labor laws in each one of these States, too, or in most of them—certainly in mine—that were progressing, constantly improving, and we did not find it necessary. We were making gradual changes.

Mr. LIPPITT. This is progressive. This is gradual.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know how gradual it will be for some of them. I do not think it will be very hard in my State; but I do not want to do the people of any State any injustice, and I do not think any Senator does, if they can not adjust themselves to these new conditions within the time fixed by this bill. The committee must have thought it was a serious proposition, because, in spite of the opinion of the Senator from Rhode Island, they gave a year themselves for readjustment.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not see why they can not do everything in a year.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, the Senator now convinces me that he does not know very much about the situation.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will say to the Senator that I have been very reluctant to take any part in the discussion of this question, because I am in rather an anomalous situation, representing large cotton-manufacturing districts which have for years suffered from the difference in customs between the two sections; and I do not now want to be put in the position of having it even implied that I am trying to interfere in any way with the southern customs for the purpose of helping New England. I think my course, my silence on the subject, is perhaps an indication of that. But, so far as this practical question goes in regard to the operation of cotton mills, I have no hesitation in saying that there is nothing in it.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the Senator first said they did not need any time at all, and then I understood him to say a year would be enough. Now, if they do not need any time at all, there is no necessity for postponing the operation of this law for even one year. If they do not need any time at all in which to adjust themselves to it, it ought to go into effect from the moment of the President's signature.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not think I quite said such a thing as that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I think so. I think the RECORD will demonstrate it.

Mr. LIPPITT. Naturally I think it would take a month or two to meet the conditions.

Mr. HARDWICK. A month or two, then, the Senator says.

Mr. LIPPITT. But as to its requiring more than a year, or even requiring as much as a year, from my own experience in the business I do not think it will.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if he could not easily secure labor, equipped labor, men that had been taught before? Was it not easy to get labor in your mills, where it will be difficult in the South to get labor?

Mr. LIPPITT. All over the country in textile manufacturing labor is very scarce indeed, as it is in every industry.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that.

Mr. LIPPITT. And that is the usual condition.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was not that so as to your conditions when the hours of labor were reduced—that you had no trouble in getting the necessary labor?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not think it could be said that we had no trouble. We did have trouble. We had to exert ourselves. We had to reorganize in order to do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator think that these southern mills would have more trouble than you did in supplying themselves with the labor required to do this work?

Mr. LIPPITT. I think they could do it just as well in one year as in two. I am only giving the Senate my opinion on that subject. I do not think it is a very serious matter whether the bill goes into effect in one year or in two.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Rhode Island has made a remark to which I wish to reply for a moment. He said that his constituents have suffered from the difference in customs in the two sections on this question. I never heard a more selfish contention advanced on the floor of a legislative body than that embraced in the Senator's statement; nor have his constituents suffered, in my judgment, because the State of North Carolina or any other State had enacted different laws as to labor employment.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator from Georgia will yield to me, when he describes the attitude of New England toward the South on this question as selfish, he uses entirely the wrong language. He should describe it as generosity of the highest order. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that the only reason why the cotton manufacturing industry was ever established in the South was on account of the humanitarian labor laws that were enacted in Massachusetts and in Rhode Island and Connecticut.

The incipency of it occurred when those States began to establish these laws. It was the change in the running of the textile mills from 11 hours to 10 that gave the lever that made it possible for this industry to establish itself there.

As for the matter of selfishness, I fail to see what selfishness there is in running our industry without protest under these more humanitarian conditions when we allowed a competitor in our own country to go on under other conditions without protest on our part. It does not seem to me that the Senator can make the accusation of selfishness lie under such conditions.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am going to undertake to do it.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator undertakes to do many things I should like to see him do.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right. If there ever was an exhibition of the cloven foot on earth it is involved in the Senator's present performance. The Senator says that New England has suffered from this sort of competition. As a matter of fact, if I know anything about the cotton-mill industry, there is very little competition between the finer mills of New England and the coarser mills of the South. Your competition is keener among yourselves. Unfortunately, the South has been so poor, the South has been so prone industrially that she has not been able to give any New England mill one-half of the competition that the same mill got from its neighbors and its near-by competitors. The South has not been able to give New England any real competition in this matter; and why they should say that they have suffered through it, or why the Senator thinks so, is more than I can understand or appreciate.

Mr. LIPPITT. Let me explain to the Senator, as long as he evidently does not understand, and his knowledge is scant on the subject, that what first happened was that the South swept out of New England the manufacture of almost every pound of yarns, and goods made out of yarns, coarser than No. 20; all the drills, the first great fabric, the production of which the South has taken out of the hands of the New England mills, and they have had to substitute other fabrics and more difficult fabrics to manufacture.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LIPPITT. In just a moment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, but wait a minute. I am not going to yield to the Senator unless he lets me interject a remark when I want to do so.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator yielded to me.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know; but I have the floor, and I do not want the Senator to cut me off on a question. What inherent natural right has New England to take the cotton grown in our fields and manufacture it rather than have our people manufacture it at home?

Mr. LIPPITT. I will answer the Senator very plainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. You say we drove you out of business.

Mr. LIPPITT. New England has no inherent right to anything that belongs to the South; but I should think, Mr. President, that the Senator from Georgia would be just as well pleased to see mills in the United States of America, located in New England, manufacturing his cotton, as to see it go across the Atlantic Ocean to be manufactured in the mills of Great Britain and Germany and Russia, where two-thirds of his whole crop is manufactured. Of course we have no inherent right in the matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not the competition the Senator was complaining of. It was the southern competition that irked the Senator. It was the southern competition that he said was unfair to his constituency. It was the southern competition that he said drove New England into this business of manufacturing fabrics finer than No. 20.

Mr. LIPPITT. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HARDWICK. We were not discussing foreign competition, British spinning and weaving, or German spinning and weaving—not at all. The Senator was complaining almost as if it had been a bone that had been in his possession a long time and conditions had come about which made him drop part of that bone, and it did not go to Great Britain or to Germany, but it went back to the people of the South, in whose midst the cotton was raised.

Mr. LIPPITT. Oh, Mr. President, will not the Senator yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I am going to get through first. The Senator can speak in his own time.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator from Georgia understood the situation in New England on this question, he never would make such charges as that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am afraid I do understand it.

Mr. LIPPITT. Let me say to the Senator that, as one cotton manufacturer, I have always been very much pleased, indeed, to see the South take up that industry.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have not complained of the competition which she gave us. I have stood it, in spite of the fact that it was competition very difficult to meet. I know the question of how to meet that competition cost me many, many nights of anxious thought. It took out of the mills in which I myself was interested fabrics that we would have been very glad to continue to make. I did not complain about it then, however, and I do not complain about it now. We in New England went to work to supply that deficiency. We were glad to see the South diversifying. We thought it was a good thing for America that those mills should be there. But because we did that it does not prevent me in a friendly spirit from stating frankly what was the condition forced upon us which it was very difficult to meet. I think the Senator is not dealing in a sense of justice and fairness when he makes that statement.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was judging the Senator only by his remarks. I know one of the potent forces behind this legislation is commercial rivalry of the very sort the Senator describes.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am not charging the Senator personally with it, and I am very glad to get from him an express disclaimer, because the position he assumed seems to indicate that efforts of that sort were not remote from his own mind.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. Just a moment. As far as the Senator is concerned, I, of course, accept his personal disclaimer as to his own position and his own views; but the fact does remain, in my judgment, and I do not hesitate to assert it here, that the industries in other sections of the country that think the South has some advantage in regard to this question is in a large measure and to a great extent behind this bill and supporting it for purely selfish reasons.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from Georgia knows perfectly well there has been an enormous sum of money spent in advocacy of this bill. He knows there has been a lobby here advocating this measure for the last two or three years as vigorous as any lobby that ever appeared in the Halls of Congress. I have been told that one or two hundred thousand dollars have been spent in the advocacy of this measure. I venture to say that if the Senator will go to the books of the association that has been responsible for it he will find that not a single dollar was subscribed by the people whom he describes,

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. LIPPITT. On the contrary, this measure has been backed by the idealists and the humanitarians of the country. It is the ministers, the women, those we sometimes call the uplifters, who have been behind this bill, and it has not been because of rivalry in commerce.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the Senator going to vote for this bill?

Mr. LIPPITT. I have been in great doubt whether to vote for the bill or not. I have been very much impressed by the argument that it is not for the Federal Government to take this power of control of these industries, but the province for the States themselves. I have been urged to do it by more people in my State than any other one measure that has been brought to my attention. Among those I may say that there has not been one engaged in manufacture.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was going to ask the Senator about that.

Mr. LIPPITT. So far as I know, not a single one, but a very large number of women, a great number of clergymen and of lawyers. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken in his remarks.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator and I will not have any quarrel about that.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator misunderstands the question entirely if he thinks it is a question of commercial rivalry.

Mr. HARDWICK. It has something to do with it. I am not mistaken about that.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I represent in part the largest cotton manufactures in the State, if not in the Union. I do not recall—and I think I am stating the entire fact—I do not recall an instance where I have had a word of any kind, personally or by letter, from any manufacturer or anybody engaged in cotton manufacturing in Massachusetts in favor of this legislation. The pressure, as far as my State is concerned, has come from the classes of people described by the Senator from Rhode Island. I think the Senator from Georgia is doing those who are engaged in the cotton-manufacturing industry in other sections of the country an injustice.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I am not. I know what I am talking about. So far as the Senator's own statement is concerned, I acquit him, of course, of any such sentiment, but I have had letters myself from people engaged in this business in other States. I will not name the States, although if my statement is further challenged I will disclose the identity of the State and put it in the RECORD, protesting against the bill because they did not have a fair chance of competition with people who employ child labor. That argument has been used in letters written to me about this very measure.

Mr. WEEKS. If they have come from Massachusetts it is very strange that those who represent Massachusetts have not received any.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know that any one of them came from Massachusetts, although that is not material. They were sent to me because of the fact of my well-known opposition to the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me inquiry?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I have heard nothing about this commercial rivalry. I represent one of the largest manufacturing States in the Union, engaged in all kinds of industry. It is my idea that the way this bill has come to life is that the President of the United States paid a visit to the Capitol and issued his personal directions to the Democratic caucus. Certainly the distinguished leader of the Senator's party would not be an accomplice in bolstering up one section of the country to the destruction of the other. The Senator certainly does not mean to argue that this bill would ever have been considered prior to the adjournment of the present session if President Wilson had not personally visited the Capitol and directed the Democratic caucus to take up the measure after they had determined not to have it considered at this session.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I thought we had gone over that subject pretty well already.

Mr. PENROSE. I was not in the Chamber when it was gone over. I simply made the inquiry for my own information.

Mr. HARDWICK. For the Senator's benefit I will say this. I think the Senator is partially right. I do not think this legislation would have been considered at the present session of Congress if it had not been for the visit of the President to the Capitol, his real visit; I never heard it denied; and for a certain position the President took, or is alleged to have taken, with respect to this very matter.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HARDWICK. In just a moment. I have no idea, and I do not think any Senator on either side of the Chamber could possibly entertain such an idea, that the President of the United States, whatever motives may have influenced him, could possibly have been influenced by this commercial rivalry business. He is not engaged in the business at all in a personal way; it could have no personal effect upon him. That part of the Senator's suggestion is, I think, inapt.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to make another inquiry of the Senator if he will permit me.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator think this method of legislation is in accord with the parliamentary traditions of a deliberative body for a majority of this Chamber to get behind closed doors and locked doors and have the Executive come down here to the Capitol, who is not a member of the legislative branch of the Government, and tell them what they shall do and what they shall not do?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I do not think that the conference was behind locked doors. The Senator will find the doors open during this sort of weather at least. But that is neither here nor there. As far as I am concerned, I want to say this: I think it is necessary for all political parties to have conferences or caucuses, or whatever you please to term them, about important measures that are pending. I do not think these political parties have a right to embrace in the subject matter of their consideration during these party conferences, measures that are utterly foreign to the declared party policy, about which there is no established party policy. Still it has been sometimes done, and sometimes Senators of both parties may, I think, have yielded to persuasion of that character.

As I said the other day when this debate began, personally I do not think that any President of the United States, be he Democrat or Republican or what not, ought to participate in anything like an attempt to control or influence legislation in any other except the way pointed out by the Constitution. I think it is a great mistake that we have drifted into such a course.

But the Senator and his party are certainly fully as guilty as my party, or its President, for the reason that this delightful practice of getting orders or suggestions or commands or entreaties, whatever you might term them, from the other end of the Avenue did not originate in this administration. The truth is, I think, it is all utterly wrong. I do not think we ought to permit it, and there is very little justification for it; but we all know our political system has developed in such a way, by an extra constitutional growth, that the President of the United States is not only the Chief Executive of the Nation charged with the duty of communicating with Congress in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, namely, by message, but so that he is also the leader of a great party, and as such he is entitled to consult with, and does consult with, his party associates in both Houses of Congress.

Intrusted with the leadership of his party, it is claimed that he has a right—and I am not fully prepared to dispute it, though I deprecate it—to advise his party associates about pending legislative measures, especially when he thinks those measures would very deeply affect the interests of the party. At any rate, that is the basis upon which all recent attempts of this kind by our Executives, from Roosevelt's day to this, must rest.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does not the Senator from Georgia recognize the right of the President under the Constitution to recommend legislation?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator need not ask me such a question as that. Everybody knows that who has read the Constitution.

Mr. THOMPSON. He has a constitutional right, and I desire to call the Senator's attention to section 3 of Article II, which makes it the absolute duty of the President.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Constitution of the United States does charge the Chief Executive of the Government with the duty of communicating his views respecting legislation to Congress, but he delivers it by message to both Houses of Congress in the way prescribed by the Constitution and in the manner laid down in that instrument. It is an entirely different proposition from that when the President of the United States comes up and privately advises with some Members of one branch of Congress about legislation.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the clause in the Constitution—

Mr. HARDWICK. Suppose you have it read.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to read section 3 of article 2.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right, read it.

Mr. THOMPSON (reading)—

SEC. 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

That is exactly what the President has done in this case, nothing more nor less, so far as I know; and I am certainly glad he did it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is that the way the Senator construes that section of the Constitution, that it means the President may come here privately and call out one Senator or call out three or four Senators and sit down and tell them what Congress ought to do?

Mr. THOMPSON. I know of nothing of that kind happening.

Mr. HARDWICK. I said just now I do not approve of that way of doing. More than one President has done it. All Presidents have done it since my experience in public affairs began, if we are to believe what is reported and published. I am not willing for you to blame my President more than I blamed yours. When the conditions were reversed President Roosevelt and President Taft undertook to do the same sort of thing. They were all tarred with the same stick. Those people who think it is wrong for the President to do that must condemn it impartially and without any partisanship. If excuses can be made for the others they can also be made for President Wilson, as well as for Mr. Roosevelt and as for Mr. Taft. The fact that the President is the leader of the great political party to which he belongs is some excuse if not entire justification for that sort of a position. I assume that the President of the United States, whether he is Democrat or Republican, would not come up and lay very strenuous commands on Congress. He might suggest in a delightful, tactful, considerate way that he thought a certain procedure might be for the benefit of the country and for the best interests of the party. I assume in the absence of definite and contrary information from somebody else that that is what the President of the United States did in this case, but no more. I hope he did no more. Now, going back to the amendment. I did not intend to get away from it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has asked a very pertinent question, whether any reliable and definite information had been furnished Senators with respect to the merits of the amendment offered by my colleague. I will say to the Senator that quite a number of leading cotton manufacturers in my State have called upon me with reference to this amendment. Among them there were three of the most prominent cotton manufacturers of the State. They are gentlemen of as high character as live in North Carolina, and I would accept as absolute verity any statement they would make to me.

Those gentlemen discussed fully with me, and I am sure they did with my colleague, the merits of the amendment and the reasons why they felt that justice to them, if this bill was to become a law, required that its operation should be postponed for at least two years. They stated to me that the mill is divided into three parts; that the machinery of those parts is so evenly balanced and adjusted that one department in 24 hours or in a given length of time would do the same work that the other departments did in the fabrication of cotton goods in that same period. That is, they said the spinning room, in which the children and the women are employed, is provided with machinery that would take up and manipulate the entire output of the carding room for that day; that it would take up and finish the entire work of the weaving room during that period; each of the separate rooms working the same number of hours. They said, if you require one of the rooms to operate for 8 hours and the other rooms to operate for 10 hours, that it would unbalance the whole system of production and manufacture.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then the Senator thinks the amendment really ought to be adopted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. To complete my statement, the suggestion was that they wished to continue to employ child labor, and to employ it according to the provisions of this act; that is, between the ages of 14 and 16, and to require them to work only eight hours a day. They wished also to continue in the card room and the weaving room with adult laborers working 10 hours a day. They said in order to enable the children to work in the spinning room and keep up with the adults employed in the card room and the weaving room it would be necessary to increase the capacity of the machinery 20 per cent, and it would be also necessary to enlarge the space occupied by that machinery.

Mr. KERN. Suppose that the children in the spinning room were superseded by adult labor, would any alteration at all be required?

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course not, Mr. President; but the purpose of this bill is not to deny the cotton manufacturers the privilege to employ child labor, but it is to require them, if they do employ child labor, to work the children only eight hours a day and between certain ages. They stated it was their purpose to continue to employ child labor according to the terms of this bill—not in violation of its terms, but in pursuance of the terms of the bill. They stated that labor was scarce, anyway; that some of these children were already skilled laborers in these rooms; and, as a matter of getting skilled labor and labor already fitted and trained in this work, they proposed to continue to employ child labor in these rooms, but to employ it according to the terms of the bill.

The trouble comes right there, Mr. President, according to the statement of these gentlemen to me. They said that they had thoroughly investigated the matter—and I have no doubt about the truth of their statement—and they had ascertained that it would be impossible for them within the course of one year to secure the machinery necessary to make this change. They said that they found that the manufacturers of this machinery were crowded with orders ahead, and that they would be utterly unable to secure the machinery within the next 12 months. Therefore they asked, as a matter of justice, that they be given the necessary time to enable them to get the necessary additional machinery, for it is clear that if child labor is to be used at all in the spinning room, and to be worked only eight hours, while the other rooms are operated for 10 hours during the day, the space must be enlarged, and there must be additional machinery. That additional machinery must be purchased in the market, and they stated, as a matter of fact, that they were unable to get the machinery; that they had investigated the matter thoroughly and found they could not possibly get it within 12 months. That is the statement they made to me, and I have every reason to believe it is absolutely true.

Mr. HARDWICK. Accepting that statement at its full value—and I know the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] would not make it on this floor unless he was convinced that it was truthful—I expect to vote for the amendment proposed by the other Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], because I do not believe that any Member of this body wants to work a real hardship on those people and not to give them a reasonable opportunity to get themselves ready to comply with this proposed law, if it shall be sustained by the courts. But for that, Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE rose.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator from Connecticut want to take the floor or does he desire to interrupt me?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have about concluded, but not quite. But for that I should vote against the amendment; but for that I should vote to strike out the one year of delay which is in the bill, because I am anxious that this question shall get to the Supreme Court of the United States, and shall get there as speedily as possible.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on laying the amendment on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator from Kansas if he will withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. CURTIS. I regret that I can not accede to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, because I have been waiting for two days to vote for the original measure. I shall be compelled to leave the Chamber in a few moments. Therefore I must insist on my motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], but I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote on this bill and the amendment. I therefore shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. For that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], but on this bill I am privileged to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr.

LODGE]. In his absence I withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], but on this bill I am free to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I should like to vote "nay," but I can not get a transfer of my pair. So I will content myself with announcing my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. He is absent and I do not know how he would vote on this particular question if he were present. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire again to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the enforced absence of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. THOMPSON. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have a pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], but I understand he would vote the same way I intend to vote, and therefore I shall take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRYAN. I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] is necessarily absent and that he is paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. REED. Transferring my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], I vote "yea."

Mr. COLT. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], but I am at liberty to vote on this question, and I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I should like to vote directly against the amendment; but as I can not do so, I shall vote "yea" on this motion.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. TAGGART. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to announce that I am paired on this bill with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], but we had an understanding that I could vote as I chose on amendments and interlocking motions, and therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Myers	Smoot
Beckham	Hughes	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Husting	Norris	Stone
Chamberlain	James	Oliver	Swanson
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Taggart
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Phelan	Thompson
Colt	Kern	Pittman	Townsend
Cummins	La Follette	Reed	Weeks
Curtis	Lane	Robinson	Works
Fall	Lee, Md.	Shafroth
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Sheppard

NAYS—14.

Bankhead	Culberson	Overman	Warren
Borah	Fletcher	Shields	Williams
Bryan	Hardwick	Simmons
Clapp	Lewis	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—39.

Brady	Dillingham	Gronna	Jones
Broussard	du Pont	Harding	Lea, Tenn.
Catron	Goff	Hollis	Lippitt
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Johnson, Me.	Lodge

McCumber	Page	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman
McLean	Poinceter	Smith, Ga.	Underwood
Martine, N. J.	Pomerene	Smith, Md.	Vardaman
Newlands	Ransdell	Smith, Mich.	Wadsworth
O'Gorman	Saulsbury	Sutherland	Walsh
Owen	Sherman	Thomas

So Mr. OVERMAN's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment of which I gave notice a day or two ago, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 24, after the word "meridian," it is proposed to strike out the colon and insert a comma and the following words:

or any article or commodity the product of any farm which is the material for the product of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment in the United States upon which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work or children between the ages of 14 and 16 years have been employed or permitted to work more than 11 hours a day.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator desire the yeas and nays?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, at the time the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] was pending I made several ineffectual efforts to get recognition. I wanted to say something on his amendment, but a motion to table it was made, so I could not do so.

Mr. President, I ask to have read a letter received from the secretary of the southern branch of the National Child Labor Association in relation to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina. It is a short letter, and I think other Senators have received similar letters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[National Child Labor Committee, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City. Honorary members: Woodrow Wilson, William H. Taft, and Theodore Roosevelt. Executive officers: Felix Adler, chairman; Homer Folks and Samuel McCune Lindsay, vice chairmen; V. Everit Macy, treasurer; Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City; A. J. McKelway, secretary for Southern States, 204 Bond Building, Washington, D. C.; Edward N. Clobber, secretary for Northern States, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City. Board of trustees: Felix Adler (chairman), Jane Addams, Mrs. Caroline B. Alexander, Francis G. Caffey, Edward T. Devine, Homer Folks, William E. Harmon, Mrs. Florence Kelley, Adolph Lewisohn, Samuel McCune Lindsay, V. Everit Macy, Charles P. Nell, Isaac N. Seligman, Lillian D. Wald, Paul M. Warburg, Stephen S. Wise, and John W. Wood.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 7, 1916.

Senator FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In behalf of the children who are to be affected by the passage of the Federal child-labor bill, I wish to enter my earnest protest against the proposed amendment postponing for two years the operation of this law. It would mean that 12-year-old children could enter factories, either in accordance with or in violation of existing law, and would not be rescued by the operation of the Federal bill. The friends of the measure outside of Congress were willing to agree to a postponement of one year after the passage of the bill, but it will be a great disappointment to those who have the interests of the children at heart if this is lengthened to two years.

State after State has passed just such legislation as that proposed, or more advanced legislation, and it has never been thought necessary to wait two years before a State law should go into effect. Any establishment can adjust itself in one year. And since this bill allows children between 14 and 16 to be employed as much as 8 hours a day between the hours of 6 a. m. and 7 p. m., or 13 hours in all, those employed in the spinning room of cotton mills can be employed for two shifts of 6½ hours each, without the necessity of providing any more machinery.

Earnestly hoping that this proposed amendment will be defeated, I remain,

Cordially, yours,

A. J. MCKELWAY,
Secretary for the Southern States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, Mr. McKelway is the gentleman who appeared before the committee in regard to this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood the Senator to say that the letter was from some manufacturers' association?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; from the National Child Labor Association, of which Mr. McKelway is the secretary for the southern branch, as I understand. Mr. Woodrow Wilson, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, and Mr. William Howard Taft are the three honorary presidents of the association, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I misunderstood the Senator. I thought it was a letter from some manufacturers' association.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator is through, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will give the Senator a chance to do that when I get through.

Mr. President, I have no disposition to hurry the mills in making their adjustments if this bill is to pass; but I doubt whether even two years would be of any use to them, because I think that their opinion is, and the opinion of their legal advisers in many instances is, that the law will be declared to be unconstitutional. So I do not think that they will attempt to adapt themselves to the provisions of the law, but will rely upon a declaration of the courts that it is invalid. Were it not for that I should be inclined to give time for any adaptation that might be necessary if I were satisfied that it is needed; but I am not quite satisfied that it is needed; and in view of the fact that if this law is to be contested, I want it to be contested at the earliest possible opportunity and settled at the earliest possible moment, I was compelled to vote to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I notice that the Senator read into the Record the other day a statement in regard to a great deal of money being spent. Was it for the purpose of lobbying, and by whom was it spent?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not say that it was used for lobbying. I read from the testimony of this same gentleman, Mr. McKelway, before the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, that was Mr. McKelway, was it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. About the amount of money which they raised each year, which was $60,000, if I remember correctly; but I have no criticism to make upon that. It is simply, in one view of it, testimony to the earnestness of the people who are back of this movement, if they are willing to spend their money in publicity and in trying to impress their views upon the country. I simply cite that as an evidence of the pertinacity of it and to show that even if this Congress should vote against the bill it would come up again, and would be in the same situation next year, and the year after, and the year after, until it is settled one way or the other.

That is all I have to say about that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment here which I wish to offer. I explained it a little while ago in my speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 13, after the word "years," it is proposed to insert the words "who can not read and write"; and, on page 5, line 20, after the word "years," it is proposed to insert the words "who can not read and write."

Mr. TILLMAN. It simply means that I want to keep children who can not read and write out of cotton mills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. OVERMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement in regard to my pair that I made on the former roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). As I announced before, I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and therefore withhold my vote. If the Senator from Ohio were here he would vote "yea" on the bill, and I would vote "nay" if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. BRYAN (when the name of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas was called). The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made before, I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. LODGE] is unavoidably absent. I wish to announce that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent. I am authorized to announce that if the Senator from Connecticut were here he would vote "yea." That being the case, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when Mr. PAGE's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PAGE] is necessarily absent from the Senate, and, as has been announced by the Senator from Rhode Island, he stands paired, but if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when Mr. POINDEXTER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when Mr. POMERENE's name was called). The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." Therefore I am at liberty to vote and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and for that reason withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made before with reference to my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and to state that he has a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should be compelled to vote against the measure.

Mr. THOMPSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I am informed that if he were present, he would vote "yea." I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair that I announced before, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]; but the secretary to Senator HARDING has informed me that if Senator HARDING were present he would vote "yea"; and as I am for the bill I vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, so I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when Mr. WALSH's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote for the bill, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TAGGART. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I learn that I can transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], which I do and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY], all of whom, if present, would vote "yea."

I have also been requested to announce the following pairs: The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—52.

Ashurst	Gronna	Lippitt	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Smoot
Borah	Hughes	Myers	Sterling
Chamberlain	Husting	Nelson	Stone
Chilton	James	Norris	Swanson
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Taggart
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Pittman	Thompson
Colt	Kenyon	Ransdell	Townsend
Culberson	Kern	Reed	Underwood
Cummins	La Follette	Robinson	Vardaman
Curtis	Lane	Shafroth	Warren
Fall	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Weeks
Gallinger	Lewis	Shields	Works

NAYS—12.

Bankhead	Hardwick	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Oliver	Simmons	Tillman
Fletcher	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Williams

NOT VOTING—31.

Brady	Gore	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Brandegge	Harding	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Broussard	Hollis	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Catron	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Sutherland
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Page	Thomas
Dillingham	Lodge	Poindexter	Wadsworth
du Pont	McCumber	Pomerene	Walsh
Goff	McLean	Saulsbury

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees upon the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. CLAPP conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15455, known as the ship-purchase bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator does not intend to go on with the consideration of the bill to-night, does he?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not. I will say to the Senator that I am going to ask unanimous consent to lay the bill aside temporarily. I make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is temporarily laid aside.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 1159. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Coos Head Military Reservation, in the State of Oregon, to the cities of Marshfield and North Bend, Oreg., both being municipal corporations, for park purposes; and

S. 6308. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease, for production of oil and gas, ceded lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5466) to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry and desert-land entry, and to amend an act entitled "An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry," approved October 1, 1890, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5886) extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River, at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,' approved August 23, 1912," with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5976) to amend an act approved May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia," approved June 8, 1896, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5. An act for erecting a suitable memorial to John Ericsson;

H. R. 6904. An act authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla.;

H. R. 7591. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913;

H. R. 8816. An act authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the sailing vessel Golden Gate to be registered as a vessel of the United States;

H. R. 11474. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to permit the construction of a public highway through the fish-cultural station in Unicoi County, Tenn.;

H. R. 12712. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes";

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 15096. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States;

H. R. 15575. An act to amend the act of March 22, 1906, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes";

H. R. 16417. An act to provide for the exportation of gin in bond in other than original packages;

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 16700. An act to amend an act relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, approved March 4, 1913.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the Public Service Commission of the State of Wyoming praying for the settlement of the difficulties between the railroads and their employees by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Admiral R. D. Evans Camp, United States Spanish War Veterans, of Sacramento, Cal., praying for the passage of the so-called Nolan minimum-wage bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GRONNA presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Grand Forks, N. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide compulsory arbitration of labor disputes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9856) granting to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association and to the Manufacturers' Railway Co. permission to transfer certain rights of easement for railway purposes heretofore granted by the United States to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co. and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, respectively, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 768) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1989) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church, Keyser, W. Va., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 770) thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162) proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15287) authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Colorado and Pike National Forests, Colo., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 769) thereon.

PUBLIC PARK AT FLANDREAU, S. DAK.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 14944) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer on certain conditions the south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 48, Moody County, S. Dak., to the city of Flandreau, to be used as a public park or playgrounds, and I submit a report (No. 767) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill be acted upon at once. A Senate bill exactly similar to this bill passed the Senate on Saturday last. I hope, therefore, that unanimous consent will be given for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that I could not hear a word the Senator from South Dakota said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] upon the statement that identically the same bill, being a Senate bill, passed the Senate on Saturday last.

Mr. PENROSE. What is the bill, Mr. President?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I repeat, the bill is identical with a Senate bill which passed this body on last Saturday. It is rather an important matter. There are no objections to the bill from any source. The House of Representatives will not have any more committee work at this session, and this is the only way in which this bill can be passed at this session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the bill now reported from the committee is a House bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; and the statement has been made that it is identical with the bill which passed the Senate on Saturday last.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. This is the same bill, except that that was a Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEWARK TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

Mr. HUGHES. On behalf of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] I report from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 193) authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster at Newark, N. J., with a special canceling die for the Newark Two hundred and fiftieth Anniversary Celebration, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. A similar joint resolution passed the Senate, and the House passed its own joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD RESIDENCE OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. MYERS. The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) extending the provisions of an act approved June 16, 1898, passed the House, came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. A like resolution has been acted upon by the Senate Committee on Public Lands. I ask unanimous consent that House joint resolution 247 be withdrawn from the Committee on Military Affairs and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I may say this course is agreeable to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROPOSED BUREAU OF LABOR SAFETY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, a day or two ago, when we were considering the calendar, upon motion the bill H. R. 153, known as the safety-appliance bill, was recommitted to the Committee on Education and Labor. I have prepared a substitute for the bill which I desire to offer and have printed, although I am not ready to report it. I present it in order to have it printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLAPP:

A bill (S. 6806) granting an increase of pension to Marion V. Stansbury; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 6807) fixing and establishing a boundary line between the property of the United States of America, on Salmon Bay, State of Washington, and the property of Betterton-Morgan Co. (Inc.), a corporation, giving authority and providing for the conveyance of property in connection therewith, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BALTIMORE & WASHINGTON TRANSIT CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5976) to amend an act approved May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia," approved June 8, 1896, which were, on page 2, line 4, after "District," to strike out quotation marks; on page 2, line 5, to strike out "Sec. 2"; on page 2, line 17, to strike out all after "Columbia" down to and including "company," in line 21, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the said transit company shall comply with the laws and regulations relating to the paving and repairing of streets in the District of Columbia, and to amend the title so as to read: 'An act to amend an act approved May 29, 1908, entitled 'An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore & Washington Transit Co., of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia,' approved June 8, 1896.'"

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "Interior Department" and insert "Secretary of the Interior"; on page 1, line 3, after "and," to insert "he"; on page 1, line 3, after "authorized," to strike out the comma and insert "and"; on page 1, lines 4 and 5, to strike out "and directed immediately to proceed by all necessary and proper means" and insert "in his discretion in so far as the authorization made herein will permit"; on page 1, lines 7 and 8, to strike out "what are known as the western deserts and"; on page 1, line 9, to strike out "in the State of California"; on page 2, line 15, to strike out all after "authorized," down to and including "Survey," in line 17; on page 3, line 3, to strike out all after "Sec. 4," down to the period in line 8, and insert "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same."

Mr. WORKS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ABANDONED MILITARY RESERVATIONS IN NEVADA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5466) to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry and desert-land entry, and to amend an act entitled "An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry," approved October 1, 1890, which was, in line 7, after the word "otherwise," to insert: "Provided, That this act is intended to make applicable to the desert-land laws only such lands as were included under the act of March 3, 1877, providing for the disposition of public lands under the desert-land laws."

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 6904. An act authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla.;

H. R. 15096. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States;

H. R. 15575. An act to amend the act of March 22, 1906, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 7591. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913;

H. R. 12712. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes";

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 16700. An act to amend an act relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, approved March 4, 1913.

H. R. 5. An act for erecting a suitable memorial to John Ericsson, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

H. R. 8816. An act authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the sailing vessel Golden Gate to be registered as a vessel of the United States, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 11474. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to permit the construction of a public highway through the fish-cultural station in Unicoi County, Tenn., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

H. R. 16417. An act to provide for the exportation of gin in bond in other than original packages was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., Tuesday, August 8, 1916) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 9, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 8 (legislative day of August 5), 1916.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

Maj. Willard D. Newbill, Field Artillery, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from July 26, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Adrian S. Fleming, detailed in The Adjutant General's Department.

Maj. Manus McCloskey, Third Field Artillery, to be lieutenant colonel from July 26, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Willard D. Newbill, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Maj. Johnson Hagood, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from July 26, 1916, vice Lieut. Col. Henry H. Whitney, detailed in The Adjutant General's Department.

Capt. John L. Hughes, Coast Artillery Corps, to be major from July 26, 1916, vice Maj. Johnson Hagood, promoted.

MEDICAL CORPS.

To be colonels with rank from July 1, 1916, to fill original vacancies.

Lieut. Col. William B. Banister, Medical Corps.
Lieut. Col. Charles F. Mason, Medical Corps.
Lieut. Col. James D. Glennan, Medical Corps.
Lieut. Col. Alfred E. Bradley, Medical Corps.
Lieut. Col. Euclid B. Frick, Medical Corps.
Lieut. Col. Frank R. Keefer, Medical Corps.
Lieut. Col. Charles Willcox, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.

To be lieutenant colonels with rank from July 1, 1916, to fill original vacancies.

Maj. William H. Wilson, Medical Corps.
Maj. William F. Lewis, Medical Corps.
Maj. Thomas S. Bratton, Medical Corps.
Maj. Thomas J. Kirkpatrick, Medical Corps.
Maj. Irving W. Rand, Medical Corps.
Maj. Powell C. Fauntleroy, Medical Corps.
Maj. James S. Wilson, Medical Corps.
Maj. Basil H. Dutcher, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.
Maj. Leigh A. Fuller, Medical Corps.
Maj. George A. Skinner, Medical Corps.
Maj. Carl R. Darnall, Medical Corps.
Maj. Henry Page, Medical Corps.

To be lieutenant colonels with rank from July 1, 1916, to fill casual vacancies.

Maj. Bailey K. Ashford, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Lieut. Col. William B. Banister, promoted.

Maj. Henry A. Webber, Medical Corps, vice Lieut. Col. Charles F. Mason, promoted.

Maj. Jere B. Clayton, Medical Corps, vice Lieut. Col. James D. Glennan, promoted.

Maj. Weston P. Chamberlain, Medical Corps, vice Lieut. Col. Alfred E. Bradley, promoted.

Maj. Edward R. Schreiner, Medical Corps, vice Lieut. Col. Euclid B. Frick, promoted.

Maj. Frederick M. Hartsock, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Lieut. Col. Frank R. Keefer, promoted.

Maj. Douglas F. Duval, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Lieut. Col. Charles Willcox, promoted.

To be majors with rank from July 1, 1916, to fill original vacancies.

Capt. Charles F. Morse, Medical Corps.
Capt. Haywood S. Hansell, Medical Corps.
Capt. Junius C. Gregory, Medical Corps.
Capt. Clarence H. Connor, Medical Corps.
Capt. Jay W. Grissinger, Medical Corps.
Capt. Will L. Pyles, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.

Capt. William M. Smart, Medical Corps.
Capt. Robert M. Blanchard, Medical Corps.
Capt. James Bourke, Medical Corps.
Capt. Samuel M. De Loffre, Medical Corps.
Capt. Louis C. Duncan, Medical Corps.
Capt. Edward M. Talbott, Medical Corps.
Capt. John A. Clark, Medical Corps.

Capt. Samuel J. Morris, Medical Corps.
Capt. Jacob M. Coffin, Medical Corps.
Capt. John W. Hanner, Medical Corps.
Capt. Levy M. Hathaway, Medical Corps.
Capt. Alexander Murray, Medical Corps.
Capt. Philip W. Huntington, Medical Corps.
Capt. James D. Fife, Medical Corps.
Capt. William A. Powell, Medical Corps.
Capt. Jesse R. Harris, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.

Capt. George H. Scott, Medical Corps.
Capt. Robert L. Carswell, Medical Corps.
Capt. Charles F. Craig, Medical Corps.
Capt. William P. Banta, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.

Capt. Robert H. Pierson, Medical Corps.
Capt. James I. Mabee, Medical Corps.
Capt. George P. Peed, Medical Corps.
Capt. Ralph S. Porter, Medical Corps.
Capt. Henry D. Thomason, Medical Corps.
Capt. Percy L. Jones, Medical Corps.
Capt. Fred W. Palmer, Medical Corps.
Capt. Edward B. Vedder, Medical Corps.
Capt. Henry F. Pipes, Medical Corps.
Capt. Charles L. Foster, Medical Corps.
Capt. John R. Bosley, Medical Corps.
Capt. Robert C. Loving, Medical Corps.
Capt. Orville G. Brown, Medical Corps.
Capt. George F. Juenemann, Medical Corps.
Capt. Joseph F. Siler, Medical Corps.
Capt. Arthur M. Whaley, Medical Corps.
Capt. Theodore Lamson, Medical Corps.
Capt. Craig R. Snyder, Medical Corps.
Capt. Ernest G. Bingham, Medical Corps.
Capt. James D. Heysinger, Medical Corps.
Capt. Lloyd L. Smith, Medical Corps.
Capt. John B. Huggins, Medical Corps.
Capt. William H. Tefft, Medical Corps.
Capt. Llewellyn P. Williamson, Medical Corps.
Capt. William R. David, Medical Corps.
Capt. Leartus J. Owen, Medical Corps.
Capt. Robert M. Culler, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.

To be majors with rank from July 1, 1916, to fill casual vacancies.

Capt. Frank W. Weed, Medical Corps, vice Maj. William H. Wilson, promoted.

Capt. William A. Wickline, Medical Corps, vice Maj. William F. Lewis, promoted.

Capt. Howard H. Bailly, Medical Corps, vice Maj. Thomas S. Bratton, promoted.

Capt. Harry G. Humphreys, Medical Corps, vice Maj. Thomas J. Kirkpatrick, promoted.

Capt. Paul L. Freeman, Medical Corps, vice Maj. Irving W. Rand, promoted.

Capt. William A. Duncan, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Powell C. Fauntleroy, promoted.

Capt. Earl H. Bruns, Medical Corps, vice Maj. James S. Wilson, promoted.

Capt. Herbert C. Gibner, Medical Corps, vice Maj. Basil H. Dutcher, promoted.

Capt. Clarence LeR. Cole, Medical Corps, vice Maj. Leigh A. Fuller, promoted.

Capt. Albert G. Love, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. George A. Skinner, promoted.

Capt. Harold W. Jones, Medical Corps, vice Maj. Carl R. Darnall, promoted.

Capt. Omar W. Pinkston, Medical Corps, vice Maj. Henry Page, promoted.

Capt. Mathew A. Reasoner, Medical Corps, vice Maj. Bailey K. Ashford, promoted, subject to examination required by law.

Capt. Henry J. Nichols, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Henry A. Webber, promoted.

Capt. Louis H. Hanson, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Jere B. Clayton, promoted.

Capt. Lucius L. Hopwood, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Weston P. Chamberlain, promoted.

Capt. Charles E. Freeman, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Edward R. Schreiner, promoted.

Capt. Ferdinand Schmitter, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Frederick M. Hartsock, promoted.

Capt. Frederick S. Macy, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law, vice Maj. Douglas F. Duval, promoted.

To be captains with rank from June 7, 1916, after three years' service.

First Lieut. Harry L. Dale, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.

First Lieut. Alvin W. Schoenleber, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. Ernest C. McCulloch, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. George R. Callender, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. Edward T. B. Weidner, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. Raymond W. Bliss, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. Raymond C. Bull, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. Norman T. Kirk, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. William B. Borden, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. Clarence R. Bell, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. Robert H. Duenner, Medical Corps.
First Lieut. Bertram F. Duckwall, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.
First Lieut. Halbert P. Harris, Medical Corps, subject to examination required by law.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL RESERVE CORPS.

To be first lieutenants in the Medical Reserve Corps with rank from August 3, 1916.

Lemuel Grant Baldwin, of New York.
John Hasting Bell, of Arkansas.
Max Bornstein, of Wisconsin.
James Harvey Brothers, of New Jersey.
Julius Caesar Davis, Jr., of Florida.
Arthur Brewster Emmons, 2d, of Massachusetts.
Lemuel Whittington Gorham, of New York.
Leon Jacobs, of Arizona.
Adam Kemble, of the District of Columbia.
Albert William Lindberg, of Illinois.
Charles Daniel Lockwood, of California.
Henry Edmund Meleney, of New York.
William Austin Mills, of Florida.
Arthur Pedro Perry, of Massachusetts.
Charles Winfield Perkins, of New York.
Henry Dudley Prescott, of Massachusetts.
Samuel Herbert Richman, of Illinois.
Alfred Alexander Schwartz, of New York.
James Warren Sever, of Massachusetts.
Jerome Wagner, of New York.
Walter Albert Baetier, of Maryland.
Charles Metcalfe Byrnes, of Maryland.
Frederick Joseph Garlick, of New York.
William Morris Hupp, of Maryland.
Thomas Brantley Henderson, of North Carolina.
William David Jack, of Indiana.
John Hendricks King, of Maryland.
Newdigate Moreland Owensby, of Maryland.
Frank Elliott Perkins, of North Carolina.
George William Pressly, of North Carolina.
Frank Roxborough Ruff, of North Carolina.
Harry Allen Sadden, of New York.
Theodor Bratrud, of Minnesota.
Enshraim Kirkpatrick Findley, of Illinois.
Harry Knott, of Indiana.
Louis Rudolph, of Illinois.
Isaac Montrose Taylor, of North Carolina.
Fred Paul Weltner, of West Virginia.
Charles Shorey Butler, of Massachusetts.
Eustace Lincoln Fiske, of Massachusetts.
Gilbert Horrax, of New Jersey.
Paul Hector Provandie, of Massachusetts.
Cyril Godfrey Richards, of Massachusetts.
Wade Stanley Wright, of Massachusetts.

CHIEF OF BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Commander Leigh C. Palmer to be Chief of the Bureau of Navigation in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of four years, vice Capt. Victor Blue, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate August 8 (legislative day of August 5), 1916.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

John E. Kinnane, of Bay City, Mich., to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Michigan, vice Clyde I. Webster, whose term expired on August 5, 1916.

POSTMASTERS. CONNECTICUT.

Albert B. Goodrich, Berlin.

FLORIDA.

Lewis M. Raulerson, Okeechobee.

MASSACHUSETTS.

James J. Hunt, Winchendon.

William J. Young, Woburn.

NEW YORK.

William S. Charles, Hornell.

Alfred Cox, Hawthorne.

Edward C. Elliott, Orangeburg.

Benjamin Franklin, Ovid.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Lillian G. McGinnis, Ellendale.

OREGON.

Elizabeth Thompson, Nyssa.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Martin A. King, Clarke Summit.

W. F. Packard, New Albany.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

A. Posthuma, Centerville.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 8, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that though half the world seems to have forgotten Thee, and though the sky is overcast with dark and ominous clouds, Thou doest live and reign, and the sun shall surely shine again.

Hasten the day, we beseech Thee, when the evil passions of men shall have spent themselves, when they shall turn again to Thee and seek forgiveness, when a deeper love shall come and justice have its sway, when men shall live together as born of Thee, and peace with all its glory dwell in the hearts of all peoples. In the spirit of the Master, amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to correct yesterday's Journal?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I may be misinformed as to exactly what I want, but I will state it and let the Speaker decide. H. R. 13718 was reported and is on the House Calendar. Yesterday S. 5202, of exactly the same import, came over. I had requested that the Senate bill lie on the Speaker's table, and the parliamentarian intended to let the bill do that, but by mistake or inadvertence it appears both in the Journal and RECORD that the bill was referred to the committee. I desire to vacate whatever was done and correct the RECORD and Journal, because the bill in fact has not gone to the committee yet.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks to vacate the annotation made inadvertently referring the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—

Mr. ADAMSON. And leave it on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of that bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Senate 5202.

Mr. MANN. He also wants to vacate the reference, if it has been referred.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; that is what I asked.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman also desires to vacate the reference.

Mr. ADAMSON. And also to correct the RECORD and Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Journal as corrected was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 14944. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer on certain conditions the south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 48, Moody County, S. Dak., to the city of Flandreau, to be used as a public park or playgrounds.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 6626. An act to fix the rate of pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office; to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12717. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the Army bill shall be in order to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table, the conference report on the Army bill shall be in order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15522, to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15522, to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 15522) to establish a national park service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, who has been sick for a little more than a week. I desire to ask leave of absence for him for five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] asks leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. RUSSELL, for five days, on account of sickness. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. GRAY, who is very ill at the hospital.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for indefinite leave of absence for his colleague [Mr. GRAY of Alabama] on account of illness. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent Mr. BELL was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar that are not objected to be considered next Friday, subject, of course, to the consideration of conference reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that on next Friday bills on the Private Calendar, not objected to, may be considered, subject, of course, to the presentation and consideration of conference reports, and so forth. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in that connection would it not be practical on Friday to meet at 11 o'clock, with the understanding we quit not later than 4 o'clock?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to meet at that hour; I do not know what other gentlemen may think of it.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, the latter part could not very well be provided, but I hope the gentleman will ask that on Friday we meet at 11 o'clock and privately have an understanding we will quit not later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman we will meet to-morrow, and I intend to ask that we adjourn until Friday, and I will then couple with that the request that we meet at 11 o'clock on Friday. I will make that request to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I have no further request at this time. The matter is deferred until to-morrow.

COMPOSITORS, ETC., IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 6626) to fix the rate of pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask my colleague whether there is a similar bill on the House Calendar?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes, sir. The printing bill, which is a document of 60 or 70 pages, includes this proposition.

Mr. MANN. I think a bill of that sort ought to go to the committee.

Mr. TAVENNER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. TAVENNER. This matter has already been before the Printing Committee and has been reported out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague yield for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Not on this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This bill has been considered—

Mr. MANN. I have objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill is referred to the committee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15957. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 16699. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13224. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 6181. An act for the relief of Letitia W. Garrison;

H. R. 7883. An act for the relief of Charlotte M. Johnston;

H. R. 16764. An act to authorize the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties, in Pennsylvania, their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Watsonstown, Northumberland County, Pa., to White Deer Township, Union County, Pa.;

H. R. 16875. An act granting the consent of Congress to Crisp County, Ga., to construct a bridge across Flint River, Ga., between Crisp and Sumter Counties;

H. R. 16891. An act granting the consent of Congress to Traill County, N. Dak., and to Polk County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North;

H. R. 16380. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Highland Township, Pennington County, Minn., to construct a bridge across Red Lake River;

H. R. 16534. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16604. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, from the borough of Montgomery, Lycoming County, Pa., to Muncy Creek Township, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 11240. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 12194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 13620. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 14576. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested by one of my colleagues that the Speaker did not put my request for consideration of private bills next Friday. I understood the request was put, but the only thing deferred was the meeting hour.

The SPEAKER. The question was put and agreed to.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the different gentlemen who have obtained leave to address the House to-day I may address the House not to exceed 25 minutes on the subject of trade boycotts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] he shall have not to exceed 25 minutes in which to discuss the subject of trade boycotts. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentlemen now on the list the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] have 50 minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] shall be permitted to address the House not to exceed 50 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

MEXICO.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hughes in his speech of acceptance delivered in New York City the other night, in discussing the Mexican policy of this administration, employed this language:

The dealings of the administration with Mexico constitute a confused chapter of blunders. Instead of commanding respect and deserving good will by sincerity, firmness, and consistency, we provoked misapprehension and deep resentment.

It is a record which can not be examined without a profound sense of humiliation.

When the administration came into power Huerta was exercising authority as Provisional President of Mexico. He was certainly in fact the head of the Government of Mexico.

The administration did not content itself with refusing to recognize Huerta, who was recognized by Great Britain, Germany, France, Russia, Spain, and Japan. The administration undertook to destroy Huerta.

The administration vacillated with respect to the embargo on the export of arms and munitions to Mexico. Under the resolution of 1912 President Taft had laid such an embargo. In August, 1913, President Wilson stated that he deemed it his duty to see that neither side to the struggle in Mexico should receive any assistance from this side of the border, and that the export of all arms and munitions to Mexico would be forbidden.

But in February, 1914, the embargo was lifted. In April, 1914, the embargo was restored. In May, 1914, it was explained that the embargo did not apply to American shipments through Mexican ports, and ammunition for Carranza was subsequently landed at Tampico. In September, 1914, the embargo was lifted on exports across the border; thereupon military supplies reached both Villa and Carranza. In October, 1915, an embargo was declared on all exports of arms except to the adherents of Carranza. There was an utter absence of consistent policy.

It is to this part of Mr. Hughes's speech that I desire to address myself.

The most casual reading of these expressions, as well as the other criticisms contained in this remarkable speech, naturally forces the conclusion that the Republican nominee is not now, and has not at any time been in sympathy with the Mexican policy of this Government as inaugurated by Mr. Taft and followed by Mr. Wilson. His speech is a caustic, vitriolic, and unfair criticism of Mr. Wilson's Mexican policy, and if we are to take it as free of partisanship and sincerely uttered, we must believe that if he had been President and handling our Mexican policy during the trying time since President Wilson came into the White House, he would have acted quite differently in at least three essential points: First, he would have recognized Huerta; secondly, he would not have issued the various embargo orders touching the shipment of arms and munitions of war into Mexico; thirdly, he would have long since intervened in Mexico. No other construction can possibly be placed upon his language. He says the administration's dealings with Mexico constitute "a confused chapter of blunders," and in specifying wherein those blunders were made, he cites the failure of President Wilson to recognize Huerta, his proclamations touching shipments of arms and munitions of war into Mexico, and then ascribes the policy as weak.

When I read carefully the speech of the Republican nominee, and look back over the difficult problems with which this Nation has been confronted during the last three years; when I see how irritating and troublesome the confused domestic Mexican situation has been to us, and recall the almost superhuman degree of patience that President Wilson has shown in our whole Mexican controversy; and when I contemplate how at times his firmness almost drove us to actual war, and the lack of criticism of his policy by the Republican Party during all this time, I naturally conclude that the Republican nominee in his acceptance speech either is not in accord with his party on this question, or that he has allowed himself to be misled by certain advisers who are out of sympathy with the American people and whose views touching the Mexican situation are forced by their own selfish desire to obtain from the American people an approval of their outrageous and shameful past conduct. [Applause on Democratic side.] I am forced to the conclusion—and the American people, looking back over the record of the Republican Party, are bound to know that either Mr. Hughes does not express the true Republican viewpoint touching this question, or that he has been ignorant in the past of what this administration has done touching Mexico. I know and you know that a man on the United States Supreme Court bench, with a docket always crowded and the consideration of great, complicated, and intricate constitutional questions constantly being presented and demanding his attention has not time to keep advised of the current questions which those of us have whose duty it is constantly to be informed about them.

If there can be any place in the public service which divorces one from the "common touch" of mankind it is the Supreme Court Bench. There in the secluded consultation room meeting only his associates of the bench, and within the silent chambers of his own study—coming in contact with only his family, he can not be expected to keep posted on current events and abreast of the times. Senator George, of my State, who served his State and Nation with such distinguished and signal ability, is credited with having made the statement that public servants sent to Washington should return occasionally to their people—visit with them around the fireside, on the farm, in the workshop—that they might keep in close touch with the constantly changing conditions. Mr. Hughes, therefore, can not be justly condemned for any failure on his part to be informed about current events, including this Government's policy toward Mexico during the last four years.

His ignorance of the true policy of this administration touching the embargo on arms and munitions to Mexico is evidently due to the speeches made recently by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. ROGERS, and the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. LIPPITT. Naturally, the Republican nominee thought that the assertions then made by these gentlemen and contained in those speeches were true and could be taken as correct without an investigation on his part and with little or no consideration of the question. I hope before I have finished to show you that the statements of the Republican nominee are misleading.

I read in the papers several days before this remarkable speech was made that Mr. Hughes had invited Senator FALL, of New Mexico, and Henry Lane Wilson, the discredited ambassador to Mexico [applause on the Democratic side] to his summer home at Bridgehampton for a conference.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. What was the date of the conference between the Republican nominee for the Presidency and the distinguished Senator and Henry Lane Wilson?

Mr. HARRISON. About a week before he made his speech of acceptance.

Senator FALL, no doubt, advised Mr. Hughes for intervention in Mexico. It has been his hobby since his entrance into the Senate. When I think of his views touching Mexico and the self-interest he has constantly exhibited toward our welfare there, the protection of the lives of our citizens and property, I am reminded of a story ascribed to my distinguished friend Private John Allen. He tells the story of two negroes fishing on the banks of a southern stream. One was an old darkey, the other a young one. The young negro while holding his pole waiting for a bite grew sleepy, and while nodding away accidentally lost his balance and fell over into the stream; and then, while he was struggling for his life, the older negro jumped in, grabbed the boy, and saved him. As he came onto the bank a white gentleman, seeing the heroic act, came up and congratulated the old darkey, and asked him, "Wasn't you afraid you would drown yourself?" "Yes, sir, but I had to do it." "And why, may I ask you?" inquired the gentleman, "you were taking a desperate chance." "Yes, sah, boss," says the darkey, "that nigger had all my bait in his pocket." [Laughter and applause.]

On July 22, 1912, nearly a year before Mr. Taft retired as President, Senator FALL in a very lengthy speech delivered in the Senate severely criticized the administration then in power touching their Mexican policy—citing hundreds of outrages and making many sensational charges. The State Department, then presided over by a Republican, Mr. Knox, ordered a report on the charges contained in the speech. I desire to quote you parts of that interesting report. It says:

It is only fair to say, at least so far as the State Department and the American diplomatic and consular officers are concerned, that none of them had ever before heard of injuries to those persons. The Senator is, therefore, in error when he states that "this Government has been apprised of this fact repeatedly, and even recently of the more recent outrages upon these same people." Had the Senator taken the trouble or the precaution to have consulted the Department of State, as he admits he did not, before making his speech, he could have learned these facts. And so with reference to "Ernest Goldner, Mr. Hollingsworth, and many others (who) have been maltreated and falsely imprisoned." The records of the department do not show that these cases have been brought to its attention. If complaints have been made to the diplomatic or consular officers, it is perfectly certain that due and appropriate representations have been made.

The Northwestern Railroad Co. and the firm of Ketersen & Degtau are both foreign and not American companies.

The Senator next speaks of "Losses to the Northwestern Railroad Co., Ketersen & Degtau."

The attitude of the administration in this matter was sufficiently and succinctly stated by the President of the United States in a telegram dated April 18, 1911, to the governor of Arizona, which reads as follows:

"Your dispatch received. Have made urgent demand upon Mexican Government to issue instructions to prevent firing across border by Mexican Federal troops, and am awaiting reply. Meantime, I have sent direct warning to the Mexican and insurgent forces near Douglas. I infer from your dispatch that both parties attempt to heed the warning, but that in the strain and exigency of the contest wild bullets still find their way into Douglas. The situation might justify me in ordering our troops to cross the border and attempt to stop the fighting or to fire upon both combatants from the American side. But if I take this step I must face the possibility of resistance and greater bloodshed, and also the danger of having our motive misconstrued and misrepresented, and of thus inflaming Mexican popular indignation against many thousands of Americans now in Mexico and jeopardizing their lives and property. The pressure for general intervention under such conditions it might not be practicable to resist. It is impossible to foresee or reckon the consequences of such a course, and we must use the greatest self-restraint to avoid it. Pending my urgent representation to the Mexican Government, can not, therefore, order the troops at Douglas to cross the border, but I must ask you and the local authorities, in case the same danger recurs, to direct the people of Douglas to place themselves where bullets can not reach them and thus avoid casualty. I am loath to endanger Americans in Mexico, where they are necessarily exposed, by taking radical steps to prevent injury to Americans on our side of the border, who can avoid it by temporary inconvenience."

It is submitted that for the reasons heretofore set forth the course of the President of the United States, both at Douglas and El Paso, was the one which was safest and wisest under all the circumstances, as well as the one which was least harmful and least disastrous to American lives and property—the prime purpose of all measures taken in connection with this trouble.

Further on the Senator says:

"Our Government has never resented the charges made openly by the Mexican Government that our troops invaded their territory at that time." That is, at the time of the most deplorable incident at Douglas, and that this charge "was the answer given to us when we protested against the outrages upon American citizens."

It may be observed that this is contrary to the fact, as the Senator could easily have found out if he had, as he states he did not, consulted the Department of State before making his speech. The Department of War made a thorough investigation into the facts at the time of the charge, and upon receiving a report of this investigation the Department of State replied to the Mexican Government repelling the charges and insinuations which that Government had made.

The Department of State has not sacrificed the rights of any American citizen, man, woman, or child, who has suffered injury during the recent revolutionary disturbances in Mexico. It is submitted, on the contrary, that the Department of State has taken every step necessary to protect, conserve, and reserve every right which any American citizen has for or on account of such injuries. No one denies that American citizens, during these disturbances, have had great losses; that they have experienced many hardships; that they have endured much suffering; that some few have lost their lives; and that possibly there may have been some atrocities even worse than death inflicted upon some few American citizens. But unfortunately all of these, including the atrocities, appear to be the necessary incidents of war.

They have been charged against us in the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and our operations in the Philippines; they have been charged against both parties in the Boer War, in the Russo-Japanese War, and in the Turco-Italian War. But fortunately there have been comparatively few American lives lost in Mexico, as the result of these disturbances (other than those who may have been killed in actual battle, as to which the Department of State has been advised), and it should be said that of these few a very small minority have been taken by the regular Mexican forces. The losses have been primarily inflicted by the rebel forces, and quite obviously, compensation not being obtainable for these from the rebels themselves, it is necessary to await a more settled condition before attempting to fix upon the Mexican Government itself the responsibility for these actions.

The constant problem which has confronted the President has been to secure the maximum amount of protection for American life and property with the minimum amount of danger thereto.

[Applause.]

So far no one with any adequate understanding of the situation believes that we should have intervened in Mexico or that we should intervene now.

[Applause.]

There will probably never come a time to intervene if we exercise the forbearance with them that we should desire for ourselves.

[Applause.]

But, however that may be, it is clear that the time to intervene will be when we can save more American lives by going into Mexico than by staying out of Mexico.

[Applause.]

At present we seem to be a long distance from that contingency.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

You will recall that just before the Chicago convention was held, it was carried in the newspapers of the country that Senator FALL had arrived in Chicago and would fight in the resolutions committee for a plank in the Republican platform declaring for intervention in Mexico. Of course, he was not in accord with the rank and file of his party and no such plank was incorporated in the Republican platform. His magnetic personality and persuasive ways, however, had more influence upon the Republican nominee in the Bridgehampton conference than upon the committee at Chicago, the membership of which included so many of his associates in the Senate—thoroughly familiar with his views and cognizant of his patriotism. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I wonder if the Republican nominee has ever read that series of articles published in Harper's Weekly in April and May of this year, written by that splendid and reputable newspaper correspondent, Robert H. Murray? Mr. Murray has spent much time in Mexico and during the events attending the overthrow of Madero kept fully advised as to the happenings there. From a patriotic and impartial viewpoint, he gives a history of the service of Henry Lane Wilson as ambassador, his incompetency, his loyalty to special interests in Mexico, his constant devotion to the influences of force rather than right, his qualities of deception and insincerity, and the very prominent part he took in conspiring with Huerta and men of his caste in the overthrow and elimination of Madero. Let me read to you what Mr. Murray says:

Neither Madero nor his ministers had apprehension of the ultimate result. Madero's only confessed fear was that Wilson might succeed in inducing the United States to intervene. "The American ambassador is our greatest enemy," he declared to me on the forenoon of Sunday, February 16, when I saw him in the National Palace. He then told me that Wilson had threatened that American troops would be sent into Mexico unless Madero resigned and the fighting ceased. "This is my answer," said the President, showing me a copy of a long cable message which he had sent the previous day to Taft, and which began: "I have been informed that the Government over which your excellency dignifiedly presides has ordered to set out for the ports of Mexico war vessels with troops to disembark, and to come to this capital to give guarantees of safety to Americans."

"Who informed you to that effect?" I asked. "The American ambassador," replied the President. The next day Taft's reply came. He reassured Madero as to intervention. Wilson charged that Madero had tried to arouse anti-American sentiment through the Republic by sending broadcast messages that the American troops were to be landed at Vera Cruz. What Madero did do, in a panic over the threat of intervention that Wilson had hurled at him, was to issue a proclamation exhorting the people to remain tranquil and support the Government, so as to avoid creating a situation which might lead to an American intervention.

Wilson had established secret relations with Huerta early in the fight. They had selected a go-between. "My confidential messenger with Huerta" Wilson terms him in one of his dispatches. This messenger was a fit selection for the dirty job that was cooking. Zepeda was his name—Enrique Zepeda, called by courtesy Huerta's "nephew," but in popular belief his illegitimate son. Zepeda was a notorious debauchee. He had been expelled from the Mexican Country Club for disreputable conduct. In after days, while drunk, he boasted that it was he who had made the arrangements between Huerta and Wilson. It was Zepeda who first notified the ambassador that Madero was arrested. He rushed into the American embassy on the afternoon of Tuesday, February 18, with blood streaming from a wounded hand received during the mêlée in the palace which accompanied the seizure of the President, shouting, "Tell the ambassador that I have come, as I promised, to let him know what happened."

When and how the ambassador obtained the first knowledge that Huerta would seize the government and imprison Madero is not precisely indicated in his dispatches. He originally broached the matter to the State Department on Sunday, February 16. It is well to remember that this is the day upon which Blanquet, after a week's delay, brought his troops into the city. With the presence of Blanquet, the dependable Blanquet, Huerta was now in a position to drive ahead full speed. It is curious that on this day, when, with the arrival of Blanquet and his troops, Huerta must have felt the game securely in his hands, that the ambassador should have made his initial reference to forthcoming events in the following cryptic sentences with which he concluded a dispatch to the State Department:

"Eleven o'clock, Sunday morning, February 16. Confidential. Gen. Huerta has indicated a desire to speak to me, and I shall see him some time during the day, and shall perhaps ask the German and the Spanish ministers to accompany me. I hope for good results of this."

To continue: On Monday, February 17, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the ambassador once more endeavored to force his confidence and his dispatch he opened up a trifle, became more specific, cabling:

"Gen. Huerta has just sent his messenger to me again to say that I may anticipate some action which will remove Madero from power at any moment, and that plans were fully matured, the purpose of the delay being to avoid any violence or bloodshed. I asked no questions beyond requesting that no lives be taken excepting by due process of law. I am unable to say whether those plans will come to anything or not. I simply repeat to the Government the words sent to me, which I feel bound to listen to, as it so intimately concerns the situation of our nationals in the city."

That night, Monday, before he retired Wilson got off another cable to the department. The hardest fighting of the entire Decena Trágica took place that day. Possibly Huerta was so engrossed in his own private concerns that the federalists got away from him, and really made headway. They accomplished important gains in the vicinity of the Ciudadela, so much so, in fact, that the Government people, from Madero down, flattered themselves that one more assault, either that night or the following day, would give them the Ciudadela. I had this from the lips of Madero on Monday night.

On the evening of the same day Ambassador Wilson sent another message to Washington, part of which follows:

"Monday night, February 17, 10 o'clock: The Federal troops are being withdrawn from all exposed points to-night and retired toward the palace." (This was wholly false, for the only troops which went into or toward the palace that night were those of Blanquet, which Huerta had ordered there to replace loyal soldiers in preparation for the coup d'état next day. Further evidence that the ambassador knew what was going on is afforded by the following extract from the same dispatch:

"Blanquet's troops have been placed in charge of the national palace, which is in accordance with a message sent me by Gen. Huerta, that all purely Maderista soldiers were to be put outside and soldiers upon whom we could depend would replace them. The disorganization and lack of loyalty in the Federal army is becoming more evident and the adhesion of the citizen volunteers to Diaz more marked. I expect important developments to-morrow.")

Several times that forenoon (Tuesday) the President, restless under the inaction of the troops after the heartening successes of the previous day, had sent for Huerta and asked him what was the meaning of the delay. Huerta put him off with various pretexts. Huerta was with the President when I was at the palace. I could see them in conversation in the President's private office, through the door connecting the office and the small anteroom in which Ernesto Madero and I were sitting. Madero was manifestly agitated. Afterwards I was told that Huerta, when the President finally cornered him, had insisted upon being permitted to handle the military situation as he saw fit, and offered to relinquish the command on the spot if Madero was not satisfied. Madero was far from being satisfied; but what could he do? Suspicion of Huerta's duplicity has never entered his mind, tangibly. When the blow fell, an hour or so later, it was all the more fearsome and crushing because of its unexpectedness.

So here at noon, on Tuesday, we have Madero expostulating, Huerta playing for time, the Associated Press correspondent fidgeting, and Wilson waiting. Things were not going according to schedule. Can one imagine the fever our ambassador must have been in? His impatience played him a scurvy trick, as his correspondence shows. He could not restrain himself until the jaws of the trap had closed upon Madero, to flash the glad news to Washington. Noon was the hour told him by Huerta for the springing of the snare. Noon was the hour at which Wilson had warned the Associated Press correspondent to be on the lookout for the big news. And inconceivably stupid as it may seem, noon was the hour at which he sent the following message to the State Department announcing nearly two hours in advance of the fact that Madero was then a prisoner:

"Twelve o'clock noon, Tuesday, February 18: This morning there is complete calm, except that at certain intervals Diaz fires his heavy guns to prove that he has abundant ammunition. The supposition now is that the federal generals are now in control of the situation and of the President."

Some time between half past 1 and 2 o'clock soldiers broke into Madero's private office in the National Palace. Two or three of his aides attempted to defend the President. Shots were exchanged. Several men were killed. Madero sought to flee from the palace by descending to the ground floor. There Blanquet confronted him and made him prisoner. All of the Madero ministers were seized. Huerta had lunched with Gustavo Madero in Gambrinus's restaurant, a few squares from the palace, leaving the dog's work in the palace for Blanquet to do. With Gustavo Madero's food in his stomach and his wine still wet on his lips, Huerta excused himself, went outside the restaurant and ordered within a squad of soldiers to lay by the heels his host, who sat waiting for Huerta to return.

If Wilson's noon message to the State Department was a false alarm, that which he cabled at 2 o'clock redeemed his reputation for accuracy as a reporter. He wired:

"My confidential messenger with Huerta has just come from the palace, badly, but not seriously, wounded, to inform me that Madero has just been made a prisoner by Blanquet, with the approval of Huerta. He states that the President resisted, and that a number of officials in the room were killed, and that he (Huerta) afterwards took a squad of men and captured Gustavo Madero in Gambrinus's restaurant."

It was a merry afternoon at the American embassy. Smiles wreathed all faces. Americans shook hands with Wilson, hugged him, tossed off highballs to his health, congratulated him upon the successful accomplishment of the day's work. They made quite an impromptu little fiesta with the materials for a Roman holiday which events had provided them.

It was well into the evening before he rounded up Huerta, Diaz, and Mondragon and a few less important associates of the conspirators in the embassy. Out of that meeting grew the so-called "Pact of the Ciudadela," to which the signatories were Huerta and Diaz. Mondragon was relegated to a secondary place, largely through the influence of Wilson, who projected Diaz to the front. It was agreed that Huerta should become provisional president and that Diaz should succeed him for the constitutional term at an election which Huerta bound himself to call at the earliest possible date. The cabinet portfolios were thrown into a jackpot and the pot was split between Diaz and Huerta, each taking half. Mondragon's sole and only prize was the war ministry. Our ambassador, cabling to the State Department at midnight, when the half-drunken traitors had finally cleared out of the embassy, staggering, hiccupping, maudling, epitomized the shameful history of the day, as follows:

"Apprehensive of the situation which might ensue after the downfall of President Madero, I invited Gens. Huerta and Diaz to come to the embassy for the purpose of considering the question of preserving order in the city. After they arrived I discovered that many other things had to be discussed first, and after enormous difficulties I managed to get them to agree to work together, on the understanding that Huerta should be provisional president of the republic and that Diaz should name the cabinet and that thereafter Diaz should receive the support of Huerta for the constitutional presidency. After these points were settled, both left the embassy to put into effect the common order which had been agreed upon for the public peace. I expect no further trouble in the city. I congratulate the department upon the happy turn of events, which have been, directly or indirectly, the result of its instructions."

Recognition by all the foreign Governments was the thing that Huerta and our ambassador were hot for. Manifestly it was desirable to commit the United States and other countries, big and little, that were diplomatically represented, or misrepresented, in the City of Mexico, with the loss of as little time as possible, to a de facto acknowledgment of the legality and existence of the Huerta government.

On the evening of Thursday he cabled to the department requesting instructions on the question of recognition. The cable is timed "8 o'clock in the evening." That same night, probably before this message had even left the cable office in the City of Mexico, he summoned the remainder of the diplomatic corps to a conference in the embassy. At the conference the diplomats agreed with our ambassador that the recognition should be granted on the morrow.

Let us consider what chance Wilson had of getting before noon on Friday a reply to his cable of 8 o'clock of Thursday evening. Wilson's telegram, which would have to be decoded, would hardly be laid upon the desk of Knox or Huntington Wilson in the State Department before 9 o'clock, Washington time, or 8.30 City of Mexico time, on Friday morning. Assuming that a reply had been written and sent immediately, the task of coding the message in the State Department, transmitting it to the City of Mexico, and decoding it in the embassy there, could hardly have been accomplished before the time arrived for our ambassador to set out for the palace to recognize Huerta.

And Wilson knew it. Indeed, before going to the palace on Friday morning he cabled of the decision reached by the diplomats the previous night, pleading lack of instructions as an excuse for his precipitateness, and saying:

"After discussion my colleagues, all of whom are without instructions, agreed that the recognition of the new government was imperative to the end of enabling it to impose its authority and reestablish order. I shall accordingly unite with my colleagues, believing I am interpreting the desire of the departments and assisting in the tranquilization."

On the same day, manifestly prior to the recognition forms being gone through with at the palace (for he employs the future tense in referring to recognition), Wilson set in operation the machinery of the United States Consular Service in Mexico for the behoof of Huerta by ordering our consuls throughout the Republic not only to get behind the new government themselves, but to begin a Huertista propaganda among the Mexicans. The wording of this message indicates that Wilson did not fear that adverse orders would come from Washington to ditch the recognition express before the goods it bore were safely delivered at noon to Huerta. This is Wilson's order to our consular representatives in Mexico:

"The provisional government was installed yesterday, with Gen. Huerta as President. There is general approval in the city, which is practically quiet. The ex-President is a prisoner, waiting the decision of Congress in his case." [Query: What decision could the emasculated and cowering Congress make in Madero's case that would not be a decision dictated by Huerta?] "The Senate and the House of Deputies are in full accord with the new administration. You should make this intelligence public, and in the interests of Mexico urge general submission and adhesion to the new government, which will be recognized by all foreign governments to-day."

While the corpses of Madero and Pino Suarez were lying on the cement floor of a corridor of the penitentiary, Huerta, de la Barra, and various other members of the government were in the throes of a long and excited conference in the palace. They strove until nearly daylight before they evolved an explanation which they thought might satisfy not only the people of Mexico, but, what was more important, the foreign Governments. Their final production was to the effect that Madero and Pino Suarez had been accidentally killed while being transferred from the palace to the penitentiary during an exchange of shots between their guards and a party of friends who sought to rescue them. No one in the city believed the explanation. Diplomats frankly expressed their skepticism. But our ambassador accepted the version of Huerta unreservedly, and communicated it without comment or qualification to Washington. His dispatch did not go until 13 hours after the murder, although the early editions of the morning newspapers printed full details of what had occurred.

The whole course of this ambassador during that eventful period in Mexico's history is disgusting and unbecoming one of his high office. It was no wonder that he was recalled as soon as these facts came to the attention of the present administration. [Applause.]

And these are the men who inspired the expressions of the Republican nominee.

Answering the first proposition advanced by Mr. Hughes touching our failure to recognize Huerta, let me suggest that few, if any, speeches were made, certainly none that carried any weight with them, either on this side of the House or in the other Chamber, which were made by members of the Republican Party have ever contended that Huerta should be recognized. Even Senator FALL, in his speech in the Senate in April, 1914, said:

I want to say now in passing that I have approved of the action of the President in refusing to recognize as President of Mexico Victoriano Huerta.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me for a moment present the situation that existed in Mexico when Huerta became President. I have inserted excerpts from the articles I have just referred to written by Mr. Murray and published in Harper's Weekly. But briefly, here is what happened. It was the 22d day of February, 1913. Huerta had been an officer in the armies of Diaz. He had never been in sympathy with the social and economic movement inaugurated by Madero and believed in by the great mass of the Mexican people. He believed in the principle of force and was alive to those interests that hold the people in bondage and promote the continuance of those policies that had long been practiced by Diaz and upheld by the aristocracy of Mexico. There was not a particle of sympathy in his heart with that great movement of the revolutionists, but when the revolution became so strong and the need of social and economic reform in Mexico became so powerful that Diaz was driven from power and Madero elected by the people of that country as the provisional president, Huerta, one of the military chiefs of the old régime professing his loyalty and change of heart to the demands of the hour, was placed by Madero at the head of his military forces.

And while Madero, as President, and Huerta, as head of the army, were living in Mexico City, and the reforms which the people had so long struggled for were gradually being realized, small uprisings took place here and there in Mexico. Huerta, shrewd, ambitious, and tyrannical, saw the opportunity for himself to be made President. He called a conference, inviting Diaz, Mondragon, and other leaders of the old Porfirio Diaz régime, and they conspired the overthrow of Madero. Suddenly Madero was made prisoner by his own men. He was put into a cell and a conference was called by the American ambassador, which was held in the American Embassy. "Matters of great moment were discussed by Huerta, Diaz, and other traitors on that occasion," says Mr. Murray. Four nights afterwards, Madero was murdered. Within a few hours Huerta was declared President.

Was there ever such treachery practiced? Judas Iscariot's betrayal of the lowly Nazarene; Benedict Arnold's treason to his country; these can not be compared to the treacherous action of Huerta; but one incident in the history of the world is comparable to it—that was when a certain patriotic, brave, and progressive band of Americans who had abandoned their old love and marched to the tune of Onward Christian Soldiers to the very heights of Armageddon, while assembled in Chicago on June 6, was without warning or justification abandoned by their patron saint to the mercies of a cold and wicked world. [Laughter and applause.]

It was the disastrous defeat and nullification of that splendid achievement which Madero and his compatriots in arms had so long struggled to attain. Just in the heyday of the realization of their hopes when success had come and constitutional government had been established, in the twinkling of an eye, through this unsurpassed treachery of the head of the army, all was wrung from them, and wrong triumphed over right and force over justice. And before Madero's body was cold, almost before it had been moved from where it had been murdered, this adviser of the Republican nominee, Henry Lane Wilson, called a meeting of the ambassadors of other countries and recognized, in the names of their Governments, Huerta as the President of Mexico. It is the only time in the history of this Government where an ambassador of the United States on his own initiative and without authority from his Government recognized the head of a foreign country. Mr. Taft was then President and remained President until the 4th of March following, and he did not approve the unauthorized act of his ambassador, and did not before the end of his term recognize Huerta as the head of the Mexican Government. Mr. Hughes would have acted differ-ently. Yet, there was not a syllable of criticism of Mr. Taft's action in refusing to recognize Huerta. When Mr. Wilson became President there was not the slightest influence brought to bear to move him to recognize Huerta in Mexico. If his policy was wrong, why was there not some criticism at least from gentlemen so critical now? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If Mr. Taft or Mr. Wilson either had approved the murder of Madero by recognition of Huerta as head of the Mexican Government, it would have been a setback to the wonderful progress and development in the civilization of all South and Latin American countries. [Applause.] When this country, the foster mother of the Western Hemisphere, establishes the precedent that it will approve the action of military leaders when they murder the head of an orderly government and forcibly take charge of that government we will lower that high standard of character that we have instilled into South and Central American peoples. [Applause.] By the refusal of Mr. Taft and Mr. Wilson to recognize Huerta this Government set a commendable example for all Republics. The peace of the world is maintained only by orderly government firmly established, and when we, the greatest constitutional Republic on the face of the earth, set out upon a policy of recognizing chiefs who, because of their peculiar position in charge of the military of the country, can have the head of the government murdered and then recognize that practice we will subscribe to a policy revolting to our own sense of justice, a policy which will eventually result in encouraging revolutions and conspiracies against lawfully established governments. It should be particularly encouraging to those countries to the south of us that this administration at least has so far persistently and industriously tried to foster their good friendship and by act and deed aid them to a high standard of civilization and good government. It is our duty, if we are to hold high the fundamental principles of this Republic, to discourage rather than encourage, discountenance rather than countenance, every effort to secure changes in government by means other than through orderly and constitutional channels. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No policy of this administration has contributed more in bringing to us the close and friendly feeling of the South and Central American countries than has our refusal to recognize Huerta. And any reasoning person knows that if Mr. Hughes had been President and recognized Huerta he would have given encouragement to a revolutionary, disordered, and unstable government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But the failure of Mr. Wilson to recognize Huerta is not the only blunder with which the Republican nominee charges the administration. Peculiarly critical is he of the action of the President in his several proclamations touching the shipment of arms and munitions of war into Mexico. Let us analyze this criticism and see if it is just. Mr. Hughes says it was a vacillating policy. The facts are that only three changes have been made by the President touching the shipment of arms to Mexico—in August, 1913, February 3, 1914, and October 19, 1915. The policy of the administration throughout has been one of concern and solicitude for Mexico. The policy to allow them to work out their own internal and domestic affairs in their own way without interference from us.

The only requirement we have made of them is to conform to the spirit of humanity and to protect the lives of American citizens and American property. Of course, I know that American citizens have been killed and American property in a great many instances has been destroyed. I am not going to excuse the action of the Mexican people and the outrages they have committed at times upon American citizens and American property, but I know, and you know, that it would be impossible in a country, the home of 20,000,000 of people, engaged in civil war and where the property of the sympathizers of each faction in the war is being destroyed and taken and retaken, for American industries in that country to continue prosperous and for American interests not to decline in value. Huerta, when at the head of the Republic of Mexico, constantly gave assurances for the protection of American lives and property.

When Carranza became President he gave assurances of protection. I do not believe, nor do you believe, that these assurances have been kept at all times by the Mexican people, but as a great Government we can afford to treat with Mexico at times differently from what we would in dealing with a stronger nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And so with this civil war raging for over five years in Mexico, changed conditions have constantly arisen that have forced us to change our policy toward the shipment of arms and ammunition into Mexico. Prior to March 14, 1912, although there had been a revolution in Mexico for many months, this Government thought it was best that any citizen of Mexico, no matter to what faction he might belong, be allowed to import arms and munitions of war into Mexico. That day, under the policy adopted by the Republican Party, a resolution was passed through Congress that allowed the shipment of arms and munitions of war only to the Madero faction in Mexico. It was based on the fact that this patriot and his compatriots in arms had struggled for years to gain mastery there, and since they had at last won out and were now in control of that country, even though there were several uprisings at that time in Mexico, this country thought it proper to encourage that constitutional government by prohibiting the shipment of arms and ammunition to those who were rebelling against it.

Mr. Wilson followed that policy when he became President, and only changed it when Huerta and his régime had grown so defiant and the Constitutionalists, who believed in those principles that Madero and his compatriots had fought for and to whom success had finally come, were making such headway that he felt that the embargo then existing was giving to Huerta an unfair advantage over them, and that the Government's policy was unneutral. The Huertistas were in charge of the seaports, and could not only buy arms and munitions under the then pending order from the United States but they could buy them from all the countries of the world, while the Constitutionalists, who were fighting for principle and who had gained their many advantages and series of successes only through a conquest of the arms of the Huerta forces, were prohibited by this country from obtaining arms here, and so it was at that time that the President came to the conclusion that an embargo should be placed on the shipments of arms and munitions of war, not only for the Constitutionalists but for the Huertistas. His action was applauded throughout the Nation. Practically every paper in the country praised his patriotic stand, and the Republicans of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, as well as the House, approved the course of the President. [Applause.] Senator Lodge, ranking member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs at that time, said:

It is an excellent message. Its substantive declaration is that forbidding the shipment of arms to Mexico. I am in hearty agreement with that. The United States could not put itself in the position of adding to the slaughter in Mexico. Only two courses were open to the President—intervention and nonintervention—and I am sure that the sentiment of the country would not tolerate intervention. The President's policy is that of waiting upon events, and I feel that he could now pursue no other.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Senator Root at that time said:

The message is admirable in its general tone and spirit.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

These expressions are quite different from the speeches recently made by Mr. Root to the New York Republican State convention and by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] in his State when they had seen that the Democratic Party under the splendid leadership of Woodrow Wilson had redeemed every pledge to the people and when the last vestige of hope of a new issue for the coming campaign has vanished. Without any change in conditions in Mexico they give utterance to decidedly different views of the President's policy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I shall not continue quoting these expressions upon the part of the Republicans on the policy of President Wilson. Suffice it is to say that no man, either in this House or at the other end of the Capitol, raised his voice in protest against this policy.

And then what happened? Huerta continued in control of the Mexican seaports. They had arms and ammunition there; but the Constitutionalists, fired by the spirit of Madero fighting for the principles which they believed in and the cause of social and economic reform, trying to drive from the control of that country those men who had lived and prospered upon the blood and toil of the masses, moved on, gaining victory after victory, furnishing their soldiers with the guns and ammunition taken from the dead soldiers that fell in the ranks of the armies of Huerta, soon securing complete control of the upper States of Chihuahua and Sonora, and everyone could see that it was but a question of time when the Constitutionalists, though fighting against overwhelming odds, would soon drive Huerta and his forces from power.

It was then (Feb. 3, 1914) that President Wilson issued his proclamation removing the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions of war into Mexico, so that this country might continue to show a spirit of absolute neutrality and noninterference. President Wilson in issuing this order gave out this statement:

The Executive order under which the exportation of arms and ammunition into Mexico is forbidden was a departure from the accepted practices of neutrality, a deliberate departure from those practices under a well-considered joint resolution of Congress, determined upon in circumstances which have now ceased to exist. It was intended to discourage incipient revolts against the regularly constituted authorities of Mexico. Since that order was issued the circumstances of the case have undergone a radical change.

There is now no constitutional government in Mexico, and the existence of this order hinders and delays the very thing the Government of the United States is now insisting upon, namely, that Mexico shall be left free to settle her own affairs and, as soon as possible, put them upon a constitutional footing by her own force and counsel.

The New York World of February 4, 1914, in its news items from Washington, in commenting on the action of the President, said:

Expressions of warm approval came from both ends of the Capitol to-day when news spread of the President's decision to lift the embargo. To members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee it was no surprise, for they had an intimation of it in their recent conference with the President. Senator Root commended the move. Many Members of the Foreign Relations Committee who now approve the lifting of the embargo did not think that way last August, and there are some, on the other hand, who think that if the embargo had been raised sooner the revolution in Mexico might now have been ended.

Those who try to give the impression that the President was encouraging war and revolution by that action do him and the American Congress a great injustice. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Huerta and his followers, being in charge of the seaports, could obtain arms and ammunition from other countries, but the Constitutionalists, although in control of 1,800 miles of border line along the Rio Grande, and who had gained victory after victory, and whose complete success, as could clearly be seen, was but a little way off, were prohibited, until this order was made effective, from importing arms and ammunition. The press of the country at the time applauded the action of the President. No criticism came from Republicans in this House or in the Senate. The American people looked upon it as a step in the interest of humanity and toward the furtherance of peace and order. That action did promote peace and order, because it was only a few months after that that Huerta's régime crumbled and he was forced out of Mexico. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Hughes in his acceptance speech cites several instances where arms and munitions of war following this order were permitted to go into Mexico, the facts are that from the order of February 3, 1914, up until the proclamation of October 19, 1915, when Carranza was recognized, with the exception of the time during the conference between this country and the A B C countries and the representatives of the factions in Mexico, there was no embargo on any arms and munitions of war into Mexico.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is it not a fact that the recognition of Carranza came at the recommendation of the Republics of South America?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely. The gentleman is exactly right. Throughout this controversy our Government has worked hand in hand with our sister Republics to the south, and by our action we are to-day appreciated by South and Central American countries more than at any other time in our history. [Applause.]

This Government during that time treated Mexico as it did every other country under international law. No voice was raised in protest to it, and the policy of the President during all that time, of allowing each faction that desired to purchase arms and munitions in this country, was approved and applauded. It was in keeping with that spirit of strict neutrality that the President has shown from the time he took the reins of government to allow the Mexican people to work out their own destiny in their own way. It showed no preference to Carranza or Villa in their fight among themselves in the matter of shipments of arms and munitions until it was clearly demonstrated that Carranza and his following had practically obtained control of all the States of Mexico and that Villa and his following were but a handful of bandits left. When that condition came about—and not until then—did the President recognize Carranza as the head of the constitutional Government of Mexico. When he recognized him as the head he immediately issued his proclamation placing again the embargo on arms and munitions of war to any revolutionist whatsoever. His embargo policy has been consistent, fair, and just, and at each point in the development of that policy it was at the time approved by the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He met the conditions as they arose firmly and justly, and the people of this country will not now believe that he was vacillating and blundering. His policy was the policy of Lincoln. During Lincoln's administration, when he confronted like conditions in Mexico, and the jingo cried for intervention, the same criticism was leveled at him. He answered by saying, "I am not controlling events, but events are controlling themselves." And to-day, even though there are bandits and uprisings in Mexico, there is better law and order there than there has been at any time since the overthrow of Madero. [Applause.]

I submit that every act of the President has been based upon just grounds. They have made many misleading and incorrect charges against the administration, and only last Friday the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] employed this language in criticism of the Mexican policy of the President. I quote it to show how unjust the opposition is, how they are trying to mislead the American people, how unfair they are to the President. Here is what he says. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday, August 4, 1916:

The trouble at Parral occurred as late as April 10 of this year. The attack on our soldiers at that place was made by the soldiers of Carranza. Four days after the attack and after the administration had full knowledge of Carranza's treachery, Secretary Lansing issued an order permitting Carranza to import 1,000,000 rounds of small-arms ammunition. The day before the order was issued Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, vice president of the Phelps-Dodge Co., was in the city of Washington and, according to the newspapers, visited the Secretary of State. The Phelps-Dodge Co. is engaged in the manufacture and sale of munitions of war, and is the same company that was indicted in the Federal courts for violating the embargo on the shipment of munitions to Mexico in the last year of the Taft administration and escaped conviction on the technicality that the munitions had not actually reached the Republic of Mexico, but had been stopped at Bisbee, Ariz. Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, vice president of the Phelps-Dodge Co., is a most interesting gentleman. The records show that he was the heaviest individual contributor to the Democratic national campaign fund in 1912, his first contribution being $30,000. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am not making any charge against the integrity of the Secretary of State, nor do I know positively that the Phelps-Dodge Co. sold Carranza this 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition, but I can not help wondering if there is any connection between the call of Mr. Dodge on Mr. Lansing and the issuance of the order. The ammunition which was imported by Carranza under that order was used in the attack on our soldiers at Carrizal, in which 19 of the Nation's defenders, including two officers, lost their lives. If there should be any connection between the visit of Mr. Dodge and the issuance of the order, and if the ammunition that was shipped to Mexico was shipped by the Phelps-Dodge Co., then may God have mercy on an administration that permits a campaign contributor to recoup himself at the expense of the lives of our gallant soldier boys. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

Great applause on the Republican side! Now, gentlemen, if I were you I would applaud correct statements. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I would applaud statements based on justice and fairness and not statements charging the President of the United States in such language as that without having the slightest information on which to base it. The facts are, and the records will bear me out, and any gentleman can see for himself by an examination of the record, that the order for the consignment spoken of by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] as having been sent there on the 10th day of April, 1916, or four days after the killing at Parral, was granted over a week before that time, and at the time of the Parral killing the communication spoken of was in Mexico. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Under the arrangement then existing in the State Department, and which had existed since the embargo order of October, 1915, in the States of Sonora and Chihuahua and Lower California the Carranzistas could not obtain arms or munitions of war except on application of the agent of Carranza here. And the records show that on the 3d day of April Mr. Arredondo, the accredited agent of Carranza, requested and got permission to ship these goods from Douglas, Ariz., into Mexico. They had been in Mexico for a week before the killing at Parral, and the insinuation and the statement are wholly untrue. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am sure that the gentleman from Illinois, for whom I have high regard, when he knows the facts will withdraw what he has said. I talked with the State Department about this allegation, and Mr. Polk, the Acting Secretary, told me that he knew nothing about the charge, that he knew nothing about Mr. Dodge having been there, but that he was sure the charge was not true. At the time of the alleged meeting with Mr. Dodge Mr. Lansing was well and attending the duties of his office in the State Department. Mr. Polk says, "I am sure it is wrong, and I will wire to Mr. Lansing and see what he says about it." And this morning Mr. Polk received a telegram in which Mr. Lansing says, "Have never met Cleveland H. Dodge in my life. Have had no communications with him of any kind. Rodenberg charge utterly false." [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Such campaign charges as this, sirs, will not meet the approval of the American people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BURNETT). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi have 15 minutes longer.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman proceed until he concludes his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may proceed for 15 minutes or longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the House for its courtesy.

But, you say, we have soldiers on the border, and our Army is upon Mexican soil. That is true. But our soldiers were on the border during Mr. Taft's administration, and this Government has paid appropriations heretofore to reimburse the State of Texas for the services of Texas Rangers employed to protect the border. The border situation is one that has given this country concern for a half century. Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Grant, and Mr. Taft were all confronted with the cry of the jingo to intervene in Mexico. Their patience was compensated by the priceless jewel of peace.

Why should we not now be on friendly terms with the Mexican Government? They have given us their assurance of satisfaction for past wrongs and protection against future wrongs. They have offered to mediate our differences, and we have accepted the offer, realizing their difficulties and embarrassments. For my part, so long as we can maintain our peace with honor, I would prefer to vote billions of dollars to keep our soldiers on the border camping under the smiles of the western moon or drilling in the scorching heat of a Texas sun, writing letters of love back home, and receiving inspiration from us, than to vote to sustain a policy which would send them into a war endangering their lives and destructive of the peace and happiness of our people. [Applause.]

And when Mr. Hughes, in his acceptance speech, says that the Mexican policy of the President has not been firm the only construction that can be placed upon his language is that he believes that Wilson should have intervened. This Government several times within the past three years has been on the very brink of war with Mexico. Our citizens have not known any day what might happen on the morrow. We have sent demands to Mexico which if not answered as they were would have meant war. The President of this country should either have made those demands through diplomatic channels or should have resorted to arms. The only way the President could have been more firm than he has been would have been a declaration of war. We are to assume that Mr. Hughes, if he had been President, would have asked for a declaration of war.

Mr. Hughes may think that war is popular. He may think that the people are for intervention, but they are not. And I make the prophecy now that before the end of this campaign he will not be talking to the American people about Mexico; that he will not be crying out for intervention; that he will not be criticizing the President's policy touching the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions of war into Mexico.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DENISON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he knows what would probably have been the policy of the President if Germany had not yielded on his demand in regard to submarines?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, the gentleman's question is far afield. The gentleman's candidate for the Presidency says that in the foreign policy of this country President Wilson has not been firm enough. Now, the gentleman's question implies that in that instance he would have been too firm. President Wilson has followed the right policy throughout. He has championed the rights of neutrals and on all occasions has contended for their rights under international law; and no President in the history of this country, when he shall have gone out of office, will have a better record touching foreign policies than Woodrow Wilson. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will my colleague ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] what Mr. Hughes would have done?

Mr. HARRISON. I have only 15 minutes remaining, and I do not want to impose on the House at too great length.

Mr. DENISON. I should like to have an answer to my question.

Mr. HARRISON. I have answered the gentleman's question. The President showed a degree of firmness in that instance that won from the American people commendation and praise, and what he did at that time, standing up for American rights and the protection of the lives of our citizens, he did notwithstanding the gentleman himself and many men of his party tried to hamstring and embarrass the President. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. What would Hughes have done?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman does not understand that the President ever intended to go to war, whether Germany yielded or not.

Mr. HARRISON. I have answered the gentleman; but the trouble is that in all the speeches made by the gentleman's candidate for the Presidency and by the members of his party they criticize the President for doing this and doing that, and yet not in one instance do they say what their own party would do or what their own candidate for the Presidency would do. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman's candidate for the Presidency has not the courage to say that he would have recognized Huerta in Mexico. He has not the courage to say that he would actually intervene in Mexico. He has not the courage to say that he would not have put those embargo orders in force. And yet with all the language that he can employ he criticizes the President in such a way that that is the only conclusion you can draw. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The American people are not for war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They know what war means. Many of them remember the suffering that was endured, the damage that was wrought, and the material setback that accompanied the war from 1861 to 1865. We are all familiar with the horrors of the dreadful cataclysm now raging across the waters. Millions of the flower of Europe's manhood have been killed; strong men made cripples for life; asylums filled with the insane; industries paralyzed, capitalists pauperized, commercial houses bankrupted; battle fields whitened by the bleaching bones of the dead; agricultural fields laid in waste; rivers colored by the blood of wounded soldiers; homes saddened by the loss of loved ones; women forced to work in fields, on the streets, and in the factories, aye, even to marry in order to replenish the diminishing race. We have, Mr. Speaker, almost heard the sharp rattle of their muskets, the thundering roar of their cannon, the groans of their dying, and the wails of their sorrowing. We know the horrors of war.

If Mr. Hughes had been President—if we are to believe his speech of acceptance—instead of to-day in this country there being peace and plenty, happiness and contentment, an era of prosperity everywhere never experienced in the history of the country before, we would have war—cruel, unjust war. Our factories would be idle, our fields would lie in waste, our hospitals would be filled with wounded, our homes saddened; misery and poverty everywhere. We would read upon the faces of our women lines of sorrow, where now are written expressions of happiness. Our fathers would walk with dread and anxious step, where now they move in happy contentment. Where now we hear the laughter of children, we would hear the sobs of the sorrowing. The skies no more would reflect the color of burning furnaces, but rather the crimson glow of bloody battle fields.

No; the American people do not want war! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I suppose recently when the Mexican situation became so tense that if Mr. Hughes had been President, instead of dispatching with firmness a note such as was sent through diplomatic channels by Mr. Wilson, which brought peace and preserved our honor, he would have refused Mexican overtures and ordered the American armies into Mexico. I received a letter the other day from a little 18-year-old woman. She is the wife of a militiaman. This letter to me expressed a philosophy of peace. In her simple way, because she is a country girl, she wrote me:

MY KIND SIR: I am 18 years of age, the mother of a 3-months' old child; my husband joined the militia and went to the border. I am absolutely dependent upon him. I have pellagra, and my little baby is sick. My father and my mother are both dead, and I have no sisters or brothers. I need my husband at home, and I do hope you can see Mr. Wilson for me, because everybody here says he has such a tender heart and is such a great man, and ask him to let my husband come back to me.

And so it is, Mr. Speaker, that there would have been in the past two months thousands of just such cases as this if the policies of those who would intervene in Mexico had prevailed. Just such cries would have come from every nook and corner of this country, from every village, county, and State of this Nation. When the call to arms came and war looked inevitable, and these young men from every section responded "like heroes to the cause," the mothers, wives, daughters, sisters, and sweethearts all over the land, with heavy hearts, wended their ways along 10,000 roads and streets to bid the soldier boys good-by. We will never know how many eyes were dimmed with tears and how many prayers went up from loving hearts of the noble womanhood of this land that war might be averted. And while the sons of many Christian mothers are now camping on the banks of the Rio Grande, these mothers are awaiting their return and on their knees are praying God that Woodrow Wilson be given divine guidance and that peace, happiness, and contentment may prevail. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] It is easy enough to criticize and find fault, but there is one glaring fact in this campaign that will not be downed and that is that through it all Mr. Wilson has faced serious international problems; he has faced them all with firmness, maintained peace, and preserved our Nation's honor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the policy with which Mr. Hughes finds fault and charges to be weak is the same policy that the metropolitan press of the country for three years has approved, the policy the American people have been inspired by, and the policy that Republican leaders have indorsed. There is less cause for intervention to-day in Mexico than there was in August, 1913. There is no more reason to-day for interfering in the domestic and internal affairs of Mexico than there was in August, 1913. No event has occurred since that time that would convince any rational mind that Huerta should have been recognized. And yet here is what Senator NELSON, an influential Republican statesman, said about the policy of Mr. Wilson on August 21, 1913. And, Mr. Speaker, when these sentiments were uttered Mexico was torn with strife and dissension. A large number of American people were then howling for intervention. But in face of these conditions, Senator Nelson said:

I want to remind Senators at this juncture of a little bit of history that we older ones remember well, because it transpired under our eyes and observation. We were very glad during the long, weary, and momentous days of the Civil War that no foreign Government intervened in our struggle, and that they allowed us to settle the struggle among ourselves. We were threatened time and again with intervention from France, from Spain, and even from England. In one case the situation became so acute that a general of the United States at New Orleans was removed because of the complaint of foreign Governments. We were very glad to have foreign Governments keep their hands off and let us settle our controversy among ourselves. The treatment that we hoped and longed for, and which was accorded us during the days of the Civil War, we ought to be willing to accord to a sister Republic at this juncture, and not attempt to agitate the question and bring on war. We ought to permit Mexico, as we were permitted during the Civil War, to settle her internal troubles without warlike intervention on our part.

[Applause.]

What is it Senators want? Intervention means war. Suppose we have a war with Mexico. There are 15,000,000 people in Mexico, and they will not quietly and supinely submit to have that country invaded and dismembered. Suppose we should get, as the result of war, what some people are pining for—two or three of the northern provinces from Mexico and attach them to the United States, what good will it do us?

Therefore it seems to me that at this juncture we ought to do everything we can in this country to avoid war and give the people of Mexico the same chance to settle their internal difficulties which we asked and obtained during the long and weary days of the Civil War.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Senator SMOOT, one of the old guard and a leader in the Chicago convention that nominated Mr. Hughes, in speaking on the same day, said:

I desire to say to the Senate that Hon. A. W. Ivins, who might be termed the father of the Utah Colonies, writes me that he speaks for a great number of the Utah people when he says they would rather lose every dollar of property they own in Mexico than to see intervention by this Government. He says, "Let them fight it out among themselves"; and I, too, believe in that policy. * * * I want to say this much, because I believe that the President is doing everything to-day that can be done, and I believe it would be bad policy for this Government at this time to intervene in Mexico, and thus bring on bloody and costly war.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND, whom the distinguished Republican nominee took into confidence on the woman suffrage amendment recently, speaking on the same date, said:

The former administration, with whose doing in Mexico I was personally more familiar than I am with the actions of the present administration, was doing precisely, so far as I understand, what this administration is doing.

I have personally every confidence in the patriotism and good judgment of the President of the United States. I have had an opportunity, in connection with others, of talking with him face to face; and no man can talk with him without being convinced that President Wilson is patriotically engaged in doing everything he possibly can to bring order out of the chaos which now exists in Mexico.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LODGE, one of the old guard, who seems recently to have become very close with Mr. Roosevelt, speaking on this same day, said:

I cordially agree with what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who has just taken his seat, has said as to the general position, but I should like to add this remark to the present situation: The President of the United States, charged with the duty of conducting our relations with foreign countries, has been making an effort, in good faith and with all the wisdom and patience at his command, to bring about some arrangement in Mexico which would lead to peace and stable government. * * * I am sure we are all actuated by the same desire, and that is to maintain the peace of the country, not to intervene, to avoid intervention if possible, and at the same time give full and proper protection to American life and American property.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

But that is not all. The Republican nominee for Vice President knew what the sentiments of the American people were better than Hughes. He knew that they were not for war. He knew we had no business intervening in Mexico, and he gave some utterances to the country, and gave them at a time when the jingoes were crying aloud for intervention, when Mr. PENROSE had voiced his sentiments in the United States Senate, after Senator FALL had pleaded for intervention. This distinguished American, the candidate for Vice President, this man who is now running on the ticket with the Republican nominee, who obtained his information from Henry Lane Wilson and Senator FALL, said in August, 1913, speaking at that time to the Republican Editorial Association of Indiana. I wonder if the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] ever read these sentiments of peace from the mouth of one of the distinguished standard bearers of his party. I wonder, when the distinguished gentlemen, the ex-Speaker of the House [Mr. CANNON], spoke the other day so fervently and vigorously on Mexico, if he had then read what the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, his vice presidential candidate, said on this question. Let me read to you. I want you to pay attention. It sounds good. It is a great pity that your Republican nominee for President had not called into conference his running mate to talk with him about this very delicate Mexican question.

Says Mr. Fairbanks:

I have no doubt that the disturbances in Mexico during the last few years have been due in a greater or less degree to an effort on the part of ambitious, cunning men to force intervention and possible annexation to the United States.

[Applause.]

The exploiters of public utilities and of the mineral and agricultural resources of our neighbor have undoubtedly thought that they would gain much if they could force intervention by the United States. There are soldiers of fortune in Mexico who would undoubtedly welcome such a contingency.

Sensationalists are adding to the confusion of the situation and are making more difficult the solution of the problem.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Could we not class the Republican candidate for President to-day as one of those sensationalists? [Applause on the Democratic side.] I read further:

Intervention in Mexico is, of course, not a matter to be considered lightly, for intervention means war, and war means the destruction of human lives and the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. It means furthermore the responsibility of the Government of 20,000,000 people for an indefinite period. We are now engaged in governing 10,000,000 aliens as the result of the Spanish-American War, a war which could very probably have been averted if we could have exercised a little more patience, patriotism, and self-restraint.

Then he proceeds:

If our speculators—

I wonder whom he was talking about when he mentioned speculators? Did he mean men who own stocks in railroads, the men who own interests in mines, in timberlands, agricultural lands, and oil interests in Mexico? I wonder if any gentleman that the Republican candidate for President has lately conferred with could be placed in that class? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] The vice presidential candidate proceeds:

If our speculators in Mexico suffer pecuniary loss as the result of recurring revolutions, that is a matter for future consideration, when stable government and peace are fully established in that country. It is no warrant for shedding the blood of Americans.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

To sacrifice the life of one soldier for all of the dollars investors or speculators have ventured in Mexico would be the supremest criminal folly.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Without a deliberate affront on the part of the Mexican Government, whether it exists de jure or de facto, is no ground on which we would be justified in sending our armies beyond the Rio Grande.

President Wilson is dealing with it as best he can. We may not entirely agree that his course is better than that of his distinguished predecessor, nevertheless we should endeavor to uphold his hand.

There should be no difference of opinion as to that. By doing so we shall make his path a comparatively easy one.

It is not an hour for either little politics or sensational journalism.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The clamor of the jingoes should not be allowed to drown the voice of rational, deliberate statesmanship.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is a pretty safe rule when we come to deal with grave international problems to put our faith in the President of the United States and follow where he may lead.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

He speaks for the country when we come to deal with international affairs. The President of the United States is a safer guide than sensationalists and soldiers of fortune who come to the surface whenever international controversies arise.

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Sirs, I have been quoting from the candidate for Vice President on your ticket. "He speaks for the country when," he says, "we come to deal with grave international problems." "It is a pretty safe rule to put our faith in the President of the United States and follow where he may lead." He concludes: "The President of the United States is a safer guide than sensationalists and soldiers of fortune who come to the surface whenever international controversies arise." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me read again that beautiful sentiment that it may ring in the ears of you Republicans when you sit in great gatherings in the coming campaign and hear these misrepresentations fall from the lips of the Republican candidate for President. I want you to remember this beautiful sentiment, so well expressed by your Vice Presidential candidate. He says:

It is not an hour for either little politics or sensational journalism.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

And so I submit, Mr. Speaker, that these splendid expressions of approval and commendation coming from the men who championed the nomination of Mr. Hughes and who have the interest of their party at heart as much as he, should have been consulted concerning the Mexican policy. Instead, Mr. Hughes allowed himself to be swayed by the influence of Senator FALL and Henry Lane Wilson. But the acceptance speech of Mr. Hughes touching Mexico is in line with the criticizing and fault-finding policy of the Republicans. It shows conclusively that the Republican Party expects to wage such a campaign, hoping to create a false issue, that the people for the time being may forget that splendid and magnificent constructive record of President Wilson and the Democratic Party. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] is recognized for 45 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, three years ago when the Democratic Party took hold of the reins of this Government one of the first acts put upon the statute books was the Underwood tariff law. During the discussion on this bill strange and weird prophecies were made by those who opposed the measure, which were to the effect that if this law were put in operation this country would soon face one of the greatest crises in the history of the Nation. It is very easy for a person to criticize and to prophesy for the future, but when I see a person spreading a doctrine that is not based on facts I always recall that old saying, "Beware of false prophets who appear in sheep's clothing but inwardly are ravenous wolves." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let us see how truly their prophecies have been borne out. On the 30th of June of this year the Treasury of the United States had on hand the enormous balance of $236,789,590.90, which, according to the records, is the largest balance the Treasury has had in 20 years, except one. If the statements of those who are to-day criticizing the Democratic Party for revising the tariff downward were true, then what is the reason for this great era of prosperity that exists throughout our country? In practically every State in the Union the bank deposits are larger than ever before; business conditions are all that can be expected; and the pro rata wealth of the individual citizen has increased in wonderful proportions. In my State the banks now have $8,000,000 more deposits than they had at this time last year. It is true that the revenue obtained from import duties has fallen off because of the terrible war in which many of the European nations are at this time engaged, yet the framers of the new tariff law had sufficient wisdom to provide an income tax, so that the wealth of this Nation should pay its just proportion of the cost of running this Government, and this feature of the bill alone caused something like $124,000,000 to be collected from this source. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Practically one-half of the income tax is paid by some 2,500,000 stockholders of 190,000 corporations. There are those who claim that this is unfair; yet I am one who believes that those who are the most fortunate in life should be willing to pay more than those who have a hard time in making both ends meet. Let us see how the income tax operates in other countries. As a comparison I will say that in one foreign country those who have incomes over $3,500 pay 10 per cent; over $5,000, 12½ per cent; over $10,000, 18½ per cent; over $15,000, 25½ per cent; and an income of over $100,000 pays a tax of 33½ per cent. For this fiscal year that country expected to realize from its income tax alone $975,000,000. Those who pay an income tax in the United States should have no complaint, as the percentage charged is smaller than that levied by any other country in the world.

UNDERWOOD TARIFF ACT.

On October 3, 1913, the Underwood tariff law was placed on the statute books. About 10 months later, in the forepart of August, 1914, war was declared. During this time the Underwood law produced $10,889,000 more than the Payne Act for the same months in the preceding year. The Payne Act, besides levying tariff duties, also included a corporation tax; the Underwood Act likewise included an income tax.

I do not agree with the Members of this House who believe that the people should be taxed indirectly—that is, at the customhouse—and later on the added cost be placed upon the articles, which causes the people to pay the same without knowing it. Some few years ago Senator Dolliver, a Republican from Iowa, said:

For every dollar collected at the customhouse it was supposed to add $5 worth of protection to the manufacturer, the person who paid the same.

According to his statement, if we had not collected last year the sum of $124,000,000 from the income tax and this amount should have been collected at the customhouse, the large interests would have received profits, according to the Senator's statement, which is $5 to $1, amounting to some $620,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, there are some Members of this House who will try to lay stress on the fact that the Democratic Party fails to raise sufficient revenue to run the Government. This statement can be met by the assertion that the facts do not warrant its utterance, but what constantly underlies the remarks of the man who believes this doctrine is that the Democratic Party does not hide the methods by which the people are taxed as does the other party that has been in power. They seem to think there is a virtue in taxing through the customhouse and a vice in taxing in any other way. It has frequently been said that the height of statesmanship lies in taxing the people without their knowing it, and the real difference between the new Democratic tariff law and the one used by the other party when in power is that the Democrats believe in lowering duties on the necessities of life and, by an income tax, compelling the wealth of the Nation to make up the difference. The other party believes in taxing at the customhouse, thereby giving protection, as Senator Dolliver said, to the large interests at the rate of five to one.

The Underwood tariff law from January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, the time of the beginning of the war, produced $18,198,599 more than the Payne Act in the same seven months in the preceding year. The old tariff law, during President Taft's administration, showed a deficit on August 1, 1910, of $10,055,000; on August 1, 1911, $15,524,000; on August 1, 1912, $292,000; on August 1, 1913, $9,563,000. The Democratic tariff law on August 8, 1914, showed a surplus of $15,000,000. When the Democratic administration took charge of the affairs of this Nation on March 4, 1913, there was the sum of $82,219,519.97 on hand. On June 30, 1916, the Treasury showed the handsome balance of $236,789,590.90.

If the Underwood bill was the sole cause of business depression three years ago, it is equally fair to give it credit for bringing about the unequalled and unexampled prosperity in the country to-day.

So when you hear a person boldly making the statement that the Democratic tariff law has not been a success or that it has not produced as much revenue as the Payne bill, you will know that his statements do not agree with the facts.

FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The Federal reserve law is one of the most important acts that have been enacted for a quarter of a century. Prior to the passage of this law the big moneyed interests of this country, which controlled practically all of our industries by a system of interlocking directorates, could at their will bring down upon the people a disastrous panic. If there is any one thing that brings terror to the hearts of the people it is to have the savings of a lifetime on deposit in their banks snatched from them by a few men who have gained control of the Nation and who decree that there shall be a panic. I now have in my possession a number of clearing-house certificates that were used in the place of currency during the last financial eruption under the Roosevelt administration. I dare say these will be interesting relics a hundred years from now, as never again, as long as this law remains in effect, will it be possible to bring about another disaster of this kind. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Democratic Party has always believed that the Government should have certain supervision over the finances of this Nation; and, while this bill was seriously opposed by Wall Street and many of the big business institutions, those in charge of this legislation courageously did their duty, and were successful in passing the bill. From the very beginning it established confidence in the banking system of the country, giving it the soundest financial system of any nation in the world. This measure has become so popular that no party would dare go before the people and advocate its repeal; and it has frequently been said that no party in power was ever able to successfully cope with the big moneyed interest which controlled the wealth of this Nation until the Democrats took hold of the reins of this Government.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Another one of the highly important Democratic measures that have been put in operation during the Wilson administration is the act creating the Federal Trade Commission. The duties of this body are to provide information and publicity and to act as a clearing house by which both the public mind and the managers of great business undertakings should be guided.

I have introduced a bill which gives to the Federal Trade Commission certain jurisdiction over corporations which offer for sale stocks, bonds, and other securities to the public. I am of the opinion that every association or corporation which offers for sale to the public any kind of securities should be supervised by some department of the Government in order that the innocent purchaser can know something as to the validity of such securities.

Thousands of companies in the United States are operating wildcat schemes, and many of our people are daily being defrauded because we do not have any proper jurisdiction over matters of this kind.

The following bill, when enacted into law, would give this commission the jurisdiction which is lacking and at the same time provide protection to thousands of investors in the United States.

A bill (H. R. 14726) to amend an act approved September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission act.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914 (38th Stat. L., p. 717), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new section thereto, to be designated as section 6a, as follows:

"SEC. 6a. That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, or corporation engaged in commerce, not exempted from the provisions of this act, to offer for sale any stocks, bonds, or other securities in any State or Territory of the United States without first submitting to the commission a notice of such intention to so offer for sale such stocks, bonds, or other securities, together with a report of the business engaged in, showing in detail the amount of capital invested or capital stock issued, the amount paid therefor, and the manner and time of the payment of same; the dividends paid, the surplus funds, if any, and the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of any property, franchises, or other holdings; the number of employees and the salaries paid each; the amount expended and how expended; the earnings and receipts, the operating and other expenses, and the balances of profit and loss, for the year preceding the filing of said notice, or for such time as such person, partnership, or corporation shall have been engaged in business where operation has been less than one year preceding said notice, and without first obtaining authority to offer for sale such stocks, bonds, or other securities, as herein provided. If after examination of said report, or together with such other information as may be further required, the commission shall deem that the business to be affected is in a state of solvency and offers a reasonably safe investment for the public, it shall issue to such person, partnership, or corporation a certificate reciting in substance that such person, partnership or corporation therein named is authorized to offer for sale such stocks, bonds, or other securities, in any State or Territory of the United States. And person, partnership, or corporation failing to comply with this section shall forfeit in addition to the penalty prescribed for a violation of said act, to the United States, the sum of $100 for each and every day default shall continue, recoverable in the manner prescribed by the provisions of this act."

MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. Speaker, at the first session of Congress under a Democratic administration a merchant-marine bill passed the House, but when it reached the Senate the representatives of the special interests put on a filibuster and the measure was talked to death. If this bill had been enacted into law, it would already have saved the producers of this country millions of dollars in freight rates, besides furnishing sufficient tonnage to supply the peaceful nations of the earth. At this time, because of the scarcity of ships, the rates on grain have advanced from 4 cents to 51 cents; on flour, from 10 cents a hundred to $1; on lumber, from 18 cents to $1.10; and on cotton, from $2 to $18 per bale.

The merchant-marine act would have saved the people of the State of Oklahoma in freight rates on cotton alone more than $10,000,000 last year; and who is it that can say that the United States Government should not take such steps as will be necessary to provide means for the carrying on of our commerce and to take care of the products of this Nation? [Applause.] The farmers of my State have had to pay as high as 3 cents per pound, or $15 per bale, to the shipping monopoly because our Government had to depend upon vessels owned by foreign nations to take care of our trade.

A great railroad king once said, "Let me control the transportation facilities and I will own the country and the people who inhabit it."

The gross steam tonnage of all the nations in the world at the outbreak of the war was 45,400,000, and approximately one-half was under the British flag. The United States have 15 vessels of 1,000 net tons, but practically all of them are now employed on the Great Lakes. Since the outbreak of the war over 6,000,000 gross tons of ocean-going vessels have been withdrawn, and this has left such a shortage that the owners of vessels were able to obtain practically any rate for the hauling of commerce that they desired to charge. To-day ships are charging such high rates that the revenue received for one trip is in many cases more than the cost of the ship. Only a few weeks ago the submarine merchantman Deutschland made a wonderful trip from Germany, bringing 750 tons of dyestuffs, and so forth. The owners stated that the profits would be sufficient to pay for the expense of building this vessel.

At this time our trade with some of the foreign countries has practically been destroyed because we have no ships, and while there are those who represent the big interests claim that this measure should not be enacted into law, yet our union with the Pan American States has placed us in a position where we can to-day have a market for millions of dollars worth of articles manufactured in this country if we only had sufficient vessels to properly carry on this trade. There are those who claim that the Government should not enter into the ship business and that if it did the results would be disastrous; yet they should take into consideration the fact that when we purchased the Panama Canal territory we acquired a line of ships plying between Panama and New York, and the records show that this line has paid a profit from the day we obtained possession until now. For a half a century we have been waiting for private capital to provide a merchant marine, but the number of our privately owned ships has been decreasing, until now we are at the mercy of the different foreign nations to handle our commerce. This condition must not continue. We as a Nation should provide means for the sale of the agricultural products and goods manufactured in this country. Inasmuch as the House of Representatives passed this bill, I am hoping that the Senate will do likewise, so that we can give to the people the protection along this line they are justly entitled to and keep the few shipowners from charging exorbitant rates in the future. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

PARCEL POST.

Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party has raised the Parcel Post System to its highest point of efficiency. I believe that the rural population, which do not have the advantages of those that live in the city, are entitled to receive every commodity that will enable them to keep in closer touch with the markets of the world. When this system was being improved the express companies of this country put forth every effort possible to destroy it because of the competition it would bring to them. I am informed that prior to the development of this system the express companies, when the civil authorities sought to prove their rates were exorbitant, brought in a great compilation of facts and figures to attempt to prove that the rates being charged were not any higher than was necessary to pay a reasonable dividend upon the capital invested. Yet, strange to say, when the parcel-post rates went into effect a few months afterward these same companies, which had attempted to convince the civil authorities of the United States that they were not charging exorbitant rates, sent out a notice to the world that their rates would be reduced uniformly on a certain date, and no person has ever heard any complaint from this source from that day until this to the effect that the companies were not making a fair profit on their investments.

Millions and millions of dollars have been saved to the purchasers of this country because of the splendid Parcel Post System, which has been brought to its present state of efficiency by the Democratic Party, and no party could be successful that would advocate the repeal of the laws affecting the system which has been perfected under a Democratic administration.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

About 10,000 miles from the United States there are located in the Pacific Ocean approximately 3,000 small islands, which comprise our Philippine possessions. These were obtained as a result of the War with Spain, and inasmuch as the investment made in this connection has never paid the United States an amount sufficient to pay the interest, the Democratic Party has steadfastly advocated giving to these people their independence. Every person knows that if we were the object of an attack by any country these islands would probably be the first section to suffer, and if any country were to attack the people of these islands at this time we would be compelled to uphold the honor and dignity of our Nation by repelling such attack. These islands are the same as a chip on our shoulders. Should some other nation attempt to brush it off, it would no doubt start a war that might cost the lives of thousands of our brave soldiers.

I say that it is nothing but a business proposition to cut loose from a venture that brings no profit. These people are not of our race. They are small, swarthy individuals who, to a certain extent, do not have our customs or our manners, and inasmuch as they very much desire their independence, I am sure that every person who makes a study of the question will support the policy of the Democratic Party in advocating their freedom. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

ARMOR PLATE.

President Wilson in his speech made at Chicago, Ill., January 31, 1916, made the following statement:

I have proposed to the Congress that for one thing we at once build our own armor plant, not for the purpose of making all the armor that our ships need, unless that should become necessary, but for the purpose of keeping the price within sight. I have proposed to the Congress that we prepare to manufacture also the munitions which the Government may need—for the same purpose—not to drive other people out of business, but merely to serve other people with notice that if necessary we will manufacture all the munitions we need. We have had some experience in this matter. The Navy now makes a very large proportion of its own powder. Before it began it paid 53 cents a pound for it, and now it pays 36. That shows the very interesting effect of Government competition upon the price. So all along the line we mean business, and we are going to see that business characterizes the processes of national defense. We would not be Americans if we did not.

The Democratic Party believes that the President is right and that the large manufacturing industries which have had a monopoly in the past in this branch of industry should not be allowed to charge our Nation any price they desire. By reason of their monopoly the big steel companies have piled up millions of dollars of profits, and would have continued so to do had not the Democratic Representatives in Congress had the courage to support this kind of legislation.

GOOD ROADS.

A good-roads bill has been enacted at this session of Congress which contains many of the features of the bill I introduced on this subject. This measure provides $5,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1916; $10,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1917; $15,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1918; $20,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1919; and $25,000,000 for 1920. These sums of money are to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with the various States of the Union. The State, in order to obtain the benefits of this law, must agree to the terms of the act, and for every dollar appropriated by the State the Government will furnish an equal amount, to be expended under certain rules and regulations which will standardize or provide a system which will give to every section of the country a uniform method of road building which will produce the best results. There are approximately 7,000,000 farmers in the United States. There are more than 2,000,000 miles of unimproved public roads. The farmers lose in wear and tear and depreciation and through other causes more than $300,000,000 a year because of the bad condition of public highways. The cost of hauling over the average public road is approximately 23 cents per ton per mile, and over hard-surface roads approximately 13 cents per ton per mile. This bill will be of great assistance to every State in the Union. It is one of the most important laws that has ever been passed by Congress, and the Democratic Party is entitled to a great deal of credit for taking the first step in this direction.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. Speaker, I have been especially interested in the subject of rural credits. During my campaign I promised the people of my district that I would do everything in my power to assist in passing this kind of legislation, and I am indeed glad to see a law passed which provides a system whereby loans can be made to those who are trying to improve their home conditions. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This measure includes some of the ideas carried in the bill I introduced on the first day of this session, and it provides a complete interlocking set of machinery which is under the control of a Federal Farm Loan Board, which consists of five members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, who is chairman ex officio. Under the provisions of this act the United States, including Alaska, will be divided into 12 districts, each of the same having located therein a Federal loan bank, established for the purpose of making long-term loans on the amortization plan. The capital stock of these banks will be $750,000, and no loan made by a Federal loan bank will be less than $100 nor more than $10,000. Loans made by these banks are limited to be used for the following purposes:

(a) To provide for the purchase of land for agricultural purposes.

(b) To provide for the purchase of equipment and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the farm.

(c) To provide buildings and for the improvement of farm lands.

(d) To liquidate the indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgage existing at the time of the organization of the farm-loan association.

A loan can not be made for a period of less than 5 years nor more than 40 years, and no loan or mortgage can be made under this law at a rate of interest to exceed 6 per cent per annum, exclusive of amortization payments. The national farm-loan association, provided for by this act, must be composed of not less than 10 men in any community or county within the Federal land-bank district who desire to secure loans and who organize what is termed and classified by the act as a national farm-loan association.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. I will ask the gentleman if it has not been the pledge of both political parties in Oklahoma for a number of years that they would favor the enactment of a rural credit law, and if it is not true that during the first term of President Wilson that law was passed, and is now on the statute book?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman has stated the facts correctly.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is referring to the party platforms in the State of Oklahoma, is he not?

Mr. FERRIS. In my question; yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Well, the national platform of the Republican Party never promised a rural credit law before four years ago. Is not that the fact?

Mr. FERRIS. That is their own dereliction of duty, not ours.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. And the national platform of the Democratic Party did not include that question until four years ago.

Mr. FERRIS. They promised it on the stump throughout my State for the last 13 years, both parties. Your party has tried to get into power promising that, but never delivered the goods.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. If the gentleman will be fair—

Mr. McCLINTIC. I only yielded for a question. Does the gentleman care to ask me a question, or does he care to have a little colloquy with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I simply desire to ask you whether you are trying to establish some principle, from a party standpoint, by stating what was done in the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman after I have concluded my speech.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman's colleague made an unfair statement. That is what I complain of.

Mr. FERRIS. "The gentleman" did not make an unfair statement, as the Record will show. The question was this, and I will repeat it: In our State has it not been the pledge of both political parties for years that they would pass a rural-credit law? The gentleman who occupies the floor [Mr. McCLINTIC] said yes, and I asked him if it was not true that during the first term of President Wilson the Democratic Party actually delivered the goods. What is there about that which is unfair?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I simply ask if it is not a fact that both national parties never promised it until four years ago?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but the gentleman from North Dakota goes off into another proposition. I said nothing about the national parties. I referred to our State platforms, and I stated them correctly, and I was not unfair about it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I feel that this is one of the most important measures ever enacted into law by any Congress, and the Democratic Party is entitled to a great deal of credit for championing the cause of the tiller of the soil and making it possible for the farmers of this country to borrow sums of money at a low rate of interest on a long term of years.

IMMIGRATION.

The Democratic Party, President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, and practically every patriotic organization in the United States believe in the protection of the rights of American citizens, and have advocated the passage of a literacy test in the immigration law. This law will keep the United States from becoming a dumping ground for those who come from foreign countries, especially southern Europe. One Member of Congress, speaking on this subject, used the following language:

It embraces many who come from southern Europe, like the lawless herd in the Lawrence strike, with a torch in one hand and a bomb in the other. It embraces the militant suffragettes of England, who believe in blowing up churches and destroying mail boxes and private and public property.

Every person knows about the great war now going on in Europe. There is no question but that as soon as this great struggle is over there will be a great influx of the worst people that ever came to this country. If we allow the door to remain open for two or three years, it will result in driving out many that toil on the farm and in the mine, or, in other words, provide a class of competition that is not fair to the citizenship of this great Nation. The records of practically every eastern city show that the majority of criminals are aliens who can not read.

The average net cost per year to the State of New York for the maintenance of the alien insane for the last four years is $2,602,634. I believe in protecting home institutions and home industries, and it is wonderfully strange why any person would be willing to let down the bars so that this country should be a refuge for the ignorant and illiterate foreigner who is willing to undermine the wage scale that is being paid in this country and bring misery and discontent to millions of our good citizens. This protection was opposed by a few Members, including the Socialist Representative in Congress.

NATIONAL GUARD.

President Wilson has been surrounded with what seem to be insurmountable difficulties from practically the beginning of his term up to the present time. By his clear, level-headed management he has been able safely to steer our Nation away from any difficulty with any foreign nation. At times he has taken a firm stand, which has resulted in other countries giving to the Stars and Stripes the respect it was entitled to receive. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When it became absolutely necessary for this country to issue a strong ultimatum to Mexico in order that the rights of our citizens who live along the border or who were temporarily sojourning in that country might be protected, he came to Congress and asked that a bill be passed empowering him to use the National Guard if it became necessary to place a protectorate over that country. This was not a party measure, but, on the other hand, was a patriotic measure, and one that should have received the support of every red-blooded, loyal, true American citizen in this Nation.

It will doubtless be of some interest to the people to know that the Representative of the Socialist Party voted against giving the President this authority.

RIVERS AND HARBORS BILL.

Mr. Speaker, the rivers and harbors bill, carrying $41,000,000, passed the House, supported by Democrats and Republicans. I voted against this measure because I do not believe that the money appropriated for this purpose is being spent in every case on feasible projects. There has been spent over $800,000,000 on rivers and harbors throughout the United States, and it is pretty generally agreed that one-third of this amount has been wasted. Recently there was published an interesting article entitled "Fetching the Gulf to Dallas," which shows that more than $1,952,287 have been expended upon this project up to June 30, 1913. The article follows:

An interesting exhibit in the 1914 catalogue of follies is the Trinity River in Texas. The plan is to make Dallas, 512 miles (by water) from the river's mouth, a seaport. The politicians and misguided business men behind the project propose to drown the deep baritone of bullfrogs on the Trinity's banks with the roar of steamboat whistles in midstream. But it is likely the frogs will be croaking for many years to come. The Trinity is being "improved" by canalization—by open channel work and a system of locks and dams—in order to secure a 6-foot stage from Dallas to its mouth. In 1902 Congress appropriated $125,000 to start the work, and to June 30, 1913, $1,952,287 was appropriated for the job. It is estimated that $581,622 more will be required to complete the project. The present bill carries $155,000. Last year only 60,877 tons of freight were carried on the Trinity, and 44,863 tons of that was saw logs and cordwood.

Texas furnishes another example in the Brazos from Old Washington to Waco, a distance of 170 miles. We have spent $950,000 to date, and the present bill carries $275,000. Official reports say "no commerce has yet developed," and that the amount necessary to complete the work is "indefinite."

Congressman FREAR, in commenting on this bill, made the following statement:

Over $9,000,000 in the 1916 bill is carried for the Mississippi River, counting $1,000,000 for the Passes, on which over $18,000,000 have been spent. Over $150,000,000 of Government funds have been sunk in and along that river, and the commerce has decreased 90 per cent while we were squandering that enormous amount of money.

Five million dollars of the 1916 bill is for the farcical Ohio River canalization scheme, apart from over a half million for open-channel work. About $50,000,000 has been squandered by the Government on the Ohio, and the actual river commerce is far less now than it was 20 or 30 years ago, when expenditures were nominal.

Nearly $2,000,000 of the bill is for the Missouri River, on which over $20,000,000 has been spent, while the actual commerce in 1914 could have been carried by a half dozen trains, and the average haul was for only a few miles, at a cost of $40 per ton, or more than the freight was worth.

The Beaufort Canal, which has an insignificant commerce, receives $1,000,000 in the 1916 bill. Millions are being squandered on this North Carolina scheme, and yet the only Member on this floor who protested against the $2,000,000 appropriations for dependents of National Guardsmen was a chief defender of the project.

Instead of commercializing patriotism, Congress has been too long commercializing political pork for the benefit of certain localities and at the expense of the country.

These four rivers and canals take $17,000,000 of the 1916 bill, while their actual commerce, apart from duplications, is trivial compared with a dozen harbors that can be named.

The Tennessee River carries $944,000 for another canalization scheme, which benefits no one but water-power owners, contractors, and dredgers. All the actual waterway commerce amounts to less than 2 per cent of that handled at Ashtabula, Ohio, and yet we have spent $11,000,000 on this wasteful scheme.

In the 1916 bill is $710,000 for the Cumberland River, which floats only about 50,000 tons of actual commerce annually, or about 1 per cent of that handled by the little harbor of Ashland, in my own State. Nearly $6,000,000 of Government money has been spent on the Cumberland in order to get that result.

The Arkansas, Ouachita, and Red Rivers receive about $1,000,000 in the 1916 bill, in addition to over $8,000,000 already spent by the Government. All the actual commerce on these three rivers combined does not amount to one-half of 1 per cent of that handled by either of the Chicago or Milwaukee Harbors.

The Trinity gets $250,000 and the Brazos $390,000 in this bill, or $640,000 for two streams that do not furnish a half-dozen trainloads of actual freight the year round. And we have spent nearly $4,000,000 developing a commerce that costs over $80 per ton to float on these dry rivers.

Appropriations of this kind should not be passed. A project should be feasible before it receives favorable consideration, and for this reason I am opposed to the methods used in considering this kind of legislation. This bill passed the House, and when it reached the Senate other projects were added which increased the amount appropriated by $2,500,000. When the conference committee made a report on this bill to the House of Representatives, there was a sufficient number of Members voting for it to enact it into law notwithstanding the fact that it carried the sum of $41,000,000. Among those voting for this report was Mr. LONDON, the Socialist Representative.

PREPAREDNESS.

The building of the Panama Canal and the union with the Pan American States to our South have raised new questions of defense in our Nation. During the present conflagration, in which every effort has been made by the different countries involved to get the United States to take sides, first with one nation and then another, President Wilson has handled the situation in a way that has caused him to deserve and to receive the admiration of the world, and while at times it seemed it was going to be impossible for us to maintain the dignity and honor of this Nation without becoming involved, yet he has been master of the situation, and by his conscientious efforts has succeeded in not only keeping our skirts clear but in bringing to the attention of American citizens the need for making sufficient preparation. In a speech delivered at the Auditorium, Chicago, January 31, 1916, he used the following language:

Somebody must keep the great economic processes of the world of business alive. Somebody must see to it that we stand ready to repair the enormous damage and the incalculable losses which will ensue from this war, and which it is hardly credible could be repaired if every great nation in the world were drawn into the contest. Do you realize how nearly it has come about that every great nation in the world has been drawn in? The flame has touched even our own continent by drawing in our Canadian neighbors to the north of us, and, except for the South American Continent, there is not one continent upon the whole surface of the world to which this flame has not spread; and when I see some of my fellow citizens spread tinder where the sparks are falling I wonder what their ideal of Americanism is.

The American people are as patriotic as any other citizenship on earth, and, while I am hoping that nothing will happen that will make it necessary for us to take up arms against any other nation, yet it can be easily seen that when a majority of the countries in the civilized world are engaged in mortal combat, it would be a very easy thing to be drawn into the present war, and unless a person is properly informed as to inside facts he is liable hastily to make utterances that it were better had not been said.

Every person who is informed must realize it is a gigantic problem to be the sole guardian of 100,000,000 of citizens, and this, to my mind, is very forcefully brought out by another statement made by the President when he spoke at Chicago. He used this language:

It is a very terrible thing, ladies and gentlemen, to have the honor of the United States entrusted to your keeping. It is a great honor, that honor of the United States! In it runs the blood of generations of men who have built up ideals and institutions on this side of the water intended to regenerate mankind, and any man who does violence to right, any nation that does violence to the principles of just international understandings, is doing violence to the ideals of the United States. We observe the technical limits; we assert these rights only when our own citizens are directly affected; but you know that our feeling is just the same whether the rights of those individual citizens are affected or not, and that we feel all the concern of those who have built up things so great that they dare not let them be torn down or touched with profane hands.

The United States Government has military attachés stationed in the foreign countries that are now engaged in war, and from these the proper department receives confidential reports as to the activities now being carried on. It is impossible for any person to be fully informed as to the conditions that exist in these foreign countries unless he should have access to the reports that are daily being received by our Government.

The President has advisers who have been successful up to this time and who realize that unless some preparation were made and a firm stand taken that we as a Nation might have to suffer insults and indignities, and in the end be humiliated as a people that did not have the true patriotism to stand up for its rights. In order that the United States might hold its proper place in the estimation of the other countries, the President left the White House and went out and met the people and took them into his confidence and told them just how near we were to a crisis. In a speech delivered at Topeka, Kans., he used the following language:

What you have to realize is that everywhere throughout America there is combustible material—combustible in our breasts. It is easy to take fire where everything is hot. It is easy to start a flame when the air is full of the floating sparks of a great conflagration. We have got to be on our guard, and it has been our hourly and daily anxiety in Washington to see that the exposed tinder was covered up and the sparks prevented from falling where there were magazines.

The present war is costing England at the rate of approximately $1,500,000 per hour. The United States is the richest Nation on earth, and while there are those who criticize us for making any kind of preparation, yet the old adage is still true, that "a stitch in time saves nine," and who is it that can prophesy and say that the action taken by the United States Congress in passing an appropriation act which will carry less than that spent by England in 15 days while engaged in the present conflagration was wrong? There is no person on earth that is any stronger for peace than I am. I am strictly opposed to any form of militarism, and I feel sure that as long as the Democratic Party is in power no legislation of this kind can ever be enacted into law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is true that we have certain Members of the minority who have complained seriously because the appropriation made for preparedness was, in their opinion, entirely too small. I am, indeed, glad they do not have sufficient votes to carry out their program, as, if the ideas advocated by some members of the other party could be put into effect, I fear that this country would undergo a complete change, in that the military authorities would to a certain extent supersede the civil authorities. The President asked Congress to stand by him and give to this Nation the protection it was entitled to, and it is to the credit of this body that every Member but two were patriotic enough to stand by him. Mr. LONDON, the Socialist Representative, voted against this measure.

WAR REVENUE.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that the Treasury of the United States under the Democratic administration had the largest balance on June 30, 1916, that it has had for years, the decrease in imports caused by the present war and the increased appropriations made necessary because of this country not being sufficiently prepared, it became necessary for steps to be taken to raise additional funds for the future. When I learned that a bill for this purpose was under consideration by the Ways and Means Committee, I addressed the following communication to the chairman:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, January 29, 1916.

HON. CLAUDE KITCHIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KITCHIN: I have given careful and critical consideration to the proposition concerning increased military appropriations and the means to which Congress will resort to meet these increased expenditures, and have definitely made up my mind that if Congress makes these tremendous increases for armament, I shall not vote for a stamp tax affecting the poor of the country, when they must be dependent on in time of war for the protection of our liberty.

However, I shall insist that the Ways and Means Committee report a bill to increase the income tax by a surtax, or any other way that is proper. I also favor an inheritance tax.

In addition, I would be glad to see a tax placed upon the traffic in war materials manufactured by the munition people who are amassing fortunes out of the horrors of the European war.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) JIM MCCLINTIC.

I do not believe there is any person who can successfully refute the argument that those who are the most fortunate in life should bear the largest proportion of the financial burden of this Government. I believe that the big manufacturers and trusts, which have made millions out of the present war, should pay a tax, and I was indeed very much pleased when the Ways and Means Committee made a report in which they adopted the suggestions made in my letter to them dated January 29, 1916. In addition to increasing the income tax, this measure proposes two new sources of revenue, namely, a Federal inheritance or estate tax and a tax upon the manufacture of munitions of war. The necessary additional revenue is to be raised in the following manner:

- (1) By increasing the present income-tax rates;
- (2) By levying an estate tax;
- (3) By levying a tax upon the manufacture of munitions of war; and
- (4) By reenacting certain of the special taxes provided in the emergency revenue act of October 22, 1914, omitting objectionable stamp taxes.

Treasury officials estimate the new income tax will raise the enormous sum of $227,000,000, the inheritance tax raising $54,000,000 when in full operation, the munition tax $71,000,000. I feel that, inasmuch as it has been estimated that some of the munition plants are making as much as $1,000,000 per day, the taxes received from these new sources of taxation will take care of the preparedness appropriations without it being necessary to tax those who are unfortunate in life, and surely no one can complain who is not called on to reach down in his pocket and subscribe to this fund.

OKLAHOMA LEGISLATION.

At different times during the past nine years representatives of the State of Oklahoma have made application to the Commissioner of the Land Office to obtain 210,000 acres of land to which the State was entitled under the acts of 1862 and 1866, which provided 30,000 acres for each Senator and Representative in Congress when the State was admitted into the Union. The department has always made adverse reports against the application filed at this session of Congress.

I have given the matter a great deal of study and have introduced a bill which gives to the State that which I felt it was entitled to at the time it was admitted into the Union. This bill was first considered by a subcommittee of the Public Lands Committee, and after an exhaustive hearing a favorable report was made, and then a similar report was made by the full Public Lands Committee. The bill was given a place on the calendar of the House of Representatives, and afterwards was advanced to the Unanimous Consent Calendar of the House, where it is ready for action just as soon as the Public Lands Committee is entitled to have a day for the consideration of such measures as it has reported. This measure when favorably considered will give to the State of Oklahoma all of the available unappropriated nonmineral public land, which approximately amounts to 42,177 acres. It also provides for an appropriation based upon $1.25 per acre for the amount of land that we are entitled to. This appropriation will amount to about $210,000.

Inasmuch as the Department of the Interior has not made an unfavorable recommendation against this measure and unanimous reports have been made after the committee had considered the same, I feel that the measure is just and that there should be no difficulty in getting it passed during the short session of Congress which convenes on the first Monday in December. I have given this matter some six months' study, and naturally I am very thankful to my friends who have given me credit for making one of the best fights that ever has been made by a new Member of Congress in reviving an old proposition which had been pigeon-holed for nearly nine years.

HOME PRIDE.

Mr. Speaker, the height of the ambition of every man should be to so conduct himself that he can bring about the most good and happiness in the community where he lives. This world has no place for a grumbler, and a man who is continuously dissatisfied because the machinery of progress does not move to suit him. I find good men in all parties. In my congressional district many of our best citizens, and my most loyal supporters, are those who have the same political faith as those who sit on my left. It only goes to show that the people are more interested than ever before in the things that affect their home, and the tendency is growing stronger each day among the better class of people to support those who have been faithful in performance of their duty, regardless of their political affiliation. [Applause.]

If we had a Government that would refuse to protect our American citizens by placing the proper safeguards in our immigration laws; that would refuse to listen to the appeal of the President when he asks for authority to use our National Guard to protect the dignity and honor of this Nation; that would refuse to vote for any measure to protect our canal and coasts so that we can maintain our honor and dignity on the sea; that would refuse to recognize the flag as an emblem of patriotism and to stand for the progress of the American Nation; that would refuse to safeguard the ballot properly, it might not be 12 months before the flag of some other nation would be floating from the United States Capitol and we as a citizenship would be compelled to suffer indignities heaped upon us at the direction of some other Government.

Loyalty, patriotism, and home pride have been the foundation upon which this country has been constructed, and it is the duty of every loyal citizen to put forth the proper effort to see that no party or person preaching disloyalty and disunion shall ever gain control of the reins of our Government.

The Democratic Party under the matchless leadership of Woodrow Wilson has done more for all classes and occupations than any other party has for a quarter of a century. The Democratic Party has listened to the appeal from labor and has passed through this House the eight-hour-day law, the Children's Bureau law, the child-labor bill, the railroad employees' safety law, the workmen's compensation law, the seamen's law, the stop-watch amendment, and the anti-injunction law.

The Democratic Party has also listened to the appeal coming from the farmer and has given him the rural-credits act, the warehouse bill, the agricultural-extension act, the cotton-futures act, and the grain and cotton grading act. The Democratic Party, besides giving to the 100,000,000 citizens of the United States and its insular possessions the kind of legislation that will produce better economic conditions, has passed legislation which will more evenly cause the proper distribution of wealth, and at the same time has given to the industries of this country splendid encouragement by passing legislation to take care of our commerce.

The Democratic Party gave us the Louisiana Territory and by the stroke of a pen added more real territory to this country than was ever acquired in any other way. It was a Democratic President who first guaranteed the territorial sovereignty of our neighbors, the South and Central American Republics. It was a Democratic President who gave us Florida. It was a Democratic President who gave us the gold-veined lands of the Montezumas. It was a Democratic President who sustained the honor and dignity of our country in the Venezuelan controversy, and the record of the Democratic Party and its representatives in Congress is such that every man who believes in good government can indorse the measures passed during the Woodrow Wilson administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, President Wilson has been criticized by a muck-raking press and by campaign orators on the stump for not going to war with some one somewhere, some place; but has he made a mistake in refusing to go to war and in keeping our country at peace? The blood-soaked battle fields of Europe answer back this criticism and say, "No mistake, no mistake." Thank God Almighty that we do not have millions of weeping wives and mothers and wailing orphan children with arms as long as eternity and fingers as bony as death, with faces grim visaged and determined, pointing to President Wilson and saying, "You did it," as they are now pointing to every king, emperor, czar, and sultan of Europe to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In every home on election day there will be a wife—a mother—pleading the cause of Woodrow Wilson because of his peace policy, because their husband and their sons have not been sent as fodder to the cannon mouths. [Applause.]

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS). The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is recognized for 25 minutes.

TRADE BOYCOTTS.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I read with interest and gratification in the newspapers this morning that the President and the Secretary of State, upon the arrival of Ambassador Page, are going to take up the question of the black list on American commerce. The Members of this House may not be aware of the pressing necessity for this; but when I state in one sweeping sentence that through the operation of the British black list the commercial flag of Great Britain floats to-day from the Rio Grande to the North Pole I think that the reason for this possibly belated action will be apparent. What is a black list, and how many are there? A black list—and there are more than one of such lists—is a list of persons, firms, or corporations with whom the world is forbidden by Great Britain to do business. How many lists are there? I can not give a complete number, because it is not known, but these lists are known: First, a black list of vessels, never published, but frequently alluded to. An American black list, consisting of firms, corporations, and individuals in America, made public by the British consul general the 20th of July, and when our State Department filed a formal protest a subsequent list, containing 13 names in addition, the sole reply to date to our protest against this American black list. Third, a surveillance list. That is a list of firms in America, other than those on the black list, to whom is sent by way of reminder the issue of the black list, and I hold in my hand a photographic copy of a list received by those firms on the surveillance list. The original of this list has been filed with the Department of State. Then there is in some form or another a bank black list, and in addition to these black lists there are separate known black lists covering the United States of Colombia, Peru, Brazil, and the Argentine. I hold in my hand a copy of the secret confidential black lists affecting the Argentine and Brazil. What is that list? Well, I will tell you what it means. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], say, is an American citizen. If he should desire to send merchandise in a quantity larger than would go by parcel post to any name on this list in Brazil or the Argentine, there is not one single steamboat company going out of the United States ports that would take the freight.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course it does not make any difference in reference to these names of corporations or individuals in South America—it does not make any difference whether they are Americans or neutrals or belligerents. The application would apply the same, would it not?

Mr. BENNET. Absolutely. And further than that—

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMSON. Upon what principle are these names in South America selected?

Mr. BENNET. They are selected by the British Government to suit its own sweet will and whim.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can understand why they would blacklist people who traded with Germany or Austria, but I can not understand why they should blacklist anybody in South America for anything but trade reasons. Will the gentleman enlighten us as to that?

Mr. BENNET. It is for trade reasons and for this particular commercial reason: Up until the breaking out of the war the trade with South America was principally controlled by Germany and Great Britain. We did some. When the war broke out Germany, of course, ceased to be able to do business with South America. It is the desire of Great Britain not only to keep its trade with South America but to add to it the trade formerly done by the German Empire.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then the idea is that anybody is blacklisted who attempts to acquire trade which England has in South America?

Mr. BENNET. Anybody is blacklisted who attempts to acquire trade—

Mr. ADAMSON. Of either of them?

Mr. BENNET. Of either of them. I will give the gentleman an instance. There is an exporter in New York City, an American by birth and of ancient lineage, of Scotch ancestry. He is a world exporter, and a year ago he was sending large quantities of one commodity—I will call it varnish; it was not varnish, but it was as innocent a commodity as that. He was sending it to South America to various firms. One day the British consul general sent for him and told him, "Mr. So-and-so, you are shipping large quantities of varnish to South America." He said, "I am." He said, "You will have to stop it," and he stopped it. Now, if anyone can give me any reason for that except the desire on the part of Great Britain to keep us from extending our trade in South America, I would like to have the reason indicated.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I yield first to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. If any of these ships should take a cargo to any blacklisted firm, then the penalty is visited on the ship, is it?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. That is a very interesting problem which the gentleman has brought forward, and I have been trying to read up on it for some time. Does the gentleman from New York mean to imply that Great Britain's design seems to be to hold all her trade in South America and absorb that which has been forced to be vacated by Germany and prevent the United States from supplanting Germany or anybody else in that South American trade?

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman has stated it better than I could. Here is what has happened to one man. He tried to ship goods to firms on this list which is now in the possession of the State Department. He went to the Houston Line, which runs to Rosario, Montevideo, and Buenos Aires, and they refused the freight. He went to the Prince Line, running to Brazil and the River Plate. He went to the Lamport & Holt Line, also running to Brazil and the River Plate, and they refused the freight. Then he went to the Norton Line, which is an American line, running American ships to the River Plate ports. The Norton Line not only runs vessels under the American flag but under neutral flags. They declined to accept any shipments of American manufactures from an American port to those persons in South America whose only crime and offense was that the British Government had put up its hand and said, "You shall not trade with anybody."

Mr. BRITTEN. "Without my consent."

Mr. BENNET. Without the consent of the British Government.

Mr. HELGESEN. Is the black list referred to confined to German firms?

Mr. BENNET. No; the Argentine list consists largely of Italian names, and Italy and Great Britain are supposed to be allied in the contest now waging across the water. Then this man went to Funch, Edye & Co., who are the great forwarding concern in the city of New York, if not of the United States, in the Brazilian service. He could not get his shipments through them, and, furthermore, when a customer of this particular man of whom I am now speaking attempted to arrange a shipment of 40 tons of goods through Funch, Edye & Co. and said who his broker was, this man being himself on one of the black lists, Funch, Edye & Co. directed him, if he desired to do business, to get a broker who was not on the British black list; and Funch, Edye & Co. is an American concern.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is well known that the distinguished gentleman never talks in this House without having some purpose or object in view, and I think we understand from his remarks the difficulty. I presume he has a remedy to suggest?

Mr. BENNET. I have.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like very much to hear the remedy. I notice that the gentleman acknowledged in the outset that the President is considering the situation. Whether the President can find a way out, or whether it devolves on Congress, I would like to have the gentleman state his remedy.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill which has been referred to the committee of which the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is the chairman. Just as soon as he gets a quorum of his committee in town I am going to ask him for a hearing. I do not think that the bill which I have introduced is the best bill that can be introduced on the subject. I think it can be improved, and I am very frank to say that I think the 21 gentlemen who compose the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—I think the number is 21—with their large experience, will improve the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Whatever we may be able to do, we want the benefit of the gentleman's suggestions about it. As I understand the gentleman and his bill, the proposition is to compel all steamship companies touching at our ports serving our people to cease to discriminate against our commerce. If these steamship companies, working under pain of the black list by all the allies, which are in control of the seas and of all the marts and ports of the world, have visited upon them pains and penalties under the criminal law if they refuse to take commerce ostracized by that black list, would not the inevitable result be to drive them out of business, at least temporarily?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, replying to the gentleman from Georgia, I want to say to him that I am an American before I am a Republican; that I realize that this is an administration of the other party; but that if what I propose and what I think the gentleman's committee, in some form, as an American committee, will report to Congress does not work, I will be willing, with the gentleman or any other gentlemen on both sides of the House, to put into the hands of the President of the United States both the power and the money to buy ships—and I am opposed to Government ownership—but this is a question so much higher than Government ownership that it resolves itself into a question of whether we are to continue to be an independent Nation.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is not opposed to meeting emergencies by any available means?

Mr. BENNET. I will vote for any bill that meets the emergency.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does it not seem to the gentleman, in line with his remarks, that the difficulty presents such an emergency, and that it is absolutely the duty of our Government to meet the emergency by providing ships that are not afraid of a black-list and can carry our goods and trade to South America and other countries?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of our country to provide ships which can do that, and it is the duty of our country to go further and say publicly that an American firm in America has the absolute right to ship American goods to anybody in South America, and that the whole power of the National Government will be behind any firm engaged in that kind of business. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give the reason why these shipping lines other than those of the allies decline to carry this merchandise to South American ports—for instance, the Norton Line?

Mr. BENNET. Yes. I do not know whether this applies to the Norton Line at the moment or not, but the reasons given by American steamship lines are that the coaling stations between here and South America are owned by Great Britain, and they actually say that if they take the goods of these firms on the British blacklists that the British Government will see to it that they can not coal at British coaling stations, although we have an absolute right under our treaties with Great Britain to do that. Now, not only do these various blacklists work this commercial wrong, but in connection with that there is a banking wrong. Within 48 hours after this blacklist was issued, in the city of New York the other day a firm which had accounts in two or three of the largest banks, which owed no man a dollar, which did not have a note in any of the banks, was sent for by one of these banks, an American bank, and they said, "Mr. So-and-so, our relations have been satisfactory, but you are on the British blacklist and you must withdraw your account." Another firm, not so fortunate financially, had notes in a bank. That bank sent for them and said, "Gentlemen, as your notes become due, they must be paid, and when the last of them is paid you must take out your account."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BENNET. In just one moment. They replied, "Have not our relations been satisfactory?" They said, "Perfectly." "Why?" "Because you are on the British blacklist."

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand the gentleman, in the instances cited Great Britain is seeking to exercise extra-territorial jurisdiction beyond its own jurisdiction, and in the United States over activities over which the municipal authorities alone in this Government have exclusive control?

Mr. BENNET. Seeking to do it? They are doing it. What I stated in my remarks is an absolutely accurate statement, that to-day the British flag flies from the Rio Grande to the North Pole.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. And if that is really so, she is more of a danger or menace to the United States than Germany when she sank the Lusitania, for she can not claim any law of self-defense.

Mr. BENNET. I do not want to go into any comparison.

Mr. ADAMSON. As I understand the gentleman from New York, he does not want to enter into the European contest, but protect our commercial interests?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly; and the gentleman from Georgia is going to help, I know.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; "the gentleman from Georgia" is ready to join with him right now if he is ready to help pass the shipping bill.

Mr. BENNET. The trouble with the shipping bill is that it does not meet the emergency. The situation with American firms to-day is that they are absolutely at the mercy of the British Government, and doing business in a market which has no relation at all to the European war. But when you go into the domain of Europe, into the territory of Europe, in relation to Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries, and Greece and Holland, there is always some plausible argument, always some pretext, at least, whether sound or unsound; but what under the canopy can anybody give as a reason why an American should not be permitted to trade from an American port to a South American port? There is no question of continuous voyage there, for the allies control every single ship that sails from a South American port to Europe. There is no question of any kind, and it comes down to the bald, brutal question as to whether we are going to permit the British Empire to say with whom we shall do business, when we shall do business, and how we shall do business. Why, you can not deposit in the banks of New York City a draft on these concerns which are on this blacklist, in the South American countries, for collection, and so many are these blacklists that the larger banks of New York City are compelled to employ a blacklist clerk, whose sole duty it is to answer the inquiries of people as to whether firms with whom it is sought to do business are on the blacklist of Great Britain or not, so that the bank can judge whether it is safe to do business.

Here is another grim and grizzly fact. As the British success in arms apparently increases on the Somme, the British restrictions on American commerce increase. That which could be done two weeks ago by merchants and banks in New York City can not be done to-day because of orders by the British Government. I have not taken the time entirely that—

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Along the line of the gentleman's very interesting argument, does not he think that we missed a grand opportunity when we did not purchase the interned ships that we could have purchased at such a bargain some time ago?

Mr. BENNET. I should be inclined to think that we did not. The gentleman may be correct. I am not going to enter into that. The gentleman asked my opinion in a word or two. In the first place, I do not know that the ships were for sale, and, in the second place, I am not sure if we could have gotten them free from complications.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not true that Great Britain would not have permitted us to buy the ships if we had wanted to do so?

Mr. BENNET. I hope the gentleman is not correct.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is correct, however.

Mr. HELGESEN. What good would it do to buy the ships if we had no coaling stations at which to coal the ships?

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman has put his finger on another point, although these particular ships would have coal-carrying capacity sufficient to take them from New York to Argentine ports.

Mr. ADAMSON. Have we not treaties with all of those countries authorizing us to build coaling depots and warehouses or any other facility for commerce that we wish?

Mr. BENNET. We have.

Mr. ADAMSON. And if we had some ships that were not afraid of a British blacklist, do you not think that we could send cargoes down there?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not under the present administration.

Mr. BENNET. I would be in favor of not only sending colliers but warships to protect what we have an absolute right to, and that is the right to trade with countries at the south of us. [Applause.]

And if we did that, my friend from Georgia will agree with me, I know, that we would not have any difficulty in getting coal at the British coaling stations.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman tell me, if an American ship, for instance a freight ship, was started to Rio de Janeiro, what part an attendant warship would play if we sent one with the freighter? What would the warship have to do when it got to Rio de Janeiro?

Mr. BENNET. It would prevent what the shipping merchants of New York fear. That is, it would prevent that particular ship from being seized by a British cruiser. Now, the gentleman may think I am fanciful in expressing that opinion but—

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think you are, most decidedly.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman permit me to complete that answer?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes certainly; then I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. BENNET. All right. That is not a fanciful ground, because in the insurance policies issued upon American ships sailing out of New York there is now stamped by every insurance company a provision to the effect that the policy does not cover risk from capture by British or allied ships, so that the insurance companies of the United States contemplate that if ships operate between New York and the countries I have named in opposition to the wishes of Great Britain, they may be seized by either Great Britain or France.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not care anything about the provisions of the insurance policies. We are all agreed that ships operating in the waters of Europe are liable under certain conditions to seizure by British cruisers. But have you any information, tangible and real, that we can put our finger on and call evidence, sufficient to show that an American ship carrying goods and wares to Rio de Janeiro would need the protection of American battleships, or cruisers against possible seizures by English cruisers, or other war vessels? That is something of more importance than the contents of the insurance policies.

Mr. BENNET. I have got this, that neither the Norton Line, nor the Barber Line, in fact no line operating ships under the American flag, will take a pound of freight to any of those concerns on the British blacklist.

Mr. SAUNDERS. As to these ships flying the American flag, have they ever represented to the department in Washington that they need the protection of cruisers and battleships to protect them from seizure in Brazilian waters by belligerent cruisers, French, or English? These American shipowners may be unwilling to take goods consigned to concerns on the blacklist, for very obvious business reasons, but what I want to know is, have these people ever represented to the American Government at Washington the fact that they are afraid to carry goods into a port of Brazil by reason of apprehension of seizure by English cruisers, and that they needed American ships of war to protect them against the danger of such seizure?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, American shippers in the port of New York have made such representations to the department; they have furnished the department with the confidential blacklist that I hold in my hand.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That has nothing to do with the danger of seizure.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; it has.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Can you apprise us of any representations to the effect, that American ships carrying American goods into the ports of South America, should be placed under the protection of American warships to protect them against possible seizure by English, or other belligerent cruisers?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I have said repeatedly that no one single American ship has taken one single bale of cargo—

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish the gentleman would answer my question. I asked the gentleman this specific question: Are you aware of any American shipper, contemplating shipping American goods into the ports of any South American country, who has represented to the department at Washington that he needed the protection of American battleships, or warships of any sort, on account of the dangers of capture by foreign belligerent cruisers in the event they undertook to make that voyage?

Mr. BENNET. I am sorry to say I do not know of one single American shipowner who has had either the nerve or the patriotism to come down here to Washington and say, "If the American Government will protect me with the might of its warships, I will take the freight of anybody that demands it into South America."

Mr. SAUNDERS. Does not that indicate very clearly that the dangers you talk about, do not exist? Does not the failure to make complaint to the authorities at Washington, clearly indicate that the shipowners, do not need the battleships that you insist we need? The people of this country may lack other things, but they certainly do not lack nerve.

Mr. BENNET. No. The gentleman wants a direct answer. And I have not insisted that we need warships.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can understand, and all of us can, how a man, a shipper, whether a merchant or a manufacturer engaged in business, may be deterred by threat of loss of business from doing a thing.

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is one thing. Whether the gentleman intends by the import of his suggestions or not, he does suggest a much more serious proposition than that.

Mr. BENNET. Of course.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does the gentleman mean to suggest that if threats of blacklisting trade do not suffice to withhold trade, they would resort to the extremity of force in order to prevent Americans from trading in South America?

Mr. BENNET. I mean to say that the conclusion I draw from the acts that have gone before is that, if an American ship violated the British orders against trading with those firms on the confidential list and the British Government could not deter them by any one of the several ways that could be imagined, I have not any doubt that either a British ship or one of the allies would seize that ship and take those goods off.

Mr. ADAMSON. A blacklisted ship takes a cargo from a blacklisted firm to go to South America, and—

Mr. BENNET. No; from an American firm, not blacklisted—

Mr. ADAMSON. Any firm, and goes to South America to trade meets with two dangers. One is that the people to whom the goods are consigned will not accept them, and the other danger is that the allies will cease to trade with them. We understand that that was the extent of the blacklist.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more, so that I can finish the question I started to ask the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman would not expect an American battleship to force the people to whom the goods were consigned to take them or to force anybody to trade with them. The only thing he could apprehend that would render the protection of a battleship necessary would be the use of force by the British Government to prevent the transaction?

Mr. BENNET. Why, of course.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not true that the present administration has played in a most vacillating manner with the arbitrary interference of all the European belligerents instead of treating them with firmness?

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman and I belong to the same political party, and we make those assertions with a good deal of force. But I am very carefully dissociating this question from the questions which arise, as one might say legitimately from the European war; for, as I said a while ago, for every one of these things there is always some plausible pretext as to why we have not done differently. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] and I usually agree that the protests are merely plausible.

Mr. SAUNDERS. May I ask the gentleman just one more question?

Mr. BENNET. In just one moment. For this there is absolutely no defense whatever.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I gather from what the gentleman from New York has said that the danger to an American shipper who undertakes to ship American goods into the neutral ports of South America, of seizure by belligerent cruisers, is a very real thing. I gather further from what the gentleman says that although that danger does really exist there is no shipper in New York who has had the nerve to ask our Government for protection. Is it, then, I repeat, a fact that although these dangers are real, and not to be denied, no shipper in New York has had the nerve to approach our Government, and ask for the protection to which he is entitled.

Mr. BENNET. No shipowner. I said that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then what the gentleman thinks is necessary in this connection is that the department at Washington should advise these shipowners in New York that if they will undertake to trade with South America, and will ship their goods into South American neutral ports, our Government will furnish them with the number of cruisers, and battleships, or dreadnaughts as may be necessary. Now if the Government will do this, will these shippers, having that protection afforded, ship American products to South America? Is the assurance of this protection all that is needed to start a movement of American goods to the ports of South America?

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will now allow me two uninterrupted minutes to answer his question, I will be glad to do so. My contention is not the contention advanced by the gentleman from Virginia. My contention is that the duty lies first with the Congress. Have we abrogated all our powers? I contend that it is the plain duty of the American Congress to say to all the world, "A steamer that comes into a port on the Atlantic or the Pacific to take freight to South America, where there can be no complications, must not discriminate against American citizens." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. BENNET. I should like to answer it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I can not take the gentleman's time.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman has succeeded in doing it more or less. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia in all fairness that it is my firm belief that if the Congress will pass such a bill as I have indicated—and I have not the slightest doubt that the President would sign it—we would not have to go any further, and that the simple assertion of American rights, in a straightforward, manly way, would restore to us again what we have always heretofore enjoyed, the right to traffic in our own way and at any time we pleased. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman's apprehensions are well grounded as to the dangers to be encountered by these shipowners, if they take freight consigned to South America, then when we pass a law incarcerating them in jail if they refuse to take it, it seems to me the logical conclusion of the gentleman's remarks would be that we ought, on the other hand, to offer them a consort of a warship if they comply, in order that they may be protected in South America against the dangers that the gentleman apprehends. Is that right?

Mr. BENNET. I do not think we will ever get to that point. As a practical man I am very frank to say that it is my belief, founded on some study of history, that if with all our power and wealth, and with the impregnable right of our position, we simply assert our determination to trade with the peoples to the south of us, the mere manly, straightforward assertion of our position, backed up by a statute, will be all we will need.

Mr. ADAMSON. But the gentleman said he apprehended that if they did try to deliver freight down there to blacklisted firms, they would be seized by a cruiser. If that is so, then if we compel them under pains and penalties to accept the freight, ought we not to guard them against that danger by sending along the necessary number of cruisers and battleships?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman want any more time?

Mr. BENNET. I should like a little more time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, answering the question of the gentleman from Georgia, I think he misapprehended the exact statement that I made, something that he rarely does. My position is this: That those shipowners in New York have a right to have a reasonable apprehension, in the absence of any further statute or public declaration, that if they take American goods from an American port to South American firms, their ships may be seized; and that that apprehension is shared by the insurance companies in the city of New York is shown by the fact that they insist on stamping on their insurance policies "Free of British and allied capture."

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. If there is danger of seizure in the absence of a criminal law, how is that danger removed if the shipowner takes the goods under threat of criminal prosecution if he does not take them?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, there is such a thing as the power of governmental expression, and the public force of a right position taken by a powerful nation. No one denies our absolute right to trade with South America, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] least of all. Nobody can successfully deny in the face of the facts, that that right is to-day being interfered with. My position is that if we will assert our determination that the American manufacturer and shipper will be protected in his shipments, and, in addition, that the foreign vessels that come to our ports and the American ones as well shall cease to discriminate against Americans, we will have won our cause. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ADAMSON. I think I understand the gentleman. He means that if we enact such a law the British Government would take that law to mean that we were going to protect the fellow when we compelled him to do a thing.

Mr. BENNET. Exactly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. First, before we begin to make declarations and establish policies, we should get our facts straight. Let me see if I have a correct understanding of the facts. For instance, we will take a firm in Brazil that has been blacklisted by the English, or the French Government. Do I understand the gentleman to say that England undertakes to say to Americans that an American merchant shall not sell to, or send American goods in an American ship, to that blacklisted firm?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. And that if an American merchant undertakes to send on an American ship, American goods to that blacklisted firm in Rio Janeiro, it is liable to seizure by a British cruiser? Does the gentleman state that as a matter of fact?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, what I state is this, that if an American firm attempts to make a shipment of the kind indicated, there is not one single steamship company on the Atlantic coast that will take his shipment.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman is good at avoidance.

Mr. BENNET. This is not avoidance; this is a statement of fact.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask the gentleman this question, because I wish to get at the facts. Is it a fact that the British Government has undertaken to say to this country, that American shippers shall not transport on an American ship American goods from a port in the United States to a blacklisted firm in Rio Janeiro, and that if it does, then that ship will be subject to seizure by a British cruiser? Is there extant any such declaration of attitude on the part of Great Britain?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, one of the vices of the situation is that this black list, so far as it applies to these South American countries, is not even published by the British Government, and that the British Government, of course, has not attempted to say what means it will use to enforce its orders. It has simply given its orders and the American Nation has obeyed them.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Can the gentleman put his finger on these orders? I have never seen any orders to the effect alleged. As I understand, the English Government has undertaken to say to its people, and I do not undertake to say that it has not the right to so say—something that if we were in the same situation I imagine the United States would say—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand the British Government does undertake to say to its people that there are firms whose peculiar activities are destructive of the interests of the British Empire, in its present time of stress and danger, and that its people are called upon not to deal with these firms. But I want to know if the gentleman can put his finger on any declaration of the British Government which either expressly says, or would be understood by any reasonable man to say, to any American shipper that if he ships goods from an American port on an American vessel to a blacklisted firm in neutral South America, such a ship will be liable to seizure by the British Government. If the gentleman can put such a statement of fact in the Record I would be very glad to see it.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is one of the ablest men in the House. He knows very well that if the Government of Great Britain had issued any written declaration like that it would have been equivalent to a declaration of war. In international dealings sometimes you have to ascertain the orders that have been given by the results that have been reached. We are not dealing with an academic question; we are dealing with a real question, and I have given the House the names of the shipping firms in New York, and I will give them again, to which men have gone in the attempt to ship goods to men whose names are on this black list. They are the Houston Line, the Prince Line, the Lamport & Holt Line, the Norton Line, and Funch, Edye & Co. Those are the leading lines out of New York City. The Norton Line is an American line and Funch, Edye & Co. is an American company. I say to the gentleman from Virginia, as a reasonable man, that when you find a continuous course of conduct leading always to the same end, you do not have to have the written order.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. The obligation and use of the boycott goes away back in history. I think I remember reading where Thomas Jefferson was brought up for buying a pair of stockings in England once under the boycott orders that had been issued. Does the gentleman from New York mean for me and other people to understand that Great Britain has by some method so overawed the steamship companies here that they refuse to carry the ordinary commerce between our ports and South American ports?

Mr. BENNET. I do, and I will propose an experiment to any Member of this House. This list to the Argentine and Brazil is a private list.

If any Member wants to try an experiment, I will let him look at the list. He can pick out a name unknown to me. He can pick out anybody in the city of New York, or any other city on the Atlantic coast, and let him try to ship American goods by any line to the name that he picks out.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. This is a very interesting inquiry, if only by pursuing it we can secure the facts. Do I understand the gentleman further to say—and in this connection I have not heard all that has passed, I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's speech—do I understand from what I have heard that the gentleman states that a British ship sailing from an American port to a neutral port of South America under British orders will not carry goods to the blacklisted firms of South America?

Mr. BENNET. I do say that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Does the gentleman think such an order is beyond the powers of the British Government? In effect the British Government says to its own people: There are certain concerns who are directly giving aid, and comfort to our enemy, and thereby affecting to our prejudice the course of the war in which we are engaged, and upon whose outcome our existence may depend. As loyal citizens of our Empire, we ask you not to trade with these concerns. Does the gentleman think if governments engaged in war, as the European countries are, should issue orders to the above effect to its own shippers, and its own ship owners, this Government would have the right to regard the same as a declaration of war? Would that be a reasonable, or natural course for this Government to take in such a situation?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, if I could enact the legislation of the United States and a situation existed such as the gentleman described, I would say to all these nations abroad that the United States was an independent nation and that we had an undoubted right to ship our own goods to any firm in South America—

Mr. SAUNDERS. I assume we agree upon that point.

Mr. BENNET. I would like to answer the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I did not intend to interrupt. I simply wished to say that we agreed in the latter statement of principle.

Mr. BENNET. But I did not want the gentleman to agree to it. I will commence over again.

Mr. SAUNDERS. No; go ahead.

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will allow me to answer—

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly; go ahead, I did not mean to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET. I know the gentleman did not; he is very courteous. I mean to say this, that if I could enact the legislation for this House, and there was a steamship of any foreign country coming into our port, enjoying our hospitality, if that steamship company said in an American port, "You can not ship American products to a firm in South America." I would say to that steamship company, "If Americans can not ship American goods to anybody they pleased in South America, then you can not come into our ports."

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is a very different claim.

Mr. BENNET. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am not prepared to say whether I dissent from the course suggested.

Mr. BENNET. I think the gentleman would agree.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I agree to all the gentleman says about our undoubted right to trade with the South American concerns, whether blacklisted, or not, and to use our ships to trade with these concerns, but the proposition I put to the gentleman was that if a foreign government should undertake to say to its own shipowners, "You shall not transport American goods to the blacklisted firms," would such an order call for the exercise of force on our part. We might very well consider whether we would allow foreign ships operating under such orders, to enter our ports, but that is an entirely different proposition, and one that has nothing to do with undertaking to use battleships to compel English freighters to carry American goods to blacklisted consignees at neutral ports. That is a very different proposition. But I am prepared to use our warships to protect our merchant ships against illegal seizure.

Mr. BENNET. I am glad that at last the gentleman apparently agrees with me fully.

Mr. SAUNDERS. When I came in, a good deal was being said about the use of battleships in order to enable us to trade with South American ports.

Mr. BENNET. I just want to say this.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes additional.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I had about concluded. There is no substantial disagreement with the position I have taken on the part of any man in the House. No American dares dissent from the position I have taken—that an American citizen has an absolute right to ship American products to a South American port, the dissent of any other nation notwithstanding. That is the proposition that is before the House.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the gentleman will just pardon me for a moment.

Mr. BENNET. Just for a question.

Mr. SAUNDERS. No country in the world challenges the right of American shippers to ship American goods in American bottoms to any consignee, blacklisted, or not, in any neutral port in the world.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman let me answer the question of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BENNET. No; I will answer him. I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that under the orders of the British Government, philosophy aside, it is an absolute physical and commercial impossibility to ship one single American plow from any port on the Atlantic coast to any blacklisted firm on the list I have. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Does not that grow out of the apprehension of loss of business, and not out of the apprehension of the use of force? I think we have pretty well dissipated the latter idea as we have gone along. Has not the apprehension of these shippers been on the ground that by dealing with blacklisted concerns they might lose the profitable use of foreign ships, and if they lost this use, they had not sufficient American ships to transport their goods? It is unfortunately the fact that as result of lack of adequate legislation during the past 50 years, we are suffering from a great lack of American merchant ships.

Mr. TOWNER. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Virginia this question: He is talking about American ships. The question is not now whether American ships ought or ought not to have that right. They would not exercise such a discrimination. But the question is now, Ought any English ship that has the right to clear from our ports discriminate against American shippers for any other reason than has been assigned in these cases?

Mr. SAUNDERS. If you put that question to me, I would say that this country might well suggest to Great Britain as a business proposition two could play at the game she had started. But this would be purely a trade war. The situation would not call for battleships, or angry armed controversy. We may very well take up with Great Britain whether as a business proposition we will allow English ships to enter our ports, and refuse to take American goods to blacklisted firms in South America. But the question is a large one, and with much to be said on both sides.

Mr. BENNET. I am not very much concerned in angry armed controversies. I have the feeling as an American that if we will simply assert our American rights and pass the necessary statutes in an American Congress, of which we are all American Members, and say to the world that if an American wants to ship American goods from an American port to South America he will get every necessary protection, every necessary facility, every necessary Government assistance, we will have accomplished the object, for my study of history leads me to the conclusion that when a nation of 110,000,000 people, with right on its side, takes a stand like that the mere forceful assertion of the right will carry with it a victory in the bloodless contest. [Applause.]

THE NATIONAL GUARD (H. DOC. NO. 1321).

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to House resolution No. 323, inquiring about the National Guard, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered printed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the Army bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the Army bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a letter from Louis E. Rowley, of Lansing, Mich.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing a letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from Louis E. Rowley, of Lansing, Mich.

Mr. KITCHIN. On what subject?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is politics.

Mr. KITCHIN. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of John Ericsson.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of John Ericsson. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in reference to a bill providing for the erection of a monument to John Ericsson.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of a monument to John Ericsson. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent on behalf of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who spoke this morning, to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. He forgot to do it this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] be permitted to extend and revise his remarks, which he delivered this morning, in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TRADE BOYCOTTS.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, having gotten into an informal colloquy with the gentleman from New York over an interesting subject-matter, I desire to add a few words to what I have already said. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] concludes his remarks by saying that if we would assert American rights we would get them, and the incident would be closed. That is one of a class of declarations that do not get us anywhere. It is like the declaration of a certain other gentleman made a few days ago, to the effect that he stood for undiluted Americanism. We all do. We are all for America first; we are all for American rights. Still that does not get us anywhere, in respect to stating a definite policy. It is an indefinite abstraction. The public wants a statement in plain terms, defining those rights and stating the facts in relation to any suggested invasion of the same. When this is done, the country will be ready for the next step proper to be taken.

If I got the facts correctly from the gentleman from New York, in the course of our colloquy, there are some American merchants in New York who are afraid to trade with South America on the ground that their ships are liable to capture by British, or other cruisers. If there is such a situation, the facts as to the same ought to be fully developed. If there is a single American shipowner, or American capitalist who is afraid to ship American goods on American ships to blacklisted firms, at neutral ports lest those ships, and goods be captured by belligerent cruisers, we ought to be apprised of that fact, in some definite and official fashion. Certainly I am not apprised that such a situation exists in this country.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] did not say the shipowners were afraid to ship their goods to those foreign countries, but he says they could not ship because the shipping companies would not make good.

Mr. SAUNDERS. As I recall the incident, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] intervened to state that we needed battleships for the protection of our ships trading with blacklisted firms at neutral ports. I gathered from what the gentleman intimated, that we needed American warships for the protection of American commerce in the above situation. I appeal to the RECORD for confirmation of my recollection.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman did not hear me. That is all.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then what did the gentleman say?

Mr. BRITTEN. I did say this, that the present administration is playing in a most vacillating manner with the insolence of all the belligerents of Europe, instead of dealing with them firmly. That is what I said, instead of saying anything about battleships.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman certainly called attention to the necessity of warships in connection with the situation presented in the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Virginia ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] what kind of dealing would be "firm" dealing? That would not get us anywhere, either.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, that is another one of those "undiluted" American generalities. It does not mean anything.

Mr. BRITTEN. I did not hear what the "Amen" gentleman said, but in the early part of this colloquy it was the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] who referred to the question of battleships.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, anyway, this is all irrelevant. The gentleman from Illinois as I understood him made the suggestion, in connection with the remarks of the gentleman from New York, that an armed force was needed for the protection of American shippers trading with black-listed firms at neutral ports. But I accept of course the gentleman's statement of what he said, and will proceed.

Proceeding then, Mr. Speaker, if it is a fact as intimated by the gentleman from New York, that there is such a danger as that, or the threat of such a danger, we ought to be apprised of it, and ought to deal with it. But I deny that such a danger exists, or that the apprehension of such a danger on the part of any American shipper may be found, in New York or anywhere else.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will try the experiment that I suggested, he will find that he can not ship a bale of goods to any one of those black-listed concerns in an American ship.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, the gentleman's facts may be all right, but he does not draw the proper conclusion. As soon as I draw the conclusion from your remarks that a cruiser or battleship is necessary, you protest, and then you undertake to establish by the arguments you put in the RECORD that the danger of capture is real. If such a danger does exist, as a matter of fact, then I agree that this country should provide the battleships necessary to convoy these merchant ships, and secure them against danger. I have no doubt that the American shippers do not care to do business with these black-listed concerns; for fear of loss of other business. But that is a very different proposition from undertaking to say that they are afraid to make shipments, lest the American ships carrying these shipments, should be captured by belligerent cruisers, unless accompanied by American warships.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks the British Government ought to be allowed to pursue a course of conduct in America that will prevent American shippers and American business men from taking American goods to customers in South America?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That has nothing to do with the situation. What I am trying to develop is whether there has been any lack of action along the line of affording necessary armed protection by this Government, whether the failure of the New York merchants to trade with South America has been due to a lack of armed protection to which they were entitled, but which was not afforded.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask for five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, answering the question of the gentleman, I said very frankly that, so far as I knew, no American shipowner had the nerve or the courage to ask for armed protection. Therefore, as a practical matter, that can not be tested until it is asked.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let us see what that means. What nerve or courage did it require on the part of New York shipowners to ask for protection, if the need of that protection existed? It seems to me that you pay but a poor compliment to your New York concerns when you suggest that they are afraid to ask for the protection of this Government.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I regard myself as a Representative in the American Congress for the whole country, not particularly for New York; and when a question arises as to whether the rights of Americans are being denied by British interference, I am perfectly willing to include the interests of other ports as well as those of the port of New York.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am perfectly willing to include the merchants all along the Atlantic coast, including those of Norfolk in my own State. I repeat that you pay but a poor compliment to those people when you say that they have not had the nerve to come to the United States Government, and ask for the protection to which they were entitled against such a danger as you intimate exists.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. In rising as I did a moment ago it was not my purpose to suggest compliments but to state facts.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes. That is what I want to get at. I will ask the gentleman in this connection, what nerve or courage did it require on the part of these American merchants to ask for the protection to which they were entitled, and which you say they are afraid to ask? Why did it call for nerve, or courage to make that request?

Mr. BENNET. Whatever nerve or courage it requires, they have not exercised it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But why does it require nerve and courage for a citizen to approach his Government, and say, "I am confronted with a situation in which I am afraid to trade with merchants in the neutral ports of South America, lest my ships be captured by belligerent cruisers, and I demand protection."

Mr. BENNET. Not being in that position, I can not answer the gentleman's question. But it all goes back to the basic matter to which I referred, whether the gentleman from Virginia can disagree with me at all or anybody else; that they ought not to be permitted to continue a course of dealing—call it by any name you please—by which an American shipowner even ought to have an incentive to appeal to his own Government for protection when undertaking to transport American goods from an American port to the customer of an American firm.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SLAYDEN. May I ask a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understood from the statement made a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Virginia that these were British ships, trading from American ports to ports in South and Central America. Now, the gentleman says they are both British and American ships.

Mr. SAUNDERS. They are ships of both sorts, trading with South America.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They do not say such a thing as that to an American shipowner, do they?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I can not find out that they have said it to any shipowner. I am trying to develop whether such is the fact. The gentleman from New York suggests that there are some of our shipowners who lack the nerve to come to their own Government and ask for protection against certain suggested dangers; but I am trying to ascertain whether we have ever been threatened with these dangers by any of the belligerent powers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it not more important to ascertain whether these things have been said to an American shipowner or whether they have been said to a British shipowner?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; but it is important to find out what has actually been said, and whether any real danger exists. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to say that it is an open question with me whether or not a country at war is not justified in saying to its own citizens, and its own shipowners that they shall not trade with others who are affording direct aid and comfort to the enemy of the mother country of those citizens, and shipowners. I am much inclined to think that upon the same state of facts the United States would not have much hesitation in saying to its own people and particularly to the owners of American ships, "You must not lend your aid and comfort, in way of reciprocal commerce and trade, to the immediate enemies of your country."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, one of my constituents, Cornelius A. Davis, of Somerset, Mass., owns the schooner Clara Davis, which was put on the black list by the British Government. He addressed a letter to me and asked me to confer with the State Department about the proposition, which I did some three or four weeks ago. I allowed them to take all the time they wanted, and after consideration of the matter Capt. Cornelius A. Davis wrote me that he had been advised by his New York representative to correspond directly with the British ambassador at Washington, which I suppose he did. I regarded the whole matter satisfactorily settled, and that this American vessel, owned by an American shipowner of good standing, a mariner of more than 40 years on the sea, was at liberty to take his vessel where he pleased; but I have just learned from a published statement that the Clara Davis, owned by Capt. Cornelius A. Davis, of Somerset, Mass., in my district, is still upon the British black list. Why she should be put there Capt. Davis does not know and I do not know. I have not heard anything further from our Secretary of State or the State Department, and I do not suppose they know.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts correctly? I understood him to say that our State Department requested Capt. Davis to communicate directly with the British ambassador?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. He was advised to communicate directly with the British ambassador, which he did. I have not heard from him since, but I noticed in the papers yesterday that the Clara Davis is still on the British black list.

Mr. STEENERSON. What is the effect of that?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. She can not do any business.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did Capt. Davis ask the ambassador plainly why his ship was on the black list?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I can not tell you. I have not had any correspondence with him since. I supposed it was all settled.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I supposed that the gentleman had received that information—that the vessel was still on the black list—from Capt. Davis himself, and that he had been told why.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I saw the statement yesterday that the vessel is still on the black list. I shall be glad to send a telegram to Capt. Davis and ask him about the present situation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did the gentleman get this information from Capt. Davis or from a newspaper?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The first information which I received was from Capt. Davis.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Not the first information, but the last.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The last information was from the newspapers, that the schooner Clara Davis is still on the British black list.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman state what were the reasons given?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That some goods shipped from an American port, I think, to one of the West Indian Islands, and they claimed that those goods, which were shipped on the schooner Clara Davis, an American vessel, without any knowledge on the part of the owner that they were going anywhere else, had been used by some enemy Government to the detriment of the British Government. I asked for an investigation by the department to find out what the trouble was.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not true that no American shipper can ship anything out of the United States to any South American port or any other neutral port without first getting a permit viséed by the British Embassy in Washington?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do not know about that.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is true.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I will tell him how I got the information. A concern in my district manufacturing shoe polish and shoe brushes wanted to send a consignment to Norway in a Norwegian ship, a neutral ship and a neutral country, from New York.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not contraband goods?

Mr. BRITTEN. No. They made a request through a forwarding agency in New York. The forwarding agency sent them a letter advising that they should apply directly to the British Embassy for a shipping permit and return the permit from Chicago to them in order that they might present it to the shipping company in New York. The manufacturer of shoe polish, the American Shoe Polish Co., in Chicago, sent me this correspondence. I sent it to the British Embassy with a request for a visé or a permit in order that this concern might ship to Norway. They retained my letter and did not answer it at all. Six or seven weeks thereafter they sent a visé or permit direct to the American Shoe Polish Co. The company in turn sent it to the forwarding agency and that agency took it to the shipping company, a neutral company, and finally got the stuff off months after it was ordered. In the meantime I wrote the British Embassy and called attention to my letter, a carbon copy of which I inclosed, and told them they had not answered it, and I supposed this company in Chicago was still waiting for their permit. The British Embassy replied and said that they had replied direct to the American Shoe Polish Co., and that was all the satisfaction that I could get.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman's first statement was that an American concern could not ship to South America without the consent of the British Government, and then he tells us about a Norway shipment.

Mr. BRITTEN. I was citing a definite case. It also applies to South America. No shipping company will take a shipment to South America unless you have your shipment viséed by the British Embassy in the city of Washington, D. C., and our administration knows that is going on every day out of the week and every week in the month. [Applause on the Republican side.] There has been no secret about that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman know that to be true?

Mr. BRITTEN. I know that to be a fact. There is no secret about it. Our State Department knows it; our President knows it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman's first statement was that they could not ship to South America.

Mr. BRITTEN. And I am repeating my first statement that we can not ship to South America without getting the permit viséed by the British Embassy in Washington, D. C.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And the gentleman showed they had to have a permit to go to Norway.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am merely calling attention to one shipment with which I am familiar, and which went to Norway.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's first statement was that this Chicago concern could not ship shoe polish to Norway, which is, one might say, within the war zone, where the conditions of shipment are very different from what they are to South America.

Mr. BRITTEN. Norway in the war zone?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Oh, practically.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman knows that Norway is not in the war zone, and that Norway is a neutral country.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I know, but it is bordering on those waters up there that make it practically a part of the war zone.

Mr. HELGESEN. And shoe polish might be dangerous.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is a matter of indifference. The gentleman's original statement was that an American shipper could not send goods to South America without the permit of the English Government, and then he proved it by showing that goods were not permitted to be sent to a neutral country bordering on the war zone, if that suits better, without the visé of the British Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] called attention to the fact that you could not ship from the United States in an American ship to the West Indies without a British visé?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman refers to the Capt. Cornelius Davis matter?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes. What is the difference between that and South America in principle?

Mr. SLAYDEN. None in principle. I admit that; but the gentleman from Massachusetts admitted finally that his information was based on a newspaper publication.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He has a letter from the captain.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The latter part, he said, of his information came from a newspaper. He answered that frankly.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I answered frankly that the last information came from a newspaper.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Was the shipment to the British West Indies?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I think so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is quite a different matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, before I make the motion to adjourn I wish to announce that on Tuesday next, August 15, 1916, we will take up for consideration the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman ought to state that on that occasion there will probably be a roll call on a motion to concur in the Senate amendment respecting the building program?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is true.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina announces that on Tuesday next there will be taken up for consideration the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and there will probably be roll calls upon that day.

Mr. KITCHIN. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. PADGETT] will make a motion to concur in the building program, as inserted in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. And there will undoubtedly be roll calls upon that day.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 9, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting response to certain inquiries contained in House resolution 323 (H. Doc. No. 1321), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6748) providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1096), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6116) providing for the taxation of the lands of the Winnebago Indians and the Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1098), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KONOP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5427) referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1097), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 17350) to promote export trade, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PAIGE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 17351) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue certain magazine rifles; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COX: Resolution (H. Res. 343) requesting the Secretary of State to furnish to the House of Representatives information in regard to Jacob Hoffman; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) proposing to amend section 2971 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRITT: A bill (H. R. 17352) granting a pension to Cicero F. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17353) granting a pension to Julius Scheuer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 17354) granting an increase of pension to William Strobe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 17355) granting a pension to Jessie G. Frier; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 17356) granting a pension to Elamarette Eldredge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 17357) granting an increase of pension to John Keefe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17358) granting a pension to Arthur Paten; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 17359) granting a pension to Robert L. Crook, jr.; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORTH: A bill (H. R. 17360) granting a pension to Harriet Alexander; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIORDAN: A bill (H. R. 17361) for the relief of William H. Sullivan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 17362) granting an increase of pension to John C. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHOUSE: A bill (H. R. 17363) granting a pension to Elizabeth Noland; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Florida: A bill (H. R. 17364) for the relief of H. W. Reddick; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17365) granting a pension to Fred D. Abbott; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAREW: Petition of New York Produce Exchange, favoring adequate American merchant marine; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Memorial of National Association of Credit Men, favoring a national bankruptcy act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, favoring repeal of the law purporting to Federalize the National Guard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 9, 1916.

(Legislative day of Saturday, August 5, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Overman	Sterling
Brandegge	Gronna	Penrose	Stone
Bryan	Harding	Ransdell	Swanson
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Reed	Taggart
Clapp	Jones	Robinson	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Kenyon	Shafroth	Tillman
Cole	Kern	Sheppard	Vardaman
Culberson	Lane	Simmons	Wadsworth
Curtis	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Dillingham	Norris	Smith, S. C.	Works
Fletcher	Oliver	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. WEEKS answered to his name when called.

Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

After a little delay Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. HARDWICK entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. PENROSE (at 10 o'clock and 20 minutes a. m.). Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold my vote, as I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, but I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARDING. In the absence of my general pair, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. As that Senator did not vote, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, has the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. STONE. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to my colleague [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is necessarily detained from the Senate on important business.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 34, as follows:

Cummins	Gallinger	Jones	Smoot
Curtis
		YEAS—5.
		NAYS—34.
Ashurst	Clapp	Hardwick	Lane
Bankhead	Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers
Bryan	Dillingham	Kenyon	Nelson
Chamberlain	Fletcher	Kern	Oliver

Overman
Penrose
Pittman
Ransdell
Robinson

Shafroth
Sheppard
Simmons
Smith, Ga.
Smith, S. C.

Stone
Taggart Thompson
Tillman Townsend

Vardaman
Williams
Works

NOT VOTING—56.

Beckham
Borah
Brady
Brandegee
Broussard
Catron
Chilton
Clark, Wyo.
Clarke, Ark.
Colt du Pont
Fall
Goff
Gore

Gronna
Harding
Hitchcock
Hollis
Hughes
Husting
James
Johnson, Me.
La Follette
Lea, Tenn.
Lee, Md.
Lewis
Lippitt Lodge

McCumber
McLean
Martin, Va.
Martine, N. J.
Newlands
Norris
O'Gorman
Page
Phelan
Poindexter
Pomerene
Reed
Saulsbury

Sherman
Shields
Smith, Ariz.
Smith, Md.
Smith, Mich.
Sterling
Sutherland
Swanson
Thomas
Underwood
Wadsworth
Walsh
Warren
Weeks

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, are there not a number of Senators present who did not vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote which has just been taken was on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SIMMONS. I again suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has not adjourned, and the order directing the attendance of a quorum is still in force and effect for the Sergeant at Arms to carry out the instructions of the Senate.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. MYERS and Mr. PITTMAN, who answered "Present."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. If it be true that while an order of the Senate requiring the Sergeant at Arms to notify absent Senators to attend so as to make a quorum is pending, a motion to adjourn is made, as has been done in this instance, and it is disclosed that a quorum of the Senate is present, is it not entirely proper in such circumstances to move that the order to the Sergeant at Arms be vacated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call on the motion to adjourn did not disclose the presence of a quorum. The presence of a quorum has now been disclosed. Forty-nine Senators having answered to the roll call, a quorum is present.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15455) to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there has been a sudden and rapid growth of sentiment in this country in favor of what is usually characterized by the term "preparedness." That outburst of sentiment has not been the result of any panic or hysteria on the part of our people. We are just as sober-minded and just as sure of ourselves and our strength as ever. The war has not in any way shaken our confidence or unsteadied our nerves; but, Mr. President, as a result of the events of the last two years, we have gained a new and a broader viewpoint and a clearer vision and perception with respect to ourselves and our relations to the other nations of the world, and we see now clearly where we before saw only obscurely; and this clearer vision has brought within our horoscope dangers we had not before seen and of our pitiable unreadiness to meet and to combat those dangers.

The new dangers and responsibilities which have been thrust upon us by reason of our advent into the family of world powers and by reason of the events that are transpiring across the water, bringing about a general world disturbance, are not dangers which formerly menaced us. They are not dangers of the eighteenth or nineteenth century; they are largely dangers and responsibilities of the twentieth century. They are dangers which affect us territorially and commercially and industrially.

In the past we have safely relied upon our greatness in population, in wealth, and in natural resources as our sure bulwark against outside attack. We have felt in the past that we were so powerful and so rich that no nation dare attack us. We have relied upon this; but we have relied possibly more upon our geographical isolation as a sure protection against outside attack. We have felt that the vast stretch of waters that separates us from the great military and naval nations of the world was a sure protection to us against aggressions or attacks from any of those great powers.

We have now learned that our great prosperity, our great population, our great wealth, while, of course, they afford us some protection at the same time tend to invite attack, at the same time serve as a temptation and a lure to encourage aggression and attack from the outside; or if they do not invite attack they at least expose us to the constant danger of international complications and controversies, in themselves pregnant with all sorts of dangers.

We have learned that the seas which separate us by thousands of miles from Europe and Asia do not now, as formerly, afford security against aggression, invasion, or attack. We now see clearly that modern discoveries, inventions, and science have overcome the difficulties which made them in former times a safe barrier of protection. We now realize how close, from a military standpoint, we are to Europe, and that the broad expanse of water which separates us is no longer an obstruction, but a great highway furnishing a thousand tracks for the concentration and mobilization of armies and navies and of all the paraphernalia of war upon our coasts.

With the facilities afforded in these modern times for sea transportation, the 3,000 miles which separate us from Europe can be spanned almost as quickly as the 3,000 miles that separate the Atlantic seaboard from the other coast of this country. When we consider some of these great leviathans of the sea that are now being constructed, such as the Bismarck, now being built in Germany, with a capacity of 56,000 tons, with a carrying capacity greater than a thousand freight cars, with a speed equal to that of the ordinary freight train, and not far behind that of the ordinary passenger train, it is easy to realize that mobilization of armies and of supplies and of all the other implements and accessories of war can be accomplished almost as expeditiously on sea as on land.

Mr. President, a full realization of this situation and of these dangers has aroused the public mind in this country and crystallized public sentiment in favor of such a thoroughgoing preparedness as will safeguard us against the dangers of the present and the contingencies of the future.

Congress has liberally responded to the demand for military preparedness. Congress has liberally responded to the national demand for naval preparedness also. In the course of the debate upon that measure I was gratified to hear the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, declare his satisfaction with the provision made for naval preparedness.

I assume he voiced the sentiment of the other side of the Chamber, and that we are agreed without reference to party, as the people are agreed outside of this Chamber, upon the proposition that we have done as much as the circumstances will permit and as much as the circumstances now seem to require toward providing ample protection against the dangers as we now see them, so far as it can be done through the Navy.

So much, President, so good; but to stop here would leave the program incomplete, and our vast scheme of military and naval preparedness would be ineffective. It is an axiom, I think, accepted in all countries where they have navies and military establishments that fighting ships, like armies, can not carry their supplies of food or munitions with them. The supplies must be brought to them, and without adequate facilities for this purpose they are helpless. The railroad connects the army with its base of supplies. Naval auxiliaries connect the navy with its base of supplies. A navy can no more carry its supplies of food or its supplies of ammunition or of fuel along with it than an army can carry like necessities along with it; and an auxiliary navy, a well-balanced auxiliary navy, an auxiliary navy capable of adequately supplying the navy in case of war as well as in case of peace, is just as necessary to the navy, if it is to be an effective war machine, as the railroad and the other land facilities of transportation are necessary to connect the army with its base of supplies. Without this connection the navy would be just as helpless in action as it would be if it had no guns or as it would be if it had no munitions to supply its guns.

The same thing is largely true in respect to the Army in certain conditions. The Army in certain conditions is utterly useless, utterly helpless to serve the purposes of the Nation, without adequate transport service.

We had a lesson in that matter during the Spanish-American War which makes it unnecessary to elaborate this proposition. It is only necessary to refer to that occasion. We had our military forces upon our coast ready and anxious to meet the enemy in Cuba, and yet our whole program had to halt, our soldiers had to remain idle in an insalubrious climate and with insanitary surroundings, until we could go out into the open market and draw from the meager supply of our merchant marine such vessels as we could get at any price which selfishness saw fit to impose; but until we got them our Army could not move.

At present, Mr. President, we have practically no naval auxiliary fleet, certainly none worthy of the name; not enough to serve our purpose, even in time of peace, surely not enough to supply the requirements of our Navy or of our Army in time of war. We have only 53—I think I am accurate—so-called auxiliary naval vessels. Only 24 of those are of modern construction. The other 29 are old vessels, the average age of them all being 25 years, none of them built for the purpose for which they are now being used, none of them built with reference to their conversion into auxiliaries, and most of the modern vessels, as well as the old ones, largely unsuited for these purposes.

But, Mr. President, we are managing to get along, and probably could manage to get along, with this junk fleet in time of peace; but what about the requirement in this respect of our Navy as it exists in time of war?

I do not myself, of course, profess to know the facts with reference to this matter further than I get them from official sources. I have here the reply of Admiral Benson, written as Acting Secretary of the Navy, to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, in response to an inquiry made of the Secretary of the Navy in these words:

Considering our Navy as it is to-day, and having reference to its maximum usefulness and efficiency in time of war, what number of merchant vessels, and of what total tonnage, would be required?

To that letter Admiral Benson replied:

There would be required 400 merchant vessels for auxiliaries, with a total of 1,172,000 gross tonnage. In addition to the above, a number of small vessels would be required.

Here we have the statement of the Navy Department that in the present condition of the Navy—making no allowance whatever for its enlargement as proposed in the legislation of this session—that in time of war upon a basis of maximum efficiency it will require, in addition to the vessels we already have, 400 vessels, of a total of over 1,000,000 tonnage.

Now, in case of emergency, in case we are forced to defend our shores against foreign assault—for I assume we are not likely to engage in an aggressive war—in case of attack upon us or in any case where we find it necessary to employ our Navy in armed conflict with another power, we will have to have these vessels quickly. If we are to get efficient and suitable vessels there must be some prearrangement with reference to their construction. Otherwise we would not likely find in our merchant marine many vessels of the requisite speed and construction. But, Mr. President, assuming that we had such vessels in our merchant marine, how would we get them into our possession? Only in the way that we supplied our wants in this respect in the Spanish-American War—by going into the open market, buying what we could get, and paying such prices as were demanded.

Of course, Mr. President, our merchant marine is in a much better fix now to supply us with a better class of vessels than we got then. As a result of the liberal legislation of this Congress, exemplified in part in what is known as the ship-registry act, a considerable number of vessels have been brought under American registry. Most of those vessels, however, are vessels that were constructed for special uses, owned largely by the Standard Oil Co. as tankers, owned largely by the United Fruit Co. and adapted especially to that trade, owned by the steel companies and by the coal companies. Most of them were vessels of American ownership before the war but under foreign registry. That is not true of all of them, but most of them that have transferred to our flag under that act are of the character I have described.

Whether they are going to remain permanently under our flag or not is a very pertinent and relevant inquiry in connection with the matter I am now talking about. It is easy to see that it was to their interest, in the conditions which have existed in the last two years, to get from under the foreign flag and come under our flag. Whether they will stay under it after the war is very problematical. In fact, some of the witnesses who came before the Committee on Commerce said the probabilities were that they would not remain under the flag after the war. I do not know how that will be, but I hope they will, although I think very few of them are suitable for the purpose of naval auxiliaries.

Again, Mr. President, undoubtedly there is building now quite a number of ships of commerce in our shipyards. They will add somewhat to our merchant marine. I assume they will probably remain permanently in our merchant marine.

These two sources undoubtedly would give us a broader market from which to draw our naval auxiliary. But the conditions upon which we would acquire them and the question of their suitability for the purpose would be the same in this case as in the case of our purchase of vessels during the Spanish-American War.

But, even with these additions and with other prospective additions, at best, for years to come the woeful inadequacy of our merchant marine should appeal to us against the adoption of a policy which would require us in case of war to draw from our commerce, either domestic or foreign, a million and a half or two million tons of shipping. We could not do it without great injury to our commerce.

These facts seem to me to appeal most powerfully in favor of this legislation—

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me I would wish very much that the line of my thought may not be interrupted.

Mr. CUMMINS. The question I am about to ask will not interrupt the thought of the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINS. What will be the aggregate tonnage of the ships that can probably be secured under this bill? I ask purely for information.

Mr. SIMMONS. There are different estimates with respect to that. It would be impossible to answer the Senator with accuracy, but it has been estimated by the department at, I think, about 500,000 tons. There have been some estimates, I think, of 400,000 tons and some at 600,000. I think 500,000 to 600,000 tons about correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would not go very far then toward the complete preparedness of which the Senator is speaking.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the amount appropriated by this bill would not supply all the auxiliaries we would need in case of a great war taxing the utmost strength of the Navy. But under the bill, if a vessel is constructed by the board and sold the money received could be used to build other vessels, and in this way the fleet can be constantly increased. It would be a good start. We must have a beginning to everything. In case of a great war with a great power or with a combination of powers—a war which we might conjure up in our minds as a bare and remote possibility—would need many more auxiliaries, but I am persuaded that, having in view the uses we are likely to have for our Navy in the near future, the provision made in this bill, while not altogether adequate, would reasonably supply the probable demand.

Mr. President, the question has been raised as to whether the primary object of this legislation is the construction of vessels for naval auxiliaries or of merchant vessels. I think that question is irrelevant and immaterial. We are constructing them for both purposes. One has no primacy over the other, either in the circumstances which suggest this legislation or the necessities of the situation. We need them both for naval and military purposes and for commercial purposes. We need them equally badly in each case, and when constructed they will be suitable and adapted to both purposes.

Now, Mr. President, I am through with that part of this subject. We have made pretty good progress in our preparedness program upon land. We have not only provided for bringing our Military Establishment up to a fairly high standard, but we have made a good beginning, looking to the organization and mobilization of our industries for purposes of defense in case of trouble and emergency. We have passed some important legislation with a view to making industries and the Government absolutely independent of other countries in time of war, notably the Government armor-plant and the nitrate-plant bills. We have made progress toward a condition of readiness upon the land for possible eventualities and contingencies.

But, Mr. President, when we come to the sea we have utterly neglected the commercial interests of the Government and of the people upon the sea. For 50 years, as we all know, we have been absolutely dependent—I use the word “absolutely” advisedly because it is descriptive of the actual condition that has existed—for 50 years we have been absolutely dependent upon foreign Governments, chiefly our competitors in foreign trade, for our deep-sea transportation. The greatest, the richest, the most prosperous Nation upon the earth, with the greatest foreign trade of any nation upon the earth, with a foreign trade this year of $6,500,000,000—we are to-day, and we have been for 50 years, dependent for our over-sea transportation upon our foreign competitors, and have had to go to them to buy our transportation, not only to their markets, where they sell it to us upon fairly equal and fair terms, because they need what we have to sell to them, and want to sell to us what we are willing to buy from them, but we have to go to them for transportation to the neutral markets—the open markets of the world, as well. That has been the case for 50 years. We have practically no transportation of our own worth speaking about to South America or to Central America, and practically none to the countries of the Orient. We must buy our transportation to those countries from the very men who compete with us in those markets. We must buy it as we have had to do and have done on terms of inequality, upon terms which have made successful competition on our part in those markets impossible.

That is the reason, Mr. President, that we have had such a small share of the trade of our neighbors to the south of us. Our competitors, Germany and France and Great Britain, from whom we buy transportation, supplied, as they are, with magnificent regular lines of steamers running on regular schedules, with preferential rates as compared with ours, having by the very process of discrimination, by the very fact of our dependence upon them for our transportation, practically closed those markets to us.

When the war closes, Mr. President, will we be in any better condition? Notwithstanding the scarcity of tonnage, by paying enormous rates, and by utilizing a part of our coastwise vessels we have been able to get our products into South and Central America, and by reason of the fact that our competitors were in a condition that they could not supply the wants of those people, and in a condition that they could not purchase what those people had to sell, we have of late enormously increased our trade with these countries. If you will take the statistics you will find that the best, the largest, and the most satisfactory increases in our trade, outside of what we call the war orders that have gone to Europe, have come from South and Central America, from the islands near us, and from the Orient.

If when the war closes we are without adequate facilities to handle our own commerce; if we are without a supply of ships, as we were at the beginning of the war, what is likely to happen to us? Why, it is clear that when the war closes, finding that while they were engaged in their war we had captured a large part of the trade which they had theretofore enjoyed with these people, is there any doubt in the mind of any man who takes forethought that in their zeal to recapture what they have lost they will tighten the adverse conditions upon which they will furnish us this transportation, and will just as effectually shut us out of those markets and take from us the trade that we have acquired under war conditions as if they should refuse to haul our products at all to those countries?

Mr. President, I do not wish to take up any more time of the Senate upon that branch of the question.

It is said that while we need ships in our foreign trade and while we needed them before the war and need them worse now, and shall probably need them still worse after the war, it is better to do without them than for the Government to go into the shipping business, even to the limited and contingent extent provided in this bill, for fear that private capital may be driven out of the business. It is also said that, although the Government under this bill is to operate none of the vessels it may either build or buy, provided it can sell or lease them upon condition that it may reclaim them when needed for military or naval purposes, the mere possibility, remote as it may be, of Government operation will be a menace of such dangerous import that it would be better to take the chances of having our foreign commerce handicapped, if not destroyed, by the selfishness of our competitors, to whom we should have to look in that case for transportation, than to risk Government ownership and operation.

Mr. President, these suggestions are strangely inconsistent with the attitude of those who now make them with reference to certain measures relating to this subject and upon which the Senate acted in 1914, so inconsistent with what I understood to be their attitude during the last session of Congress, when we had the shipping bill up, that I must feel that the opposition on the other side to the Government purchase and operation provisions of the pending bill is either captious or that it is political.

I recall that when the bill was before us last year opposition was made to the Government operation and purchase provisions of the bill. It was strenuously opposed by a group of Democrats over here, as well as by practically the whole membership of the other side of the Chamber, upon the ground that it would put the Government into the shipping business. I can not put my finger upon any declaration of Senators upon the other side; I have not examined those debates to refresh my memory; but I have a very distinct recollection that from some of the prominent Senators on the other side, who were antagonizing this legislation upon the grounds I have named, I had repeated expressions, some in the nature of assurances—because we were trying to work out a bill that would be satisfactory to both sides—that if Government operation was limited to a reasonable period of time—five years being then named—and if a provision were inserted that would prohibit the purchase of interned vessels or vessels of belligents, because of the fear of international complications, or, as was described by the other side, the menace of war as a result of that policy, the opposition to that bill would practically subside. Now, we have in this bill done both of those things, to my mind in a very radical way, and a much more radical way than was proposed in the compromise suggestions at that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says he has not examined the debates of the last session of Congress on this subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean to refresh my mind, of course.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish the Senator would refresh his mind and produce any suggestion made by any Senator on this side of the Chamber that he would support the bill then pending even if it were so amended.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not say that any open expression was made on the floor; I said I had conferences, and I received expressions and assurances to the effect I have stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I know nothing about the Senator's private conversations.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not spoken of any particular Senator, and I shall not do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt to suggest that the hearings on that bill at that time all indicated that the principal ground of objection to the bill was the feature which provided for operating the ships by the Government? I think that appears in the hearings. So it is not necessary to rely upon conversations, for it is of record.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course the Republican Senators were not on the witness stand, and they can not be held responsible for what others may have said; but I want to say here and now to the Senator from North Carolina that the invasion of the coastwise shipping of the country, which is provided in this bill, is quite as serious a matter as Government ownership.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was about to say that we have met the objections of the group of Democrats on this side and what I consider the fundamental objections of the Senators on the other side, made at a time when we were trying to get a bill that would be satisfactory and would stop a filibuster and permit us to legislate. We have met those objections radically in this bill. We have practically made it impossible for the Government ever to operate any of these vessels, even during the three-year period, provided that private capital, in its great anxiety, as we are told, to get into the shipping business, will buy or lease ships from the Government, which they will be able to do as cheaply as they can get them built or purchase them in the open market, and probably cheaper.

We have absolutely eliminated all grounds of objection to the purchase clause. The power of purchase is so circumscribed that it does not amount to anything. So we have certainly met all the objections.

When we made those changes the group of Democratic Senators who had opposed the bill of the last session because of its Government-ownership feature, who had opposed it by reason of their staunch convictions and adherence to a policy which they thought was a wise policy, in contradistinction to a policy which they thought was not wise and which might lead to consequences which would be deprecated, having no political or captious objections, have promptly withdrawn their opposition and are now the staunch champions of this bill. Still the other side continues to oppose it.

I want to call the attention of Senators on the other side to a certain bill upon which they have voted and upon which some of them have spoken in recent years, by which they committed themselves irrevocably to the principle of Government operation, not of merchant vessels, but Government operation as merchant vessels of the vessels of the United States Navy converted into merchantmen for the specific purpose of commercial development. In that instance they based their action upon the great need, the imperative need, of our foreign commerce in the matter of deep-sea transportation caused by the neglect for 50 years of the Republican Party to make suitable provision for the rehabilitation of our merchant marine.

Mr. President, Senators will recall what is known as the Weeks resolution with respect to the use of our naval and army vessels—naval vessels, I think, chiefly—commerce carriers. That resolution was introduced April 1, 1914. It contained some very remarkable declarations, in the light of the attitude of our friends on the other side toward this question at the present time. It starts out by recalling and reciting the conditions of our foreign trade with respect to transportation and its need of help from the Government:

Whereas it is desirable to develop and extend commercial relations between the United States and the countries of South America by the establishment of direct lines of communication for carrying the United States mail and for the transportation of passengers and freight; and Whereas private capital has not engaged in this service—to a sufficient extent to furnish facilities comparable to those enjoyed by the people of other countries having trade relations with South America.

That is, in the service with South America—

The preamble of the resolution struck the root of the trouble with our trade in every neutral market of the world. Its author put his finger upon the difficulty in South America, and he sought to provide against it.

Declaring that it was desirable to develop a line of communication for mails and freight and passengers to South America, because our facilities for the accommodation of our trade with those countries were not comparable to those enjoyed by our competitors, the resolution concludes as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be prepared, in detail, a plan for the establishment of a line or lines of ships to run between ports of the United States and South America, such line or lines of ships to consist of vessels of the Navy not required for immediate military service, and which, in the opinion of the department, are best adapted for postal and commercial purposes, and that the information requested in this resolution shall include the following:

That resolution, introduced by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, passed this body without a division, and its recitals and its resolves constitute the whole case for which I am contending, so far as Government ownership and operation go.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator from North Carolina say who was the author of that resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

That resolution passed the Senate without a division. The Secretary of the Navy made his report upon the resolution, and said he had some small vessels that might be used that he did not need for naval purposes. They could not carry many passengers and they could not carry much freight, but he had them. Now, when that report came in what did the Senator from Massachusetts do? The Senator at once proceeded to introduce a bill which authorized the Secretary of the Navy—

